SPS VI looked very impressive in downing UC VI 50-20. The Engineers are a team of skyscrapers with three men over 6'4" in height, which always helps. Patterson topped the SPS scores with 12 markers with Ottaway scoring ten and Ojalo seven. Mundy hooped seven for the Redmen while Crawford sank a couple of flukes to amass six points.

In the last game of the day For B downed Knox A 52-32 as Murray meshed 19 points and McLelland 16. Winhold was Knox's best with 14.

Redmen Win In Basketball

The Senior UC basketball squad has finally started to show some of the class that won them the Sifton Cup last year. Yesterday the Redmen roared back in the third and final period to take a 28-21 decision from the Sr. SPS quintette, after the score had been tied at 17-all at the end of the middle session.

The game was close for the greater part of the game as the two teams traded basket for basket. Nefsky and Kuzmuchko sparked the UC'ers with eight and seven markers respectively. It was Kuzmuchko who led the last minute drive as all but one of his points came in that period. Austin was high man for the Skulemen with six.

HOCKEY

St. Hilda's I showed their superior conditioning yesterday when they shutout POT I 5 to 0 in a noon-hour hockey fracas at the arena. Physot coach, Don Bark, had just reorganized his team, cutting the number of forwards from seven to six, and the girls didn't seem to be able to carry the extra load.

The Trinity girls opened their their scoring streak in the first period, when Joan Stirling slipped one into the Therapists' net. In the second frame, the Saints increased the pressure on the fast-fading P and OT squad, and sank two counters to make the score 3 to 0.

The Physios tried to rally in the final stanza, but their attempts seemed only half-hearted as compared wth the fresher St. Hilda's team, and their rushes lost all their drive by the time they reached the net. The Trinity girls increased their lead when Scotty Mathews, on a pass from Joan Stirling, lifted the puck past Physot goalie, Helen Boston. Molly Bark got a break-away on a pass from POT linemate, Mary Lou Lyons, but couldn't make it count. Ann Lawson poked the fifth Trinity goal home to end the game.

Joan Stirling was top scorer for the St. Hilda's team with two goals and one assist. Heather Macpherson also turned in a good performance on the forward line, while defence Mary Williamson helped goalie Elsie Bongard in recording a shutout. Breta Frederickson, Molly Bark and Mary Lou Lyons fought hard for the Physots. Margot Finlay was outstanding on defence.

VOLLEYBALL

On the volleyball court at the Lillian Massey gym last night Vic II's outplayed St. Hilda's for a 59-42 win. Once, at the beginning of the second half, the Saints threatened to overtake Vic's 33-17 halftime lead, but Vic quickly got back on their feet and held the upper hand for the rest of the game.

The Vic girls, whose serving was their strong point, played a good defensive game. The steady playing of Barbara Browne and excellent spiking by Joan Morrow and Joyce Gaudie helped to spark them on to victory.

St. Hilda's had trouble keeping away from the net and the Vicsters thus gained a good many extra points. Jane Gray, for the Saints, played well from her strategic centre position. Ann Pepall was also outstanding.

Assumption Coll To Tackle Varsity

The first of several basketball doubleheaders at the Mutual St. Arena will take place tonight with Varsity taking on Assumption and the Jay Vees meeting the Tri-Bells at 7:30. The Big Blues seem to have hit their stride against Intercollegiate competition after losing consistently in exhibition games against American teams. Assumption is located in the border town of Windsor, and has also had the advantage of playing teams from across the line. Assumption beat the Blues 70-63 early this season in the only meeting of the two squads.

If Varsity was badly weakened by the loss of centre Bud Natanson, they cetainly didn't show it over last week-end as Ray Monnot was more than adequate. Monnot piled up 43 points in two games, which is pretty good in any league. Lukenda, Huyke, and Fawcett have been going well with the former runner-up in scoring last week with 31 points.

The Blues were without Natanson, they certainly didn't show it Assumption, and Monnot and Lukenda were both hampered by injuries so the seven points loss isn't too revealing as to the comparative strength of the teams. Varsity scored four more field goals than Assumption but were woefully weak in foul shots, as they made good on only 9 out of 26 while their opponents dropped in 24 out of 35 free throws. Lukenda topped the Blue sharpshooters in that one as he hooped 16 points

The Mutual gym has a large floor that is much better for a wide-open, high-scoring type of play than the cramped quarters of Hart House. There is no shortage of seats as the Arena will hold about 3,000 spectators. Tickets for the double-header can be obtained at the Athletic Office in Hart House for 50 cents, while a ducat bought at the Arena will cost one dollar. All seats are reserved. The second game will start at nine o'clock.

Blue Orphuns Play Tri-Bells In Early Tilt

Varsity Orphuns hook up with their toughest opposition in league play as they square off with the Nortown Tri-Bells at Mutual Arena. The game gets underway at seven-thirty and a large block of Varsity fans should be on hand.

In their first meeting with the powerful Tri-Bells the Orphuns lost 67-60. The game was a runaway until the closing minutes when Toronto, sparked by George Stulac closed the gap. Stulac scored 21 points during the contest. Stulac will be playing tonight accompanied by such top-notch players as Leo Madden, Jim Russell, Bill Cocoran, and Jack Garbut.

Tri-bells are expected to have all their players on hand for the game. Led by Max Grossman who hooped 21 in the first encounter, the Bells should provide a stumbling block to the JV's hopes of first place. Jack Gray, Paul Thomas, Umie Cooper, Sharpy Litvas and John Braithewaite will all be playing.

A win for the Orphuns would put them on the leader's tail. Varsity has lost two games to date; so if they down the undefeated leaders they will be within two points of the top rung. This is the first of the games scheduled for the big Mutual gym and tomorrow night will mark the Orphuns initial look at the floor.

SPORTS PROFILE

Ray Monnot

If practice makes perfect, there should be at least one man on the Blue basketball team who will come as close to perfection as anyone in this country ever does in basketball. Ray Monnot, who has scored 43 points in the last two games as first-string centre after taking over from the retired Bud Natanson, has through dint of constant practice made the jump from high school ball to top ranking in Senior Intercollegiate in his first year.

He played four years of basketball at Etobicoke, though as a point-getter he never approached his 23-point effort of last Friday while in high school. Last spring after the basketball season, he was playing every day in the Hart House gym, even before he decided to go to Varsity. He played throughout the summer, and spent most of the fall in the gym with a basketball.

When the team started working out last November, Monnot was just another of the many good high school stars out to make positions on the team. Accustomed to using a hook shot almost exclusively in high school, he found himself getting tied up pretty thoroughly playing with bigger men. In his first few games he almost invariably got two or three fouls against him as soon as he went on the floor.

Now, Ray is the only regular on the team who is a first-year man. A real fighter on rebounds, he is able to take the rough stuff under the backboards in spite of the fact that only about 170 pounds are distributed over his 6'6" frame. His teammates consider him about the hardest worker among them.

RAY MONNOT

He soon found he would have to abandon his hook shot, at least in small gyms like Hart House, where he hasn't room to reach out to make the hook. He learned from Bud Natanson the jump-and-push shot which Natanson used so much last year, and which Ray uses almost exclusively now.

He is enrolled in Engineering Business. Though approached by Western with a tentative offer to go to that college, he decided on Varsity, mainly because he had always wanted to take Engineering and Western has no Engineering courses. Although he is an American by birth—he was born in Pittsburgh—he never considered attending University in the States.

Like Natanson, he has all the usual troubles of the tall man. He has all his suits made to order. However, he claims he doesn't need a special sized bed. He says he has developed a method of sleeping cross-ways in beds of normal size.

Of the 105 points he has scored this season, over half have been pumped in in the last four games—64 to be exact. In all respects he will inevitably be compared with Natanson. But if his improvement continues to be as steady as it has been, the comparison will certainly not make him look bad.

Ideological Conflict Between East-West Will Affect Future

What does democracy stand for? Can it combat the economic appeal of Communism? Can the United Nations serve the interests of Democracy? These are some of the questions Professor John A. Irving discussed in a talk yesterday on "The Ideological Interests of Democracy". Professor Irving is professor of Ethics and Social Philosophy at Victoria.

The theme of this lecture grew out of Professor Irving's work with the Canadian Institute of International Affairs. At the Annual Conference held in Montreal last June he served as chairman of the political round table.

"While the conflict between the U.S.S.R. and the Western world is unquestionably a game of power politics," Professor Irving continued, "it is equally an ideological conflict of profound significance for the future of civilization," he said. "In fact ideology is the principal, and in many respects the only, weapon which the Soviet Union has relied on in its struggle with the West."

The speaker emphasized the powerful appeal of Communism in democratic countries. "In adopting Communism as its official creed, Russia has provided herself with an ideological weapon that was forged in the very heart of Western civilization, a weapon that can be tossed back into that civilization as a universal solvent," he said.

"Is democracy strong enough ideologically to ensure its permanence in such hard-pressed countries as Greece, Italy, France, and West Germany?" he asked. He considered the ideological interests of democracy as divided into four categories: moral, economic, political, military and strategic.

"Their essential moral difference can only be appreciated in terms of the Communist doctrine of the class struggle," Professor Irving said. He explained that democracy emphasizes first the idea of freedom . . . and individual responsibility, and, second, the idea of equality as the core of social justice.

According to Professor Irving, the principal challenge of Communism consists in its emphasis upon the increased material welfare of the less fortunate part of humanity. "Apart from solving the economic problems raised by defence and rearmament, the West must formulate just policies for the distribution and control of critical raw materials . . . and must either feed or fight the impoverished and hungry millions of Europe and Asia," he said.

The speaker pointed out that if communism derives its strength from economic appeal, greater strength can also be derived from the political appeal of democracy. "Throughout the West there is an increasing realization that political freedom would perish under universal totalitarianism," he said.

Outlining the military problems of the West, Professor Irving said we must strengthen the democracies, so that Russia will be afraid to risk war. "But," he added, "what shall it profit the democracies if they gain Spain's naval and air bases and loose the world-wide battle for the minds of men?"

Chiropraxis

Spine-Straighteners

"Chiropractic is a science, art, and philosophy of locating correcting interference with nerve transmission and expression, without the use of drugs or surgery." This is the guiding principle during the four-year diploma course in Chiropractic at the Canadian Memorial Chiropractic College on Bloor Street. For nine months of the year approximately 200 students concentrate on subjects ranging from anatomy and chemistry to X-ray technique and psychology.

The school was opened in 1945. Since it is the only school of its type in the British Commonwealth, the students are an extremely cosmopolitan group, coming from Sweden, Denmark, Switzerland and even British West Africa. The college operates a cafeteria in the basement, for the convenience of the students, and there is a men's dormitory on the fourth floor, for the fortunate few who have reached the top of the waiting list.

The college is composed of two brick buildings—the original includes administrative offices, the clinic, and the library. The new $250,000 addition houses the auditorium, class-rooms and laboratories. These laboratories are equipped with all the appliances necessary for thirty-six students working at a time. The X-ray laboratory, costing $16,000 to install, is one of the best of its kind in Canada.

The clinic is operated by the 4th year students under the direction of Dr. Muller, the Dean of the College. Each patient is assigned to a student, who continues the treatment for so long as the patient requires it. X-ray records are kept on the improvement in the patient. Some of these show an almost unbelievable change, from spines which were S-shaped and worse, to perfectly straight ones. All this is carried out by spinal manipulation, in a series of little booths in the clinic, each equipped with an odd-looking sectional leather couch.

Males outnumber females in the ratio of 25 to 1 in the school, and yet the instructors report that the girls do very well in their studies. The top graduate in last year's class was a member of the so-called weaker sex.

Graduates of the school usually set up a practice of their own, but a few have obtained positions on hospital staffs. Chiropractic has gained wider recognition in the last few years, because of its fine record of cures, especially in cases of polio.

To sum up the situation in chiropractic, the first verse of F. M. Park's "Ars Chiropractica" in the latest issue of the "Undergrad" may be quoted:

"Though in matters chiropractic
One should not be didactic
May I stress the keystone of our Healing Creed,
That all illnesses are spinal,
That is basic, that is final,
If the spine is there, there chiropractic need."

Meds Studies Too Specialized Need More Premedical Years

(Reprinted from The Manitoban)

The doctor of today—a professional man, or woman as the case may be—is considered an educated being. He is educated so well in one particular field of endeavor that often he may have only a smattering of the knowledge an "educated" person is said to possess. A man with a B.A. degree may not be able to use his achievement to earn a living but by present-day standards he is educated.

This lack of intellectual enlightenment does not apply to the physician who has practised for some years as much as to the medical student or recently-graduated M.D. The student and intern are so imbued with their work that for the main part their thoughts are associated with medicine. They think in terms of medicine, which is only natural when you consider the number of hours for five years in which they hear nothing but anatomy, physiology, pathology, surgery, obstetrics, etc. By the time the doctor has graduated and begun his practice the only history he may know is the case history of Miss X or Mr. Y, and the only branch of economics known to him is the filling-out of an income tax return.

In his pre-graduate studies the doctor will meet such allies of his profession as health government and law (forensic medicine), but always in some connection with his work. (He may also meet nurses, but that is after hours.) If the time can be found between studies much can be learned by going a bit farther than what he is taught of government and law. Careful reading of newspapers is educational; it keeps one informed on current events, politics, the arts, science, and government and law. A doctor does not have to be an authority on all of these subjects but he can and should acquire a working knowledge of some, if not all, of them. This knowledge he must gain himself.

Much of a doctor's education comes after he has graduated. From contact with his patients, who will probably come from all walks of life, he will develop tolerance, mercy, patience and a sympathetic understanding. These necessary attainments will develop over a period but they can be acquired more easily and with more appreciation if the doctor is acquainted with such subjects as sociology, psychology, literature, history and economics as well as the required scientific subjects. A student who took a general Arts course and then entered Medicine would have the ideal makings of a good doctor, being both generally educated and educated for his profession.

The extra year or years of pre-medical work would of course be an added expense and would mean that the doctor would be 26 or 27 instead of 24 or 25 when he graduated. In the long run, the extra year or years would be more beneficial than detrimental. I think that the University of Manitoba has done well in adding a third year to the pre-medical course, which, while incurring more time, work and money than previously, will help the doctor-to-be appreciate and be more cognizant of those ideals which are a part of the makings of a good doctor.

The added pre-medical subjects are naturally ideal but I think if you asked any medical student what his opinion of them was, he would say (myself included), "They will have to wait until later. Right now I want to be a doctor."

Squabble Over Fees

Winnipeg (CUP)—The University of Manitoba Student Union may have to withdraw from the National Federation of Canadian Students if it cannot pay the full required 20-cent-per-student fee. The UMSU council decided in November to cut the NFCUS fee to 10 cents because of budgetary difficulties, but if finances permitted at the year's end, the full amount would be sent.

Jean de Margerie, NFCUS president, sent a letter to Bill Norrie, UMSU president, saying "We cannot grant you the right to determine your students' contribution to NFCUS", and suggesting that if the council remained firm in its decision to send only the 10 cent fee, to make up the difference by subscription or by some other means. The UMSU council meeting in February will probably decide Manitoba's stand on the matter.

Bloody Anti-Freeze

—Cartoon by Hugh Niblock

By Jingo

Let us abandon our usual cynicism for a mild idealism. Let us say that the Second World War was fought so that all nations, though differing in form of government and color of skin, might live together united in a common effort for the economic advantage of all. Where do we stand today?

Three Orientals enclosed in a rectangle form the new symbol for an autonomy campaign in Asia and Asia Minor. The symbol is a clever one—some insidious influences suggest it may even be Communist inspired! But it impresses vividly on Asia's thousands of illiterates the current movement sloganzed as "Asia for the Asians".

The movement is observed with alarm and indignation by non-Asians. But it has one solid advantage: the end of centuries-long exploitation of Eastern countries by Europeans and Americans.

For to exploitation we might as well admit. It is now recognized that one part of the world has gone into the other with the deliberate intention of getting all it can out of it. Now and then an individual has appeared wth a benevolent way about him, and genuine good has been done to the poor benighted savage. But generally the pattern has been to get what you can and give nothing in return.

Eventually, when the exploiter relaxes and allows the exploited to gain a little strength, retaliation breaks out. A brief look at where exploitation has left the peoples and resources of Egypt, Iran and India will show that the Asia-for-Asianers have a point in their case. And a look at their retaliation attempts will show what they are willing to do to convince us of that case.

But Asia for the Asians is not an unmixed blessing. If effected, it will make the work of the United Nations a farce and the idea of a United World, far-fetched as it appears at this point, a pure pipe dream.

In this respect, are our own hands clean? Do those indignant at the idea of keeping whites out of Asia violate, in other directions, the ideals which they shout so loudly about in the Near East question?

Australia, despite the coal black color of its aborigines, closes its doors to all whose skins are not as white as the king of England's. The Afrikaner Broederbond tries desperately to keep South Africa "'white" by a carefully planned segregating and insulting campaign. Our hands, then, are not clean.

So the Asians, some of them at least, want Asia for themselves. What about the Canadians?

About Asia they may or may not care. About Canada, they have intense feelings—a pride lie that of a father when he hears his wife is to bear him a child, and a fear lest the big bullies will hurt his little one when the fun in the playground gets rough.

If Canada is to be reserved for the Canadians, then let us not shout about those who would keep Asia for the Asians. Or is this approach too rational? A sudden immigration would admittedly send Canada floundering under a deluge she could not support. A balloon has an elastic capacity, but if filled too much and too suddenly, it will burst.

But Canada's full-blooming nationalism has other aspects. For the declared purpose of maintaining our national integrity, we have (with admirable political caution, it is true) appointed a Canadian Governor General. With a kind of gleeful abandon we have struck the word "Dominion" out of our country's name and "Royal" from the name of our mail service.

In the 1930's, it was thought not improbable that Asia might some day be fighting against the rest of the world for political supremacy. To see Russia fighting side by side with America and Britain against a common enemy today would be an all but unbearable irony.

A Defence

Divine Revelation

The following is the third in a series of articles on Christianity in which the author, Stephen Somerville, III St. Mike's, shows that the witness of history upholds divine revelation.

The moral sense and religious instinct in human nature incline us to fear and worship God as our Master and Judge. Yet what even a Plato or Aristotle could know of God by natural reason is insufficient for our needs and the majority of mankind are incapable of acquiring the knowledge of God by metaphysical inquiry. Hence the intrinsic probability that God would make known religious and moral truths by supernatural revelation. There are innumerable religions in the world and there are some few, like Christianity, Buddhism and Mohammedanism, which by their long duration and wide extent are specially entitled to consideration.

The arguments for Christianity being the true religion revealed by God, as compared with other religions, are overwhelming. Christianity is the heir and fulfillment of Judaism, which was unique among pre-Christian religions for its monotheism and higher morality. The dispersion and survival of the Jewish race today are both fulfilments of Biblical prophecy. The coming of Christ and His rejection by His own people are likewise fulfilments of prophecy.

The religion of Christ has extended and prevailed in the world as He himself prophesied. The fulfilment is not yet complete because it must continue through all time. Christianity never promised its own complete success: it predicted persecutions, divisions, apostasies, scandals, never-ending opposition. Yet it promised that it would even endure and be preached to all nations and that it would bring incomparable blessings to mankind.

The reign of Christ to-day, as for nineteen centuries, is not paralleled by any other event in history. Christ is a power in the hearts of living men, women and children. He is preached with confidence and conviction and love in the University of Toronto as He was preached by St. Paul in Athens and by the medieval priests who founded the colleges of Oxford and Cambridge. Young men and women go from Toronto today, some of them from the University of Toronto, to spend their lives preaching Him among the Eskimos of the Arctic and the Hottentots of the African jungle. In the most brilliant days of French power and culture missionaries came from France to preach to the savages in Canada, knowing that a probable end of their career was death by torture.

Christianity has been established chiefly in those parts of the world where there has been the highest civilization, the greatest progress, the greatest liberty, the greatest intellectual activity, the noblest art and music, the most constant striving for social justice, the highest ideals of the dignity of man.

Christianity began as what was regarded as a fanatical sect in a despised province of the Roman Empire. Its first converts were among the poor and ignorant. As soon as it became noticeable the powers of the Roman Empire were used to their utmost to stamp it out. Besides the persecutions there have always been intellectual attacks in the name of philosophy science, Biblical criticism and social progress. There have always been Huxleys and Voltaires and Bertrand Russells. But on the Christian side there have always been Newtons, Pasteurs and Newmans. The most brilliant intellects have made their acts of Christian faith.

Have you ever heard it said that one knows an artist through his art? I've heard it said three or four times and so I went down to the Art Gallery to interview Grandma Moses.

I went right up to the first painting and asked her a question: "Grandma Moses, would you tell me your secret?" Her voice, all sweetness and light whispered a reply, "I paint, son, like an eight-year-old." "Oh no, Grandma Moses, you paint like a six-year-old, you really do! !" I insisted. "Oh you're just saying that, you charming little fellow."

I got a little embarrassed at this and so I went on to the next painting. "I read a review of your work," I said, "that particularly praised you because your trees were green and your snow was white. How was that?" "Well, if you must know, sonny, I'm color-blind, and so I just read the labels on the tubes and put the color straight on without blending."

I hurried on to the next painting. "I noticed that you never use perspective in your paintings, Grandma Moses," I said, "and your horses . . . your horses are sweet, they hardly look at all like horses. If you weren't so famous, I'd almost think you couldn't draw!" "That's just my naive way of doing things", she answered, with an old-lady chuckle. "Perhaps you paint with your soul and not with your hands," I said.

"Where did you begin to paint?" I asked. "Well, son, you might not recognize the style, but my very first painting was a portrait. Do you know the waiter on the label of Cincinnati Cream?" she replied. "Oh, my!" I grasped. "Grandma Moses! You're not a sweet old lady at all!"

"Aw, shaddup!" she belched. "Shut off that snivelling. If it wasn't for these damn publicity stunts, I wouldn't never of come to this town. Me studio told me ta enter this fool art contest for the UC Undergrad. So I enter, so they say ta me, 'Wot's your soodanum?' 'Me wot?' I hollers. 'Yer mean me pen-pal name? Well, it's Granmer Moses!' Well, it seems they never had a rule to cover a soodnum for a soodnum, so I'm tossed out on me fat fanny."

"Do you mean to say that Grandma Moses isn't your real name?" I asked, my dreams shattered.

"Wot yer take me for? Me name's Maisie Armstrong, an' yer know wot? Me paintin' looks like an eight-year-old kid's because an eight-year-old kid does 'em. Yeah, me landlady's little brat. An' yer want ta know wot's more? This here tub the Flyin' Enterprise is a publicity stunt, too. Yer see, it's for me new movie, the excitin' screen biography of a song-writer. I'm the sweet old lady who sits home paintin' an' waitin' for me seafarin' husband, Kurt Carlsen 'a come home. Well, there's a storm see, an' he gits shipwrecked an' he sorta goes off his looney kinda. When he gits home, he's a blubberin' idiot, but me, I'm no fool, I write down everythin' he blubbers and I sell it ta a singer. This here singer makes a record of our two songs, Malrxy Doats an' Bibbidy-Bobbidy-Boo, an' me an' the captain make a million bucks which just goes ta prove that virtue has its own reward."

I ran out of that art gallery just as fast as every my little legs would go.

A Musical Attack

Editor, The Varsity:

Fear once more the united wrath of the small but mighty Faculty of Music! The Varsity has referred once again to a "School of Music" that does not exist!

Within the Faculty of Music there is a course called "School Music" for high school music teachers, as opposed to the "General Music" course for professional musicians; neither having any relation to the Arts course "Honour Music".

Ye reporters, editors, linotypers, proofreader, etc., take note of the article on the band concert in Thursday's Varsity. Never underestimate the power of a faculty that, though consisting of only about 100 students, can come third in a campus-wide competition to raise money!

Imagine the sight of the one hundred musicians advancing upon you wielding rapier-like batons and brandishing huge serpentines, hecklephones, saxophones, sousaphones, and sarrusphones, and beware.

INEQUALITY UNSETTLED IN LAW CONTROVERSY

Paul Duval, art critic for Saturday Night, gave a critical discussion on the paintings of John S. Walsh ,yesterday in the Hart House Art Gallery, depicting city scenes from Montreal, New York and Paris. Walsh is English born, a graduate of London Art School, and has spent a number of years painting industry and city life in bold water colours. Here we see Duval as he gave his talk to the art group where Walsh's work has been on display for the last week. The showing will end this Sunday. Hart House makes a consistent effort to give the students of the University of Toronto the best in art shows, and to make it even more complete, the board of stewards ruled that women would be allowed down to the gallery every Wednesday afternoon. The next showing in Hart House will be paintings by New Canadians—106 paintings in all.

The controversy between the University of Toronto and Osgoode Hall is reported to have been settled by Dean C. E. Smalley-Baker of Osgoode Hall, but Dean Cecil Wright of the University Law School said yesterday that the University is still seeking to have the inequality between the two schools removed.

A graduate of the University Law School, according to Dean Wright, who entered the school with a university degree is still required to spend one more year at Osgoode before being called to the bar, which means he spends 3 years at University instead of 2 years at Osgoode.. He said that it is that inequality which President Smith has called attention to in his report and it is that inequality which the Law School and the President want to see removed.

When President Smith's annual report came out Monday, Dean Smalley-Baker of Osgoode told one of the downtown papers that he had not read the President's Report which stated that "nothing has happened during the year under review that would indicate a solution to the problem. . . . The case of the University must not be lost by mere fault in pressing our claims." Dean Smalley-Baker said that the problem was settled nearly three years ago "by mutual agreement between the University and Osgoode Hall".

The University does not question the right of the Law Society of Upper Canada to regulate admission to the Bar, President Smith said in his report. He added that "It is a mere statement of fact to declare that the University of Toronto has now the strongest staff for teaching and research ever assembled in any Canadian law school."

Dean Wright said the university particularly does not feel that a graduate of the University Law School should have to do any further academic work.

He will speak at the next open meeting of the University College Lit on "Legal education in Ontario."

The Law School is in the peculiar state of being fully recognized by the governing bodies of the legal profession in the other common law provinces and not being fully recognized in Ontario.

Admission to the Bar in Ontario can be accomplished in several ways. A student can work in a law office for two years and then go to Osgoode for four years before being called to the Bar by the Benchers, or he can take four years at Osgoode after a university degree.

If he chooses to go to the University Law School he would need a degree or two years in an honor course before being admitted to the Law School. He than would study for three years at the University followed by two more years at Osgoode. However if he enters the Law School before getting a degree, it is doubtful whether he would be admitted to Osgoode even with an LLB. Going back to University for a BA would not solve the problem as the Benchers of the Law Society specify that the degree should be obtained before entering the Law School. Therefore after getting his BA and his LLB, the student would have to enter first year Osgoode.

The four years at Osgoode are not all spent in classrooms. The third year and half of the fourth year are taken up by the time the student spends under articles. This means that a student at the University Law School spends three years in academic work whereas in the four years at Osgoode the student only completes two and a half years on academic work.

The University and the Law School are not seeking to have the year spent under articles to a lawyer abolished, but would like to see the Benchers (roughly corresponding to an executive) of the Law Society of Upper Canada remove the year inequality between the two law schools.

Husbands Come Into Own As Ticket Regs Broadened

University students, who are married, will be able to take their wives to the rugby games next year on student tickets, according to Paul Forestell, SAC representative on the Athletic Directorate. Forestell told the Students' Administrative Council last night that the student coupon books included wives for some of the rugby games this year and would be available for all games in the coming season. Previously only ex-service students could purchase student tickets for their wives. Wives will be able to get coupon books for their husbands, he added.

Forestell reported that the Athletic Association is in a sound financial state, although he added that there is "quite a debt on the stadium". The possibility of televising all Varsity games is being investigated, he said, as the directorate has been approached by three different groups who are interested in television rights. Forestell said that before any deal was made, there would have to be a guarantee of a full stadium every Saturday.

The rugby season will start one week earlier next year, Oct. 4th, instead of the 11th, but he could not tell the council what dates the rugby games would play on as a schedule has not yet been received from the Intercollegiate League.

The Athletic directorate are studying a new constitution (the first major revision since 1929) according to Forestell. He said that it was felt that student representation on the Direcorate could be readjused and he specifically mentioned the Intramural committee.

New refrigeration pipes are needed in the arena, Forestell told the council, and that this necessitated a loan from the Board of Governors. He said that the pipes had already lasted five years more than their expected life.

In reply to a question by Finance Commissioner Bud Trivett, Forestell said that all profits on the Student Help for Asian Relief and Education campaign skating party had been turned over to the SHARE committee.

The number of free practice hours in Varsity arena for interfaculty teams has been increased from three per team to six. Forestell said that for St. Mike's this meant a saving of over $67 for three teams.

VIVISECTIONISTS

Drill Dodgers

One section of the impressive Dental Creed is " . . . to cultivate the science and art of the profession by study, by research, and by self-sacrificing devotion to duty." The training designed to meet this aim is a long and rigorous one.

Dentistry students must have two years of arts and sciences before they enter the course proper, and then the first two years in dentistry are spent at the medical school.

The third and fourth years have the emphasis on clinical practice, culminating in the coveted degree of D.D.S., Doctor of Dental Surgery.

Research is becoming more and more important, with projects in progress at the Hospital for Sick Children and in the Dentistry Building—but not to discover new materials for fillings. These days research concentrates on the fundamental fields of bacteriology and pathology, and on the relationship between bodily illness and dental disease.

Dean Ellis of the Dental Faculty is particularly proud of the well-equipped library. A large glass show-case contains an amazing array of dentures, dating back for many years. They are made of all sorts of materials—gold, ivory, bone, porcelain, and even glass. One of the most interesting specimens is an aluminum denture made by a farmer from his wife's dipper! A formidable exhibit of early dental instruments, as well as the teeth of elephants, bears and dinosaurs, are included in the museum.

An X-ray is taken of each patient's teeth as soon as he comes into the clinic, and from this the final year students learn oral diagnosis. A special department which is equipped with two X-ray machines, a processing room, and a cephalometer, is situated on the clinic floor. The cephalometer takes X-rays of the patient's whole skull in a certain fixed position, so that X-rays over several years are always exactly alike as to position, and any changes are clearly recognizable. This machine is used mostly in the study of orthodontics, or dento-facial deformities.

Dentistry is aiming at its own extinction. Prevention, not replacement, is their purpose. By educating the public to seek dental attention while young, dentists will be able to correct faulty development before it is too late. The new crop of dentists being turned out by the Dental Faculty insist they hate extraction even more than the unfortunate patient does.

Calif Helping Indonesia U

Berkeley, Californio, (Exchange) —Students at the University of California have started a project to aid the University of Indonesia, after two years of planning and investigation, into possible concrete ways that California students can begin to develop a long-range friendship with Indonesian students.

Included in the programs are an educational exchange of students between California and Indonesia, a publications exchange, possible extension of the Indonesian curriculum at California, and a fund drive, as well as sending of World Student Service Fund money to Indonesia to help establish California - sponsored student health centres.

Aid Men Lack Info Re Returns

How much money has SHARE received to date? No one seems to know, including the Campaign's Chairman and Treasurer. But at its meeting last night the Students' Council asked those officials for an immediate statement of receipts.

"We have asked SHARE officers for this information every day, since the campaign closed, without luck," said Varsity Editor Barb Browne. It is already more than a week since the campaign ended, she added.

The Council office, which is handling all SHARE money, said Monday night they had received over $4,500. "However, this figure is not complete by any means," they added, "since many canvassers have not yet brought in their money."

Contacted last night, Chairman Tim Armstrong, II Vic, refused to give any information regarding receipts.

The campaign treasurer, Ron Turner, III SPS, also refused to say anything, and would not verify the $4,500 figure.

It had been expected the SHARE receipts would be read at the Council meeting last night as part of the report of the External Affairs Committee. However, EAC Chairman, Graeme Ferguson, IV Vic, was not present at the meeting.

Armstrong said last night he would report on receipts to the next meeting of the EAC, next Tuesday

SAC at a Glance

Besides discussing the Athletic Commissioner's Report on the Athletic Directorate and the ISO Ball, the Students' Administrative Council last night:

—expressed regret that secretary-treasurer E. A. MacDonald had missed his first council meeting since he started the job. MacDonald had a high temperature and was stopped by his doctor from attending.

—heard that University College, Skule and Victoria College had fallen behind in their Torontonensis sales. Torontonensis sales position was described as serious by commissioner Bud Trivett and Engineering Society president, Doug Sherk, who said a sales campaign was being started.

—authorized the Physical and Occupational Therapy "girls" to make a serge University flag which the Hart House Glee Club could take to Rochester when they visit the University. Rochester had requested that Toronto send a university flag for decoration but the only one available belonged to the Athletic Association and was handmade. The flag, according to Finance Commissioner Bud Trivett will be useful for dressing tables, hanging on the sides of buses, welcoming committees, taking to trains, and hanging from poles or on walls. It will have the "UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO" in large letters and a small University crest.

—authorized the Victoria College Glee Club to represent the University at a glee club festival after being told by the Music Committee that St. Mike's, UC, and other glee clubs were not interested in entering. The Vic club was granted one hundred dollars to pay for the festival.

—heard Charles Hanley, III UC ask if the All-Varsity Mixed Chorus was not in a condition to represent the University at the Glee Club festival. The Music Committee replied that this is not the type of music that the chorus sings and that it had been proposed that a University Glee Club be set up.

—heard Co-ordinating Committee chairman Charles Hanley say that he had received six or seven replies to a letter sent to the faculties and colleges and those who answered had "expressed a willingness to co-ordinate".

—listened while Paul Forestell, IV St. Mike's, asked if all faculties could submit the dates of their At-Homes. Forestell said that the St. Michael's Centennial At-Home, the Grad Studies Bachelor's Ball, the Trinity Conversazione, and the UC Arts Ball were all held last Friday night and he could not go to them all.

Toronto — Collection of tree seed to be used in 1956 is already under way by the Ontario Department of Lands and Forests. Reforestation programs must be anticipated by about five years, it was pointed out, since seed years occur only in occasional years and some seed years are not as good as others. Planting the seeds in the nursery, growing little trees, transplanting them so that the root system becomes strong and then distributing them to the ultimate planters requires time.

Inaugurate UN Model At Varsity

Groups of students varying from three to seven in size have been organized for eight out of the eleven countries which are to be represented in the United Nations Club Model Security Council, it was announced yesterday. The Model Security Council will be held on the twelfth of February.

Miss Penny Ketchum, III St. Hilda's, Secretary of the club said yesterday that the countries which had been chosen included Egypt, Israel, United Kingdom, Russia, France, Canada, U.S.A. and India. The foreign policy of these countries in respect of the situation in the near east will be studied today in a meeting of the U.N. Club in University College Women's Union at 79 St. George St. The meeting will begin at 4.10 p.m. when the study groups will each outline their problem as seen by that country.

The attitude of Islamic countries will be outlined by Mr. Constantine Canoun, Grad Studies. Mr. Canoun is a native of Lebanon and a graduate of the University of Beirut in that country. He is at present taking his Master's decree in geography at the University of Toronto. Mr. Canoun will speak to the entire group at five o'clock and following his remarks he has consented to answer questions from the floor.

Trial and Pinafore

The Victoria College Music Club's production of "Trial By Jury" and "HMS Pinafore" was as sorely troubled by first night jitters as any show I have ever seen. I came to this conclusion after sitting through an almost painful performance of "Trial" followed by one of 'Pinafore" that got steadily better and better.

I don't intend to dwell on faulth that were obviously due to nervousness. Such things as breathlessness (almost everybody), hurrying (ditto), singing sharp (in particular the leading lady in "Pinafore") — such things cure themselves, and weekend audiences won't be bothered by them.

Other things cured themselves even as the first show was in progress. The acting of the chorus, stiff and embarrassed in "Trial", limbered up consnderably in "Pinafore." Among the principals, Warren Hughes as court usher was an aimlessly-failing, epileptic-looking twpe; in "Pinafore" he turned up as a truly sophisticated Sir Joseph, with a careful economy of gesture.

One of the points I thought I would speciall remember about this show was the set for "Pinafore"—bright, gay, and with a little extra touch in itself: the brass bell, put to very amusmg use.

Some of the little dance routines were also really funny, such as the one in "Never Mind the Why and Wherefore", but others seemed to be left almost to chance, and looked accordingly disorganized. I was a little annoyed, too, at the allemand-left affair which turned up a number of times. Surely they could have thought of something a little less stereotyped.

The singing, for the most part was an agreeable surprise. The professional orchestra was also a decided asset to the performance. It is a pity that 'Pinafore" can for only one big soprano role. I should have liked to hear Dorothy MacTavish again; she showed herself a real musician as Angelina in "Trial."

All the principals in "Pinafore" with possibly one exception, were vocally very competent. Outstanding, however, were Bob Cowden as Dick Deadeye, and Marilyn Paul as Josephine. The former need scarcely improve; the latter certainly will with a little more confidence.

The one really severe word which must be said concerns the tempi. The Vic Music Club has in Godfrey Rideout a meticulous and hard-working conductor, whose beat was nothing if not clear. The least the performers could do is to look at him once in a while. As it was, the rhythm sometimes threatened to fall apart entirely, though this became less frequent as the show wore on.

Video Is Only Visual Aid As Canada Sees Error, Charges Hurled At Radio

Plunging neck-lines, hammed- sports events and chronic eye- ain were among the charges ed across the radio round table Tuesday night's session of "Of nds and Men" — the U. of T. dio discussion program.

rof. D. C. Williams led the er three members of the panel the discussion of "Television— n's Worst Enemy" by stating we already lead a visual life our culture—movies, spectator rts—and I fear that television ust another step down this line. en you sit and look at a TV een, it is not very conducive to p thought".

l Strauss, IV UC, claimed that all-round good entertainment en by TV, ranging from good rts events to the State of the ion address far outweighed any the smaller faults of video. He felt the CBC had done a good ng in restraining TV develop- t in Canada until we had seen good lessons from what has gone wrong with the American style of presentation.

Eli Rubin, Grad Studies, said that Man created television—not television man, and with the creation comes the control. He pointed out some of the "excellent work" which television is doing in the educational fields.

"Culture is being poured from a standard mould", said C. M. Godfrey, III Meds., as he deplored the "stifling uniformity of thought and deed in a society which draws all its ideas from a twenty-inch screen."

All members of the panel agreed with Professor Williams when he stated that television had done and could do good work in the educational field. "But," warned the Psychology Professor, "let us not forget that it is only a visual aid to education, not the whole of education or anything larger than education." He said he was painfully reminded of Orwell's "1984", when he considered some of the implications of this mass communication medium.

The discussion was the second of a series of ten which have been scheduled by the Radio Committee of the SAC. The moderator was Harry Rasky, CKEY news editor.

MUSH

In some cases, trappers who are working as far as 150 miles from railway lines drive their dog teams to the line, "park" them for a week and entrain for Toronto. In even more isolated cases, delegates are picked up by aircraft of the Division of Air Services on their actual trapping lines.

SAC Will Absorb International Ball's Losses As Loan

The Students' Administrative Council decided at its meeting last night to absorb the $56.50 loss suffered by the International Ball, held in Hart House early last month.

The dance is organized by the International Students Organization (ISO), but in recent years has been sponsored by the SAC. Hart House officials felt that since the Council had sponsored the Ball, they were liable for its debts, Finance Commissioner Trivett explained.

The Associate Secretary-Treasurer, Miss Parkes, explained that the Council sponsored the International Ball in order to obtain the use of Hart House. Campus clubs cannot hold dances in the House.

"We are putting the $56.50 into accounts receivable," explained Trivett. "That means it is just a loan. There is a reasonable expectancy we will get it back next year," he added.

He felt the loss this year was due mainly to injudicious use of complimentary tickets, and that if this were corrected next year the Ball would make money. Last year the dance paid back $100 of money advanced, he added.

The Council requested that ISO present a financial account for the Ball. Trivett also suggested that should the Council sponsor the Ball next year, an SAC representative should sit on the planning committee.

Miss Parkes explained that the Council had tried to help ISO in recent years because it was one organization on the campus which had no outside backing from alumni or other groups. Most of its members are not Canadian-born, she said.

"Three years ago the Council recommended that future Councils sponsor the International Ball," she added. It is the only such organization which the Council has sponsored.

ISO is an organization devoted to two purposes: to help integrate foreign students into the University and its environments, and to serve as a common meeting ground for both native and foreign students.

Chief Explains Rain Makers' New Methods

Mark Twain once said that everybody is always complaining about the weather and no one ever does anything about it. A speaker coming to the Royal Canadian Institute on Saturday night is one of the modern weather men who are doing something about the weather.

Dr. F. W. Reichelderfer, chief of the United States Weather Bureau, will describe some of the new methods being used in meteorology, such as the thunderstorm research project conducted at Florida and Ohio, an 800 ft. cloud laboratory in an unused mine shaft, and the experiments being conducted in cloud nucleation with dry ice and silver iodide.

He has said that the problems of weather and climate of greatest interest relate to the physical properties of the elements that compose the atmosphere, and the behavior of these elements in the free air. However Dr. Reichelderfer said that the behavior of these elements in the free air is often quite different from their behavior in the confines of the laboratory.

According to Dr. Reichelderfer, the meteorologist can offer only a general explanation, which is a description of the circumstances rather than the understanding of such wonders as the source of the electrical discharges which produce lightning, the origin of the tornado whose aerodynamic forces may drive a straw through a steel plate, and the thunderstorms and hurricanes with their cloudbursts of rain.

Law Briefs

The University of Toronto School of Law Club begins with this issue of The Varsity, the publication of a weekly series of "Law Briefs". These are designed to bring to other students some aspects of the law, and to dispel from their minds notions of mustiness, insipidity and uncompromising rigidity with which the study is allegedly (and so erroneously!) associated.

WHAT'S YOUR VERDICT?

In a heavy storm a thousand miles from shore a yacht sank, and members of her crew (Smith, Brown, Jones and a cabin-boy) had to put out in an open boat. They had no water, except for a few drops they could catch when it rained, and their only food was two pounds of turnips and one small turtle which they had caught.

For twelve days they subsisted on these meagre rations. Exposure too, took its toll, and they grew weaker and weaker day by day. On the thirteenth day, Smith proposed that one of their number—indicating the cabin-boy, who was in the worst condition of the four—be sacrificed to save the rest, all of whom had families. Brown refused. Their plight was desperate by the nineteenth day when Smith again proposed a sacrifice, this time by the drawing of lots. Brown refused.

On the twentieth day, the boy was lying in the bottom of the boat, extremely weakened by famine and from drinking sea water, and quite helpless. Smith, with the assent of Jones, killed him.

The three men lived on his flesh and blood for the next four days, when they were picked up by a passing ship. They were still alive, but in the lowest state of prostration.

They were taken to England, where Smith and Jones were indicted for murder.

How would you decide?

Last Freshman Do For Arts Students In Orientation Plan

Freshmen from the four Arts Colleges will have another chance to become oriented in the fourth and last of the freshmen tea-dances tomorrow at 3:30 at Wymilwood. This dance will give freshmen an opportunity to get acquainted with freshmen from other colleges, and with the faculty and student council members of Vic.

The purpose of this series of dances, according to extra-curricular Affairs Chairman Charles Hanley, has been to introduce first year artsmen in the different colleges to each other, and thus in the easiest manner to begin intelligent discussion between arts people from the different colleges. Although the attendance has been only fifty or seventy-five people, Hanley feels the affairs have definitely been successful. It is difficult to have any real discussion or interchange of ideas, with more than fifty people, he pointed out. Besides, accommodation has in some cases restricted attendance. About forty people from the other colleges are expected tomorrow, drawn mostly by personal contact with the class executives.

The Coordinating Committee will meet within the next few weeks to decide the fate of the freshmen orientation affairs, Hanley said. They will definitely be continued next year, because they have proved so successful this first year, but it is hoped that they may be extended to include all faculties, and that they become more tea and less dance, to give more opportunity for discussion.

Local Rag Plays Ball For Trophy

The annual grudge match for the Porter Trophy, symbolic of basketball supremacy between the news and sports staffs of The Varsity, will finally be held this Friday. After some difficulty in locating a gymnasium for the game, it was arranged to hold it in the Victoria College Gymnasium at 2.00 o'clock Friday.

After last year's thriller in which the news staff soundly trounced the sports, it is expected that the match this year will be a real contest, with the new staff trying to make it two years in a row. The most colorful feature of last year's fight was the refereeing, done by the WUA rep to the SAC, Joan Eddis, one time women's editor on The Varsity.

The present lineups for the respective teams include every one who has ever had his hands on a bell, or has been in a gymnasium since he came to University.

Tall stars, such as Jerry (Michigan) Brown, and Denise (Buffalo Trip) Richards, will add a lot to the team's strength of the new's team. Most of the sports team are much shorter, and will have their own troubles getting those rebounds. Joe (Stretch) Scanlon will be the tallest on the team. Even their star woman, Carol Logan, will be only five foot two.

If a good impartial judge can be found, like the one last year who refereed according to men's rules she knew nothing about, this tussle promises to be one of the sports classic of the half century.

Can'd Culture To Be Debated Trinity At 8

A resolution to the effect that 'The Canadian Environment is Conducive to Distinctive Culture' will be the subject of the Trinity College Centennial debate tonight at 8.00 p.m. in Strachan Hall, Trinity College. The guest speaker will be Robertson Davies, editor of the Peterborough Examiner, and noted Canadian playwright.

Last year at Hart House debate, Davies supported a motion that Canada is culturally constipated. It was carried by a vote of 46-10. Well known plays he has written include Fortune My Foe, and Eros at Breakfast.

President of the Trinity College Literary Institute, Robin Fraser, stated that they had chosen the topic because they thought it was topical. "With the Massey report still in everybody's mind, and trying to keep to a Canadian theme, we took this topic and asked Davies to be the guest," he said.

Fraser also pointed out that because this was a special Centennial debate it was open to the whole University, any of whom could take part in the debate.

The other guest, speaking against the motion, will be Prof. Lyndon Smith, associate professor of Divinity at the college. A Rhodes scholar and prominent debater at the Oxford Debating Uunion, Smith has been Faculty chairman of the Hart House Debates, and otherwise acting in debating on the University of Toronto Campus since he has been here.

The student speakers will be Dwight Fulford, IV Trin., speaking for the motion, and John Barton, IV Trin, speaking against it. Another special feature of this debate is the fact that a special invitation has been extended to many graduates of the last 15 years who were very active in the Trinity Lit activities.

Finch And Bodle Play Piano Duets

Next Wednesday's Hart House recital in the music room will be given by Robert Finch and Douglas Bodle. They will perform music for four hands at the piano — otherwise known as piano duets.

Robert Finch is better known to students as Professor Finch of the French Department of UC. Besides being a distinguished pianist, Dr Finch is a painter who has had his works shown in the Art Gallery at Eaton's recently.

In addition, Dr. Finch is a poet in English and French, and sometimes both at once. Two volumes of his poetry are at present on sale at the University Book Store.

Douglas Bodle is organist and choirmaster at Eglinton United Church. He came from Winnipeg two years ago, and since that time has given recitals in Toronto on the piano, organ and harpsichord. He has also played on CBC Wednesday night.

Finch and Bodle have been preparing the entire four-hand piano literature of Mozart — a considerable volume of music, including some of the master's least-known, and in some cases most inspired music.

Next Wednesday's concert will consist of selections from these works. It will be held in the Music Room at 5:00 p.m., and all members of Hart House will be welcome. As usual, no tickets are required.

This opera will be performed Feb. 21, 23, 26 and 29 at the Royal Alexandra during the Opera Festival.

Religious Hypocrite Featured In Trinity Play

The Trinity College Drama Club, nothing daunted, have decided that nothing but the best will do. The great Moliere's most successful comedy, TARTUFFE, is the play they have chosen for their big annual production. They are presenting it five nights next week starting on Tuesday, Feb. 5th in Hart House Theatre.

The play is under the direction of Herbert Whittaker, who won the award for the best production in last year's Central Ontario Drama Festival. Whittaker is also drama critic for The Globe and Mail.

Moliere is acclaimed as the great comic dramatist of all time, for not only did he understand the conventional 'comedy of manners', but his plays are comedies of character. The people are at once very believeable, yet absurdly funny, and these two aspects played off against each other create a laughter that is often fringed with sadness.

Tartuffe is the name of a religious hypocrite, who wins the daughter of a rich man of property, Orgon. When he is exposed as a deceitful, self-indulgent man he is expelled from the house and thrown in jail. The part of Orgon was first created and made famous by Moliere himself, at the Palais Royal in Paris in 1669.

Whale Hunt Hart House Film Today

Today at 12:30 and 1:30 p.m. the Hart House Art Committee are showing a film in the East Common Room. The picture is a story of outport adventure called Newfoundland Scene. It is a forty-five minute documentary in color with special accent on the place of seaport activities in Canada's tenth province.

The highlight of the film is a graphic depiction of an actual whale hunt with its ensuing scenes of battle. The narration of the picture is being done by Frank Peddie.

Next week, Thursday, 7th February, there will be another picture, called The City, on city planning.

Conservatory Talks Today By Met Mgr.

Edward Johnson, former manager of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York, will give a free lecture on "Opera As a Business" at 3:00 p.m. today in the Concert Hall of the Conservatory.

Dr. Johnson's lecture is part of the regular score-study series being sponsored by the Conservatory every Thursday afternoon. At present, the lectures are concerned with various aspects of opera, in order to tie in with the forthcoming opera festival.

Canadian-born Dr. Johnson was for many years tenor soloist with the Metropolitan Opera. Prior to this, he also sang in Italy, under an Italianized name.

He guided the Metropolitan Opera Company through the difficult years, and retired from his position as general manager two years ago. He is now closely associated with the Royal Conservatory, and occasionally lectures there.

A real expert on his subject, Dr. Johnson will express his views on the business end of opera in his lecture. University students will get a chance to hear the man who managed the affairs of the world's only major opera company that works on a purely commercial basis.

Theatre Ushers Blush Tripping Down The Aisle

The usher in any theatre is a very important and responsible sort of person. For the usher is the only member of the company and the management who comes into personal contact with the audience, so that the warmth with which a play is received depends often on the way in which the ushers ushes. If ushing is done sloppily, then there is an immediate antagonism to things in general that grips the heart of the play-goer. Everything is over but the booing.

Now many people will think that ushers need not have any particular aptitude, but of course they don't realize the rapid numerical calculations needed to find how many seats from the aisle such-and-such a number is. It depends entirely on one's knowledge of the invariable variable, and one's ability to divide a number by a letter, and come out with the right seat.

All this is made easier in Hart House Theatre where seats are either odd or even, depending on whether you are right-hand-seated or left-hand-seated. This arrangement was found to be necessary since almost all Hart House ushers are recruited from student ranks. The management of the theatre realized long ago that due to dull lectures and inadequate high school training students were too poorly equipped to handle the normal two-handed ushing procedure.

A few simple rules to be remembered by all untried ushers:

1. Never sell the program. If someone pays, just pretend it's a tip.

2. When anyone comes in late it is expected that you will blush for them. The audience no matter how boorish must not feel self-conscious.

3. Remember that Edgar Poe founded the original House of Ushers. You must carry on the tradition as best you can.

Blues Vs. Carabins Fri. Nite

The senior Blues will line up against the league-leading University of Montreal Carabins at 8:15 tomorrow evening. The Carabins are firmly entrenched on the top rung with a five and one record. In the last meeting of these two clubs the Blues had a two-goal lead but blew it and salvaged only a 4-4 tie.

Coach Bill Wade will be without his hardrock defenceman, "Killer" Joe Kane who suffered head injuries in last week's game when he crashed into the boards and may be out of hockey for the rest of the season. Replacing Kane on the first string defence with Red Stephen will be Paul Prendergast. The other blueline duo will be Al Fasan and Jerry Fitzhenry.

The Blues will welcome back to the line-up Norm Fox and Pete Vernon, who have been out with injuries for a few weeks. These two will, with Al Conboy, make up the third line. The Wheldrake-Adams-Rope and McKenzie-Frey-Arrowsmith lines will be intact for the game. Jim Ross will be tending the Varsity goal.

JV's Play, Visit OAC

The high flying intermediate Hockey blues take to the ice at Guelph tonight for their second league game in the intercollegiate schedule. The Junior Varsity team made a smashing debut here a couple of weeks ago when they gave the Waterloo boys their to the tune of 15-3. They have won and tied a couple of other exhibition tilts.

Last year the Intermediates just managed to salvage a 6-5 victory over the Aggies. However, they proved their superiority in the second game here, winning by a wide margin.

As far as is known, the Baby Blues will travel to Guelph with the same line-up that defeated Waterloo.

Blues Square With Assumption 65-46

Tri-Bells Beat Orphuns Again, 52-44

The Orphuns went down 52-44 to the Nortown Tri-Bells last night, handicapped by the absence of George Stulac who was swimming in the West end. The JVs took an early lead in the first quarter but after the Bells got started Varsity was never in front again.

Toronto went up 5-1 in the opening minutes; then the Bells sparked by Ray Thomas slowly gained control. At the end of the quarter the Nortowners were up 15-9. Bill Cocoran had three personals called on him in this period forcing Coach White to use him sparingly the rest of the game.

In the second quarter the JVs fell apart. It wasn't until the final thirty seconds that Garbutt scored a field goal for them. Tri Bells working from a fast break and a strong zone defence led by as much as 27-9 during the disastrous stanza.

The Orphuns revived in the second half. They swapped basket for basket and closed the gap with some accurate foul shooting. Doug Kettle swished three one-pointers in a row after a technical and a personal were called on Watson. This pulled the JVs within 4 points of the Bells. Johnny Braithewaite hooped one seconds later to leave the score 39-33 at the quarter's end.

Several times in the final stanza the Toronto team were within five of the winners but they never got any closer. With the score 5-41 Ray Thomas fouled out and from there on the Tri-bells stalled for the victory.

Max Grossman and Fred Thomas were top for the winners with 12 and 11. Jim Russell hooped 12 and Doug Kettle swished 10 to lead the Orphuns.

Tri-Bells: Litvack 1, Cooper 5, Grossman 12, Wearring, F. Thomas 10, Gray 3, Watson, Arnott, Braithewaite 8, Freedman 2, R. Thomas 11.

Orphuns: Cocoran 3, Garbutt 8, Reeves, Kettle 10, Brown, Milne, Madden 8, Yakomin, Russell 12, Primeau, Baida, Mandryk 2, Stevens 1.

By BOB GODSON

By controlling the backboards and breaking faster than Assumption College, the Varsity Blues rolled to an easy 65-46 victory. The top point-getter of the game was Ray Monnot who got 20 points and closely following him was Lou Lukenda with 19. These men besides scoring most of the points gathered in most of the rebounds. Except for frequent interceptions on their long passes and a general raggedness in their passing attacks up the floor, the Blues looked very sharp in their first game on the big Mutual Street floor. The Blues journey to London Saturday to do battle with the powerful Western Mustangs. This game should decide who will win the intercollegiate championship this year.

A sparse crowd turned out to Mutual Arena last night and saw a scrambly, but good game. The Purple Raiders put up a good battle, but seemed tired, as it was their second game in two nights. This win avenged an earlier defeat Varsity suffered at the hands of Assumption earlier in the season. However, the Purple Raiders faced a far better team offensively and defensively than they did then.

The game started off fast, with Varsity's starting quintet of Fawsett, Lukenda, Monnot, Oneschuk and Huycke building up a lead of 13 to 7 at quarter time. They built the score up in fact to 9-0 in the first few minutes before Assumption scored a point. Fawcett and Oneschuk are new additions to the starting line-up, playing more of a game than they ever have this year. Both looked very good both checking and on floor play. Ray Monnot's three baskets in the first minute of play showed how he has improved at the pivot position, as he took full advantage of his height to grab the rebounds under both baskets. For ten minutes during the first half, Lou Veres of Assumption, who scored 16 points, including 6 out of 7 foul shots, and Lou Lukenda hooked up in a private battle, during which Lou scored nine and Veres eight points.

Assumption made a strong closing bid as they outscored Varsity 19-17 in the fourth quarter. However, the Blues' 31-18 lead at half-time was beyond danger. Art Binnington came out of retirement and was dressed for the game. However, the way that Ray Monnot was playing, coach Bob Masterson was wise to stick by him. The game was broadcast over CKFH.

Varsity: Fawcett 3, Lukenda 19, Monnot 20, Maynerick 8, Glover 10, Huycke 5, Binnington, Wilson, Oneschuk, Corcoran, Brennan.

Assumption: Veres 16, Chittaro, Robinson 2, Bruce 6, Collini 2, Cooke 6, Smith 7, Hester 2, Moir, Karcz 5.

Sportswoman

Hard, close matches highlighted the girls' inter-faculty badminton finals held at the Carlton Club Tuesday and Wednesday. Thirty-eight entries, the largest number to date, competed in the tvent.

Daphne Walker, U.C., Canadian Junior Champion, emerged triumphant from the fray. An outstanding player throughout the tournament, Daphne defeated Elizabeth Russell, P.H.E., in the finals, 11-8, 11-6, after downing Daphne Cross, 11-6, 11-2, in the semi-finals and June Biggar, 11-5, 11-3, in the quarter-finals.

In the semifinal lead up, Liz Russell defeated Ann Greey 11-1, 11-4. Liz also edged Ruth Nethercott 11-6, 12-10, in the closest match of the tourney.

As a result of this tournament, Ruth Nethercott, manager, will take Daphne Walker, Elizabeth Russell, Ann Greey and Daphne Cross to represent Toronto in the Inter-collegiate matches at McGill. They hope to have Joan Warren coaching them.

Stan Cutts has been coaching the McGill girls for some time now, and Toronto feels that this will be the team to beat.

Blue Belles Take Hamilton 26-25

The Varsity Women's Intercollegiate Basketball Team eked out a 26 to 25 win over Hamilton Normal School at Ryerson Gym last night, by the skin of their beautiful teeth. The Hamilton team checked the Blues static, and ferreted passes that had the Bluebells guessing until the final seconds of play.

In the first quarter, the Varsity squad gained an 8 to 6 lead, but the Hamilton teachers closed in on the Varsity net in the second frame, swishing the string for twelve points.

Alma Hatch pulled the Blue team out of the doldrums early in the third stanza, when she dropped a clear shot through the Green and Yellow hoop. Shirley Roberts took up the battle from there and boosted the Blues' score up four points.

Kitty Laning sparked the Hamilton sextet to action in the fourth quarter and it looked as though the Toronto cause was lost. However, the Bluebells put on an extra spurt and with one minute left in the game, Shirley Roberts sank the winning basket for Virsity.

Alma Hatch was top scorer for the Blues with ten points, while Shirley Roberts potted six and Carol Dobson five. Heather Chipman and Mary Lewis turned in a terrific checking performance.

For Hamilton, Kitty Laning was high scorer with twelve points, while Jane Haviland sank ten and Mary Ann Langs counted three.

Intercollegiate Meet Saturday at HH

The first of a series of Intercollegiate indoor track meets will be held this Saturday at Hart House, commencing at 3 p.m. The guests will be Buffalo Downtown Y, whose track team is composed mainly of students at Buffalo State Teachers' College, with a few additions from neighbouring colleges such as Brockport State, and other athletes.

McMaster will likely send over a group of sprinters to compete in the short distance events in the meet as well. If they do, McFarlane, the new record holder in the 100-yard dash, will be with them. Though the actual events to be held have not been announced, there will probably be the 50-yard dash, 100-yard dash, 300, 600, and 1,000 yards, one mile, a medley relay, and probably a standing broad jump and a high jump.

A similar meet was held last year, and was swept by the Varsity athletes 55-22. The 100, not ordinarily run at indoor meets, was the only track event won by the Buffalo team.

Spectators will be admitted free, and women will be as welcome as men.

Future track meets have been scheduled for Toronto's indoor team this season. Thursday, February 7, Varsity will play host to a complete team from McMaster. On Saturday, February 16, a relay team will be sent down to Lansing, Michigan, to enter the Michigan State Relays, to compete with Michigan, Michigan State, Notre Dame, and possibly Illinois, Indiana and Iowa, as well as other colleges in the Michigan area.

On Saturday, February 23, the team will compete in the Toronto Indoor meet, being staged specially this year as part of a series of meets being arranged by Canadian sportsmen in preparation for the Olympics this summer.

A tentative date has been made for a meet with Western here on the first of March, also a Saturday. On the eighth the team takes its usual trip to Hamilton for the 91st Highlanders' International Indoor meet there, one of the biggest track meets regularly held in Canada.

On Friday, March 21, there are the Eastern Canadian Indoor Championships in Montreal. To conclude the season, the team will visit Buffalo for the local infantry battalion's meet at the Buffalo Armories

Pitching Sportshoes

In major league basketball yesterday, Dents A and Jr. Vic ran neck and neck for three periods with the Dentists, finally coming out on top of a 32-31 score. The winners showed a well-balanced score sheet. Francesin had 8 points, Gilgert 7 and Badner 6. For Vic, Tovell got 10 and Dyalad 7.

In the minor loop, Music rolled to a 50-7 victory over the UC Sammies. Gulka starred for the powerful Music squad, netting 26 points. Green added 10.

Pre-Med II A took a close one from St. Mike's Fisher, 26-21. Charendoff and Marqulies did the bulk of the scoring for the Doctors, getting 9 points apiece. In a late game, Trinity Wassailers doubled the count on Law B, 40-20.

I Chemicals laced Trinity Elves, 84-2. High scorer for the winners were Burton 28, Roschuk 14, and Kerr 12. Maybee led the losers.

B-Ball Irish Win Beat Meds, 35-17

St. Mike's A's, last year's inter-faculty basketball finalists, yesterday showed their prowess as they trounced Sr. Meds, 35-17. The Medicine Men managed to hold the double blue squad to a 21-15 lead at the end of the second period but the Irish ran wild in the last session to win easily. They rattled off ten straight points with no reply in the third to wrap up the win.

Jack Iwanicki, a holdover from last year, was high man for the Mikemen with 10 points. O'Connor with 9 and Trainor with 8 were the other top scorers. Copersmith was best for Meds with six markers and Smith hooped 4.

Vic Win Again Beat UC, 4-1

By JERRY HOLLYER

It was Red and Gold all the way yesterday, when the league-leading Sr. Vic squad downed the U.C. cellar-dwellers, 4-1. The Victoria sextet outskated, outshot, outscored and outplayed a hard-trying but unco-ordinated U.C. team. Fullerton, one of the best men on the ice, pulled back to defense for this game, tried several times to instill some life into the faltering U.C. squad, but lacked the support of his teammates.

Vic first notched the twine on an unassisted effort by Andrews, when he backhanded one from just inside the blueline. Scarcely three minutes had ticked by when Gibson sank Vic's second tally after a goal-mouth scramble. Before the first frame ended, centre-man White, one of the squad's smoothest skaters, and incidentally one of the hardest back-checkers on the team, came up with a slap-shot from a wide angle that put the Red and Gold ahead 3-0. The only penalty of the period went to McFarlane of U.C. for tripping.

In the final stanza, the play evened out considerably, both teams scoring only once, although Vic still held the edge in both skating and shots on goal. Stother scored the Vic goal after some poor clearing left the puck free in a goal-mouth melee. U.C.'s lone tally came from the stick of Bill Bewley, who has one of the league's hardest shots and made no mistake on a blazing shot from the blue-line. Vic were penalized once when Stothers was ousted early in the period for cross-checking.

Irish Win, 4-1 2 For D'Arcy

By JIM PROUDFOOT

The big A team from St. Mike's took a 4-3 win yesterday from St. Meds in a game that saw the doctors fight back to make it a close finish. The Irish took a 3-1 lead in the first stanza but the doctors bounced back with a couple of second period markers to give the winners a few anxious moments. D'Arcy MacDonald for the double blue was the best man on the ice as he potted a pair of goals and turned in a steady game on defence.

Duffy opened the scoring for the Irish after two minutes of play. He flipped it into the Meds' goal as he scooted past the Meds' net. Three minutes later, Dawson tied the score. He took a pass-out at the blue-line, skated a few strides and fired a long, screened shot past Grossi in the St. Mike's cage. About halfway through the period, Godin gave St. Mike's the lead, sneaking up along the boards, past a couple of checks and right in on goal. MacDonald got his first tally in the dying moments of the frame as he broke up a Meds rush and raced right back to score, using the lone Meds defender as a screen to fool the goalie.

Early in the second, MacDonald got another, making the count 4 1. He rushed up to steal the puck from the Meds defence and skate in to score handily. While Harwick was serving a tripping penalty, the only one of the game, Dawson caught the corner with a screened drive from the point to pull the doctors one closer. Shortly after, Cosens whacked home a shot from left wing and Meds trailed by one. They strove for the equalizer but the game ended with St. Mike's men swarming around the Meds' cage.

Wrestling Team Hits Road Meets Buffalo, Rochester

Here are three members of Varsity's wrestling squad which will visit Rochester and Buffalo this week end. They are Walt Pitman, 130 pounds; Joe Goldenberg, 123 pounds; and Bill Chykaliuk at 177 pounds.

With two exceptions the same Blue wrestling team that faced OAC and Ithaca will head to Rochester and Buffalo for two dual meets this weekend. Phil Henderson is replacing Glen McCormick in the 167 pound class and Tommy Hatashita, still recovering from a nose operation, is a doubtful starter at the 137 pound weight. If Hatashita is unable to make the trip he will be replaced by Al Gladstone, a former McGill wrestler now at Toronto.

The Varsity grapplers leave for Rochester Friday morning. Immediately after their nine o'clock tilt there they will entrain for Buffalo. They will face the Buffalo crew at three o'clock Saturday afternoon and then return home with the swimming team late Saturday night.

At Rochester they will face a squad very much improved over the one they beat 23-13 last year. The Rochester wrestlers are going at top speed and downed the Buffalo team 25-7. Buffalo shaded the Blues 18-17 in last year's meeting but their squad is not as good as previously.

Yesterday the Blue Wrestlers took on challengers in their own weight class. Doug Hamilton scraped by Larry Skitch on time advantage. In another tight contest heavyweight Harry Robinson behind 6-2 fought back to pin challenger Ernie Dryden. Phil Henderson upset Glen McCormick 4-2 in the only reversal on the program. Henderson looked very good as he managed to stay on top of the elusive McCormick although he didn't come anywhere near pinning Glen.

Coach Kirk Wipper will probably decide tomorrow whether or not Tommy Hatashita will make the trip. All challengers will be kept on hand in case there are any injuries in Friday's bouts. They will be notified Saturday morning if replacements are required.

The line-up of Toronto wrestlers making the trip is as follows: 12 lb. Joe Goldenberg, 130 lb. Walt Pitman, 137 lb. undecided, 147 lb. Paul Phelan, 157 lb. Orie Loucks, 167 lb. Phil Henderson, 177 lb. Bill Chykaliuk, 191 lb. Doug Hamilton, Heavyweight: Harry Robinson.

The Verdict

The Court held the prisoners guilty, and sentenced them to hang. Necessity is not a defence to the deliberate taking of another's life . . . .

The sentence was afterwards commuted by the Crown to six months' imprisonment.

Was the Crown applying 'justice' while the Court was applying 'law'? Was not the effect of the Crown's exercise of its prerogative of mercy merely to negative the Court's decision? Why, then, go through all the unnecessary motions of a trial? Should the law be changed?

Can the Department of Philosophy, perhaps, suggest a solution?

Finally, might I suggest that the actors speak their lines as though they expected the audience to laugh. The fact that the audience seldom reacted on Tuesday night discouraged them unduly. The show deserves to be laughed at, if the actors would realize it. That is the highest compliment one can pay a comedy.

President's Report

Desperate Remedies

President Smith's observations on the necessity for remedial English classes seems to have knocked everyone for yet another loop. And after the stress and turmoil over the OSU report cards was temporarily settling down, the public may be ill prepared for another fracas.

But here it is. Once more the accusing finger is pointed at the high schools, and for the present, psychology and "the new philosophy" have not been called in to the defence. Curiously enough, many of the high school teachers have accepted Dr. Smith's conclusion that high school English is inadequate for the university, if not elsewhere as well. This admission has been made with the same phlegmatic calm that many of the "younger generation" assume when confronted with Time's analysis of the young. (Yes, we are grave and fatalistic, gregarious and conventional, wanting in faith and lacking the spirit of revolt, runs the chant.)

Of course, there is little doubt that secondary education is in a bit of a muddle. Finally parents and teachers have caught up with an insidious American import, an offshoot of Dewey's philosophy of education, which has been filtering into Ontario for about twenty years now.

It is not too surprising that the public should jump to attention when such a stronghold of tradition as report cards are attacked. Nor is the howl over remedial English much of a shock.

Although Secondary School Superintendent Morgan's criticism of the nature of the test ("The fact that many people failed on the test may or may not mean anything"), may be very valid, the result has struck a chord in the public conscience.

Regardless of whether or not the test itself has any basis in truth, many people (including the President, and the Department of English at UC) will and have accepted its conclusions as gospel truth. And they may be quite justified.

President Smith suggests that it is "incumbent on the university to take immediate steps to make sure that illiterary no longer dwells in easy partnership with the possession of a degree." And University College instituted remedial English classes last fall.

However, we would seriously question the wisdom of such a move. If the university attempts to make up for the deficiencies of high school training, it may easily find that not only remedial English, but courses in rudimentary geometry, the elements of science, basic French and the fundamentals of social studies, will also have to be instituted.

In short, the university will find itself transformed into a sort of super-high school. It is, of course, one way of denying everyone a university education.

The only answer to the problem will lie in mitigating the confusion of outlook which now characterizes secondary schools. On the one hand, we have Minister of Education Dunlop's assertion that education "must get down to business and see that every pupil has the practical tools he needs to earn his living when he leaves school." And on the other hand, we have the theorists who are bent on making every child an island, entire in himself.

Those who would make the child the measure of all things can hardly be said to prepare him to earn a living. And "practical tools", aside from the confines of a machine shop, is such a nebulous term that it is difficult to discuss. We sense that it conflicts with the theorists.

The present inadequacies must be met by a more sane attitude on the part of the high school. The universities, by outlook and purpose, are in no way fitted to perform secondary school tasks.

As for the illiterates, it is to be hoped that the university will be astute enough not to graduate them.

44 professors have been suspended from the University of Toronto staff as a result of the recent "honour system" scandal. The discovery that certain nonconformist lecturers had been smuggling notes into class sparked a thorough investigation last month, which revealed that some professors had resorted to writing lecture notes on their cuffs, while others were reported to be suspiciously interested in their watches, or suffered consistently from bad colds.

The scandal, which provoked the sudden return of President Spontaneous Speech from India, where he has spent the past three years, also involved The Veracity, student daily, when it was discovered that rebellious professors were filing their notes in copy bags and smuggling them to Oshawa where they were available for reference on receipt of a note from the Feature Editor indicating that the lecturer concerned had promised to submit to a Campus Profile.

The honour system was started on the Toronto Campus three years ago, when

Dean Swizzel, the President's representative, lit the famous "intellectual bonfire"
—which unfortunately caused the destruction of Convocation Hall when several copies of the President's Report were inadvertantly added to the pile of lecture notes. At the time it was believed that all notes had been burned, but the re-investigation revealed that some professors were warned in time to hide their notes in wastepaper baskets in the Junior Common Room of University College, whence they were subsequently sent to Oshawa.

OUR READERS WRITE

En Naturel

Editor, The Varsity:

From your own quotes, it would hardly appear that President Smith has requested that professors be Ciceronians. The lecture system is Ciceronian, even if bad Ciceros are conducting it. The method was explained by Sir Francis Bacon in The Advancement of Learning where he called it the Magistral Way:

> For as knowledges are now delivered, there is a kind of contract error between the deliverer and the receiver; for he that delivereth knowledge, desireth to deliver it in such form as may best be believed, and not as may be best examined. . . .

It was this contract error as well as poor delivery with which President Smith was concerned. He wants the professor to follow a natural method of cognition in teaching, tracing through problems with his class rather than persuading them with the oratory of the pulpit. Bacon suggested this contrary method:

> But knowledge that is delivered as a thread to be spun on, ought to be delviered and intimated if it were possible in the same method wherein it was invented. . . .

This sounds suspiciously similar to Professor Gilbreth's remark that the mind is en rapport with the class only by spontaneity of thinking. This does not indicate teaching university lecturers stylized methods of teaching. It requires heightening their awareness of the relevance of their subject matter to the techniques of the culture and the classes which they are teaching. It requires that they cease trying to be poor Ciceros and be natural. The eloquence called for is not that of persuation, but the ability to present thought in action.

On other occasions The Varsity has supported the work of Professors Innis and McLuhan as correctives to problems of communication existent in the university. It has called attention to the need for a recognition of the oral tradition in which we live which emphasizes the visual and the conversational modes of apprehension and presentation rather than printing or writing. In such a cultural situation the function of language as a means of communication becomes of utmost importance.

When the President of the University agrees with this policy and publicly advocates it, you attack his view by misrepresenting it and condemning it. There is nothing artificial in President Smith's platform to the extent that it calls attention to a problem and implies a diagnosis. More attention to the problem of communication and awareness in the modern world is certainly needed when the breakdown in communication is so bad that The Varsity editors cannot even apprehend the fact that someone is supporting their view-point.

Lurking in the background, too, are the phosts of self-interest and smugness. Smugness in satisfaction with the status quo; self-interest in that many students blatantly declare the purpose of the lecture is to give notes. With this view, The Varsity must agree. If the lecture is to give notes, The Varsity is correct; it should be treated casually and with discrimination.

The written exams conducted anonymously are a major point of emphasis in the evaluation of the year's work and tend to foster the provision of notes which will answer the questions. Student's technique in facing such exams is to persuade the examiner they know the work rather than actually presenting it. This falls into line with the Ciceronian mode of the lecture system.

President Smith and others, however, suggest that the classroom is not interchangeable with the text-book or a set of notes. It is a laboratory where the pursuit of knowledge is continued by means of the oral discussion. This can only be accomplished if knowledge is presented to the student in a natural, not a ministerial, way. The inculcation of belief is proper to the Church; the teaching of knowledge is proper to the university. In that President Smith is calling attention to a problem of communication which is vital to all intellectual life, he has done a service not only to the University of Toronto, but to universities in general.

If the lecture is to be maintained as a means of freeing students from the obligation of consulting books, it should, as The Varsity suggests, be treated lightly. If, however, as President Smith suggests, it can bring the student and the professor into a closer cultural unity, it is a serious matter. People today are ready for a return to conversation; science has liberated all fields for a consideration of knowledge by means of following natural processes of cognition. The method, however, is not new; it is the method advocated by the Platonic dialogue, by training in the mediaeval universities, by Bacon and the Senecan humanists. Tradition certainly stands with President Smith in his desire to approach the student by training him in the techniques of the field which he is studying, rather than giving him a set of "received opinions" to remain undeveloped throughout life.

Musical Discord

Editor, The Varsity:

I am still convulsed with unconquerable laughter (alternating with the chokings of unmitigrated wrath), at the senatorial snobbishness displayed by Bernard Papernick, who, in the Monday issue of The Varsity, solemnly declares that the "Schumann Third (Rhenish) Symphony, . . . from a few pleasing melodies, has little else to commend it".

The "pleasing little melody" with which this symphony opens, has such a powerful epic sweep and such pulsating vividness that it, according to Sigmund Spaeth "strikes a new note in symphonic composition, and . . . influenced Strauss' Don Juan".

We might also point out certain spiritual, if not textual influences, upon the opening theme of Brahms' Third Symphony, actually composed in the Rhineland, probably the most craftsman-like creation of one of the world's truly great composers. The second subject of the first movement is very close in spirit and procession to the later "ring" motive in Wagnerian music drama. The melodies are more than pleasing.

Let our heaven-inspired prophet-critic (I refer to Mr. Papernick) imitate in his own compositions (if he really has the acquaintance with the five lines and four spaces) the other worldly solemnity of the four trombones in the so-called "Cathedral Scene" (movement 4) as they work his way through the ingenious counterpoint which follows . . .

. . . Even though the performance of the Brahms' Haydn Variations, on the second part of the program was such as to make this work over-shadow the Schumann opus, the Rhenish Symphony, despite all conspiracy directed against it, must survive as one of the most thoroughly beautiful, and completely neglected works in the repertoire.

FIRST PRIZE SHORT STORIES

Celina

R. W. Shepherd

"OH LOOK," she said, pointing across the street where the entrance to a theatre was brightly lit against the even-sky, "let's go there." We had been walking for an hour on the high road road overlooking the sea and I thought she might be tired.

"I'll get the tickets," I said, bowing slightly from the waist as seemed to be the custom of the land when addressing a lady. "Oh don't do that," she smiled, "look at all these people." A large group was at that moment entering the theatre and Celina, without pause or haste, steered us gently into its center. To the doorman she gave the barest sign to show we belonged to the party and we were inside.

"Your tickets, Senor?" the doorman asked the gentleman behind us. "But here are our tickets," they exclaimed, "eight tickets for our party." "I'm sorry Senor, eight people have already gone in. You will have to get more tickets."

"But how can this be . . .?" their voices faded into the general murmur of the crowd. With the clarity of mind which comes to all men in the face of danger I considered the fact that the Canadian system, where the man with the tickets goes first, made up for its lack of chivalry by being very efficient. But of course such behaviour was impossible in the Argentine where the old fashioned manners still held sway.

We walked into the theatre and down the centre aisle, Celina calm and unruffled, carrying her Latin beauty like a queen. "Oh, but it is well attended," she exclaimed.

"It seems to be," I replied, seeing that every seat was taken and that people were standing down both side aisles.

"Ah," she said with surprise, smiling across at someone in the audience and then turning to men and saying earnestly: "One cannot come to the theatre without friends, true " Throughout our long and solitary walk forwards she continued to recognize and greet her friends.

At the front of the theatre three extra rows had been made with chairs to accommodate the overflow crowd, and the front row of these was empty. The front row, it could be said, was blatantly empty, and as we headed inexorably towards it I resisted the temptation to turn and run out into the night.

"Here we are," Celina announced loudly as though finding a friend after a long and arduous search. She sank down gracefully into the chair nearest the aisle and I, commending my delicate Anglo-Saxon soul to heaven, sat down beside her.

"We arrived just in time, didn't we," she remarked calmly.

"Yes," I replied faintly, "possibly even early since all these chairs are still empty."

"Ah but then some people always arrive late, to create an effect, no? They make themselves important by disturbing everybody and I have no patience with them." I tried valiantly, under the circumstances, to maintain some kind of conversation until the usher arrived.

"Senor," he said sternly, "you cannot sit here. These seats are reserved."

"But of course they are," Celina exclaimed largely, "for us."

"No senorita, for a special party. You will have to move."

"But we have our tickets," she declaimed, "so we have the right to sit down, no?"

"No," he replied firmly.

"No?" she cut him short, "so we have not the right to sit down, eh? A fine theatre," she raised her voice, sensing her audience, "where people cannot sit down." A man laughed somewhere behind her.

"Senorita please," the usher pleaded, "you can sit down but not here, these seats are reserved."

"Where is the sign? Where is the sign saying they are reserved?" she looked about her in an exaggerated fashion.

"There is no sign but . . ."

"Then they are not reserved."

"Then I will get the manager," and he stormed away up the aisle.

"These people," Celina said airily dismissing him with a wave of her hand.

The manager was a large man with extremely fat hands and with long black hair patted neatly onto the nape of his neck. He smiled at me softly and said: "Senor?"

"No, no," interrupted the usher, "the senorita."

"Senorita," he said slowly, "I am very sorry but I'm sure you will understand. The Minister for the Interior," he paused for effect, "has the whole front row for himself."

"He must be a very large man, no?"

When the laughter had died down, the manager was still smiling. "Very funny, yes?" "But you will have to move," he spat out the words, the smile vanished from his face. He stood very still glaring down at us and when he saw that Celina had not the slightest intention of moving, he announced that he would get the police.

I looked at Celina, pleading silently, and she turned at me and smiled with encouragement. "All this commotion, just for two seats; it is silly." She turned to the man behind us—the one who had laughed—and explained that we had our tickets and how were we to know that these seats were reserved.

It was at this moment that the crowds standing in the alcoves, having watched the little drama with interest, decided to move. With one mind they came forwards and filled the whole row about us, nodding across to Celina and agreeing with the burly man who had taken the seat across the aisle when he said: "You are quite right senorita."

Our numbers gave us strength, and when the policeman, followed by the manager and three ushers, marched down the aisle he was met with concerted and stubborn resistance.

"You cannot sit here," he shouted finally, masking his obvious ineffectuality by much stamping and a great show of arms. "You," he pointed at our burly friend, "will come with me."

"After the concert maybe," the man said quietly, "but not now."

"You will come now," yelled the officer, unnerved by the weight of his responsibility in front of so many people. He advanced menacingly towards the man and the manager, fearing a brawl, pointed out that Celina and I were to blame

Unquestioning, the heart and mind, like roots,
Drew brilliant comfort from the lovely fires;
But now no longer are deceived.
Although the gallant heart still flirts with Spring
The mind no longer can ignore
The too-repeated winter text
(Grey bones that clawed against steel skies)
And traces through the smoky jade
That clouds each tree and still-pretending heart,
The too-familiar winter frame.

O once upon a child, he said,
The dawn could play such tricks of song
That birds' sweet chatter glowed like words
Aunt Julia used, or Mrs. Greene,
Whose meaning, quarter-understood,
Was mixed with silk, and scent, and tea-time jewels.
Unfortunately now it has been found
Those glittering spells of birds and words
Lost potency, were meaningless,
Confronting the impenetrable hush
Of winter-deserts lying between minds.

And once upon a life, he said,
It seemed that Love would be the journey's end.
(O girl on moon-bird! Prince on sun-like steed!)
Regretfully I must conclude, he said,
That ice has formed on the bird's jewelled wings,
The steed has shrivelled to a spray of stars.
And this took place where all were lost
Within the dark light-years of void
That stretch in winter-wastes from heart to heart.

The Tooth And I

Vera Jelinek

I HATE dentists. I even prefer my mother-in-law to them. I'd rather face a maddened bull on a treeless plain than be confronted by "the yanker of ivories"!

One morning I was detesting dentists more than ever, for I was on the way to my semi-annual rendez-vous with mine. I had managed to elude him last time by attending the funeral of my wife's late cousin's brother-in-law, with whose acquaintance I had never been blessed, but this time there was no escape.

With studied nonchalance and whistling a popular funeral hymn, I marched to my doom. To my prejudiced eyes everyone seemed happy and carefree except me. I envied the very dogs.

I realized, with a sudden start, that I had arrived at the Medical Arts Building. I halted, and stared up at a certain window so long that curious passerby stopped, and gazed up, too. Soon there were ten of us gaping at that certain window.

As the crowd grew, I tottered into the building. To my horror, the elevator was standing invitingly open, and the operator, a weazened little gnome, asked glibly, "Which floor, mister?"

To my humiliation, I found that I had completely forgotten on which floor Dr. Cural's office was located, although from the outside I know his window immediately. I decided to attack the problem cautiously. "I have come to see a doctor," I assured the little one.

He goggled at me. "Dozens of 'em around. Which one do you want?"

"Dr. Cural," I answered briskly.

"Three of 'em in the building, bub. Which one do you want?"

"Which one is the highest up?"

He squinted at me with bright, suspicious eyes. "Dr. Hubert Cural. He's a chir-chir-chir-." He struggled with the word valiantly.

"Oh no! Not him!" I assured him hurriedly. "The dentist, of course!" I have some trouble with that word myself; it has a nasty way of sneaking up on you in conversation when you least expect it.

"Two of 'em here, mister. Which one do you want?" he asked me mechanically. Mentally, he was still laboring with that "chir-" word.

"The older one," I answered brightly.

This instantly awoke his already-roused suspicions. He abandoned his mental battle, and snapped, "Both of 'em in their fortys. Look, Mac you feel okay?"

Suddenly a brilliant light illuminated the dark, blank expanses of my brain. In a oh-I-was - just-fooling-all-the-time-you-know voice I commanded majestically, "My, good man, Dr. Cural has a secretary by the name of Miss Smythe. Now take me to him."

The little leprauchan was not impressed. "Why didn't you say so in the first place?" he retorted. "Getting a tooth drilled, mister?"

I winced, but disdained to answer. In a moment we were on the third floor. I stepped out, or rather, the little man shoved me out. Ahead of me were several doors; I tottered towards the one which read Dr. Thomas Cural, and fell in.

Miss Smythe rushed up to me

Judges' Comments

The judges of the entries for The Varsity Literary Issue of this year are without exception "disappointed" men. Only in the field of serious verse are comments unavailable.

The essay contest, judged by Professor McLuhan, of St. Mike's, had only two entries. Said McLuhan, "Neither is prizeworthy, but the essay 'The Next Time You Listen' is the better of the two." He awarded an honorable mention to both, but states that he is not happy about awarding prizes to either.

The poetry competition was divided into two sections, light and serious verse. The judge was Professor Northrop Frye of Victoria College. Of the several entries, he chose A Winter's Tale by Donald Urquhart for first prize, with Charmian Reading's City Smells and Last Evening by W. B. Kay second and third respectively.

Professor Frye suggested that "several might be mentioned for honorable mention; Miles Kennedy's Waiting at the Pit-Head, though not successful as a poem, showed unusual imaginative power and sincerity."

In the realm of light verse, Professor Frye found no entry which he could call "an unqualified success". He said, however, that he would give honorable mention to Roses, Roses Everywhere by John Grube, Time and Tests by Hugh Niblock, and the first of a group of light verses submitted by R. W. Shepherd, and bearing only the title, Light Verse.

Novelist Professor Douglas Grant of University College was unable to decide between the merits of the short stories Celina and Shell Out, both by R. W. Shepherd, and thus placed them in a first place tie, commenting that Shepherd was "streets ahead of the rest". He added that Shell Out was the better written of the two stories, but that Celina was the better story, being the most imaginative and original entry in the short story field.

Third prize in the short story group went to R. K. Ham for The Unhappy Medium. Professor Grant stated that he found the stories generally low in quality, and declined to name any entry for honorable mention.

The photographic competition was judged by Associate Professor of Art and Archeology Charles F. Comfort. He chose the well-lit and spontaneous photo by Bob Rapp as top prizewinner, with A. M. Chrysler's University College Cloisters second and P. Miller's "powerfully expressive character study", entitled Oldtimer, for third. Honorable mentions went to D. Sharkoff's Sun on Water, Miller's Queen's Park, and A. M. Chrysler's Peter Pan.

In his critical remarks Professor Comfort suggested that much better results would probably have been obtained had some of the unsuccessful entrants taken the trouble to personally make their enlargements, some of which are commercial contact prints.

THIRD PRIZE SHORT STORIES

The Unhappy Medium

R. K. Ham

IF you don't believe this story, just go in the south door of the Mathematics Building, if you can find it, (either the door or the building) turn left into the second corridor, and knock at the first door on your right. I'm sure Professor Beerstein would be glad to convince you, over and over again.

"By God, Weavel, this is fantastic!" cried Professor Beerstein to his colleague, waving the piece of paper like a flag.

Professor Weavel looked up from his pile of probability curves.

"Humph!" he said

Professor Beerstein, having a bald statement for perhaps the first time in his life without clothing it in the myriad cautious qualifications characteristic of Weavel, you dullard, the fellow is a statistical lotus-leaf, a Root Mean Square Student!"

"Tchah, a Root Mean Square Nuisance!" cried Wavel, roused from his monosyllabic apathy. "You many find it intuitively satisfactory, my dear Beerstein, but you haven't proven a thing to me! Mean Fiddlestick!"

And he buried his head in the probability curves again.

Beerstein's spectacles gleamed with a fanatic light, and his mouth foamed a little.

"By God, Weavel! By God! That he should come was as inevitable as that a pack of baboons, given an eternity, should type out—yes, the entire Encyclopaedia Brittainica!"

Weavel wagged his beard.

"What on earth, my dear Beerstein, should they want to do that for?"

And no further ranting and raving could bring him back from his curves.

mathematicians, was not to be put off now.

"See for yourself, then," placing the paper before Weavel, and pointing with a fat finger.

"Look there, Weavel. This is my class curve showing the distribution of marks in Calculus. The red horizontal line is the average mark line."

"Rather a low one, Beerstein."

"Highly irrelevant, Weavel. The point is that one student, see—there—Joe Schlunck — obtained exactly the average mark." And Beerstein paused, gloatfully.

"Tush, Beerstein, so what?" snorted Professor Weavel. "Take it away."

"Wonderful, that's what!" bellowed Beerstein, thumping his fist on the controversial paper, and resurrecting a cloud of dust.

"Because Professor Gasse of the Chemistry Department told me yesterday in his curve he noticed EXACTLY THE SAME THING! Unique, that's what!

It was 9:07.25 a.m. exactly.

Joe Schlunck was walking across the campus to his first lecture. He always walked across the campus at that time. Little did he know it was the exact average time for the students in his class to walk across the campus. Nor did he realize that he was travelling a Mean Free Path, with an average (for U of T students) speed 2.1037548 (1) miles per hour.

He met a comrade.

"Hey Joe, whaddaya know? Cummon and play golf tonight."

"Naw, I'm sick of it."

"Why? You shoot a fair game."

"Aw, I always shoot 92. (Ah, if he ever guessed the reason!) I'm sick of it."

"Well, common to the crap game at Ken's, then."

"Naw, George, I always break even."

"Well, you're luckier'n me! Talk about losin' your shirt!"

"I'd give mine to lose it for a change."

"Nuts, Joe" And George shrugged.

And as Joe plodded along in his average stride, he wondered dully why nothing ever happened to him.

He could never have guessed the particular jolt his mediocrity was about to receive.

But Beerstein could have. He had collected a mound of information on Joe Schlunck that would choke a bull, and he was trying to gain that end by shoving it down Weavel's throat, bit by bit. Again and again he would say:

"But it must be true. Suppose the chances are trillions to one, Weavel. Sooner or later it's bound to happen, in an infinity of opportunities. And it happened sooner, that's all."

And then he would say:

"But never, never had I thought — hoped — dreamed — it would happen in my lifetime!" And he would clasp his hands in sheer statistical rapture.

And again:

"Hear this, Weavel. His father is Garl Schlunck, a recognized genius in the field of pure Astrophysics, while his mother, formerly Annie Dimm, flunked out of Pass Arts with nine supplementals. God knows how she got her man, but I tell you, this union was blessed with an issue that is a perfect chameleon, a self-adapter to the exact medium of whatever society in which it moves. Think, Weavel, if you can. Suppose we put it in with a group of intelligentsia. What do we get? An average intellectual! Oh, what a wealth of delightful possibilities t h e r e are!"

But Weavel would say nothing, except, perhaps:

"It's disheartening that the average should look like that."

The uth was, he was severely shake so shaken that he even neglected to sneer at Beerstein's inevitable final warning:

"But silence, Weavel. Not a word to a soul. If this gets out, Schlunck may be lost to us forever."

Of course, it did get out. And very loudly, too. One newspaper said:

"PERFECTLY AVERAGE STUDENT FOUND."

And the other newspaper said, as always:

"U of T. DETECTS MEAN STUDENT!!"

Those who read the former were first bored ("M-m-m-m"), and then intrigued ("M-m-m-m"). And those who read the found!").

But all who read were aroused. And very soon the name of Joe Schlunck was on the lips of all the literate; and nearly as soon as it was on the lips of the illiterate, too, only louder, naturally.

And finally, inevitably, insurance companies clamoured to examine Joe Schlunck, to compare him with probability charts, to predict by him. Doctors hungered to X-ray him. Women stampeded to offer him marriage. The fact was, Joe Schlunck's meanness was in serious danger. And of the whole world, the only one who thought of it was Beerstein, the discoverer, whom they laughed at.

"Blow up, Beerstein," they said.

"My God, Weavel, a dreadful thing has happened!"

Weavel stiffled a cry

"What now?" he rasped.

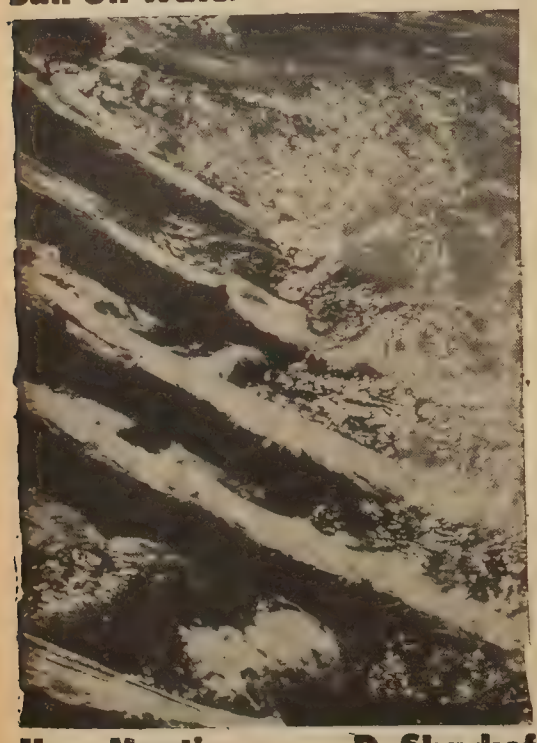
"Schlunck has vanished completely!"

latter were first enraged ("Varsity spirit isn't what it was when I was there"), and then disappointed ("Oh, that's what they

"What, his personality?"

"No, his person! Complete-ly, utterly gone!"

"Humph! It's as I told you, Beerstein. He never really existed anyhow, and now he's gone, and proven it. Tchah!



Weavel was particularly vehement, for he had come as close to accepting the evidence of his senses ahead of the product of his mind as he comfortably liked, and now he was resolved to dispel his uncertainty with defiance. He had relapsed into logical apathy.

But Beerstein lived on with the idea that Schlunck, appalled by the prospect of a graphical existence, had burst the bonds of mediocrity with an unconventional suicide.

And sometimes, in his more lucid moments, the Professor guessed that Schlunck had just quietly melted into a new background, and lived on, unnoticed and unsung, as always "one of the boys", though actually there was nobody more profoundly different.

But nothing could ever be proven. Against all odds, Joe Schlunck had fulfilled his destiny.

And the nineteenth added green ribbons.

CHARMIAN READING

The dream of Hell walked the streets
And hung around the halls of old men's homes
Made delicious fearful shivers
Along the spines of wives and spinsters
Startling the sins of commission and omission
Into human consciousness, and taken as the banner cry
Led men to far more dreadful sins.

The dream of hell rode the streetcars
And paid four-fifty for box seats
And wrapped itself around the labels
Of bottles on the rocking tables.
The deep throated baying of the city
Awakens the girl who dreams of pines
To her task of running and avoiding
Unnecessary conversation with the streets.

On a Monday in November,
In a dismal, dark November,
As I sloshed across the campus
In my old and leaky snow-boots,
Coming from a stupid lecture,
From a long and stupid lecture,
Kicking in an aimless fashion
Lumps of ice and snow before me,
It is worth the time and effort?
Is it waste of time, I wonder,
Still the question stays to haunt me
As I eat my midday sandwich,
Eat my soggy midday sandwich
With its limp and wilted lettuce;
Ever seeking for an answer,
But alas, there comes no answer.
So I pick my heavy books up
And I put my leaky boots on
And I slosh across the campus. . . .

hen I must go out and get some more. By the way, have we anything to give them, when they come later?"

"No, I havent made anything."

"But we must have something to give them. apples or popcorn. It wouldn't take long to get, would it?"

"It isn't worth it," she said shortly. "They all get more than they can carry as it is, and remember what happened last year when young Thomas emptied the whole plate into his basket. They just take advantage of the situation."

"But dear," he remonstrated, "we must have something to give them. What else can we do when they knock?"

"Let them knock. They'll soon go away."

It was unlike her to speak so brusquely, especially of children So after supper he went to the front hall and put the lights out, hoping that they would see the house in darkness and not come. It was unkind, but better, in some ways, than turning them away without a gift.

Already their shrill voices sounded in the street, and looking out through the darkened door he saw a group turning the corner and coming towards the house. He found himself consciously wishing that they would go right by, that they would take their baskets and go on to some other house. And when he saw two small figures detach themselves from the group and come down the path towards the door, he stood very still in the darkness.

They stopped on the step and in small piping voices sang: "Shell out, shell out," and he thought it must be miserable for them standing outside in the dark. They knocked on the door and he heard them whisper to each other.

"They must be out," one said, he recognized the voice as Richard's.

"No, they're not," the other replied, "I saw the light go out just now."

"But they're not coming. Knock again."

Standing silently behind the door, the prisoner of two small boys, he became very conscious of his own size. He wondered what they were saying as they whispered to each other, and when Richard said plaintively: "They're not coming. I'm going on," he opened the inner door quickly and switched on both lights. "Come in," he said heartily, gazing at them as if without recognition. "You're Johnny, aren't you? Then I know who you are, you're Harold." Both of them smiled at him gently, nervously torn between the delight of deception and the awe of their own daring. "No," said Richard softly, twisting on his heel, "I'm Richard."

"But of course you are, I should have known. I'm afraid we haven't got any candy," he added lightly, "We've only just got in. But her, buy yourselves something with this, will you."

He watched them disappear down the path, two small figures dressed ridiculously in the long red curtains, wearing large paper hats and slouching as became the gait of a pirate. Shouldn't have given them that much, he told himself; a quarter would have been more than enough. But then a quarter wasn't what they had come for. He opened the inner door and went through the house to the kitchen.

"Who was that?" she looked up from her book.

"That was Charlie and Richard," he said evenly.

"But why didn't you let them knock?"

"Because they happened to know that we were at home. And because I'm not going to sit around in a dark house waiting for children to knock vainly at our door. I'm going out to buy something now."

"Dear, don't go out," she said gently, "I'll get something now. I suppose it is a little difficult."

"It's not only difficult, it's embarrassing." He was angry at himself for speaking sharply to her. "Shall I help you get the things?"

"No, you have work to do, and I can get it quite easily. Really I can, don't worry about it."

As he sat in his room with the papers spead out on the table, he heard her moving about the kitchen, and he knew that whatever she made would be the most appealing gift any child received that night. She made a dish of thick fudge, moist and dark, and toffee which broke into large shiny pieces, and later, when he went to the kitchen, he saw a plate piled high with pop-corn balls matted together with brown sugar.

"Not for you," she said from the door. She always moved quietly, and even now, after five years, he would still startle to find her standing suddenly beside him. "Do you think I've done enough?"

"Oh, yes, although there does seem to be a horde of them out there."

He drew the curtains aside and they both looked out into the street. The night seemed to be filled with children, and with the cries of children as they ran from house to house. At the other end of Deanvale someone had lighted a fire.

He could not ignore the sounds; they forced themselves through into his mind and he found himself reading without any knowledge of what he read, his eyes travelling back and forth across the page while he listened intently to the muffled cries of the children outside. They sounded very close, and twice he had heard footsteps on the walk, but there was no sound at the door and he wondered where the children were. They must be at the other end of the street, or standing around the fire.

He knew that she too would be waiting now, troubled and yet refusing to be troubled. And when, late in the evening, there had been a knock at the door he heard her moving quickly from her chair. "I'll get it," he said, "you get the things."

He met her coming back from the kitchen carrying the two plates and she was smiling. "It was a cabbie," he said, "wanted to get to Greenfield." She stood hesitantly in the middle of the room holding the plates as if she had nowhere to put them.

"They must be at the other end of the street," he said. "Certainly they're making enough noise down there to raise the dead."

"There's been one little brat—the Long's child I think—screaming at the top of his voice all evening."

"Like father, like son? Of course, we are a little off the beaten track, and the fact that the street is so dark makes it no more appealing."

It was, in part, the lack of lights, especially when all the other streets looked bright and cheerful. It was nothing else, he knew that; nothing more fundamental than coincidence, for it was unreasonable to think that children would conspire among themselves and plan so subtle a punishment. And yet, one never knew with children; they seemed to sense what adults could not see. Living closer to instinct, they lived closer to truth, and they were always honest.

He waited patiently at the corner, unashamed of his intention. He told her that he was going to see Bill Stokes for a minute. Behind the light of the pumpkin, she was sitting in the room with her book, and he saw again the delicate pain which had crossed her face when the cabbie knocked. She would dislike going to the kitchen now, not wanting to face the gifts which obtruded themselves into the room like the possessions of a loved one recently dead.

And then he saw them, coming down Deanvale towards him. They walked slowly, staggering under the weight of their loads.

"Hi," he called out, "where you going?"

"We're going home," a little boy said in a frightened voice. "Yeah, we've got to go home. We should have been in at nine o'clock."

"Have you got much?" he asked jokingly, standing in front of them.

"Sure," they replied complacently.

"I tell you what," he lowered his voice confidentially, "there's a house over there where they've got great loads of candy."

The group group stood still for a moment, considering, and then the little boy said: "Aw, we got enough."

"They've got great lumps of fudge and toffee," he added lightly, "I know because I've seen them." The group wavered about its leader, torn between fear and desire.

"I dunno," the little boy demurred, and then added truculently: "I got to get home."

"It won't take you a second," he tried to be casual, "and then you can eat the fudge before going to bed."

He watched them trail off towards the house, clinging tenaciously to their baskets and swinging their bodies against the weight. They walked up to the front door in a ragged single file and he heard them knock. They were too tired to cry: "Shell out." And then he walked away from the house down the brightly lighted street where the wrappings from a hundred parcels scattered indiscriminately.

like a baby tornado, and exclaimed, "Oh, here you are at last, Mr. Douglas! Could you wait for a moment please? Do sit down."

I sank into the nearest chair. As the door of the office was opened by Miss Smythe, I heard the horrible cackle of my dentist as he cracked some graveyard joke. Then came the hideous whir of the drill. I closed my eyes in agony. A muffled sob broke the tense silence, and I saw that there was someone else in the tiny anteroom — a very frightened lad of about eight, with tear-stained cheeks, and swollen red eyes. His lips were trembling, and his chin wobbled piteously. I felt my lips begin to quiver in sympathy.

To avoid a complete breakdown, I clutched at the nearest magazine. It was a medical journal, and I opened it at random. I froze in horror. Before me was a huge diagram of a huge tooth with a huge cavity. The article was entitled "Tooth Decay in Canada." As I shut the magazine hurriedly, I involuntarily slid my tongue cautiously into a sizeable cavity in my molar. Yes, it was still there, and acknowledged its presence with a short, sharp stab of pain.

As I threw the magazine savagely back on the table, the boy ceased sniffling, and regarded me with sudden interest. Just as we were going to begin a friendly conversation, since we were fellow-victims condemned to the same torture, Miss Smythe breezed in.

I looked hopefully at the boy, but she informed me succinctly that I was next, and propelled me into the inner sanctum of the fiend who awaited me. Just as we entered, one of my friends, looking as if he was about to faint, tottered out. The door closed with a dismal bang.

Whenever I see Dr. Cural, I shudder. I often wonder why I don't hear the rattle of bones when I behold him, for he is the nearest thing to a skeleton that I have ever seen. His skin is so tightly stretched over his tall, loosely-jointed frame that his bone almost protrude through it. It has an unhealthy, colorless, grey white tint, like that of a cadaver's skin. Atop his white coat, which looks like a shroud, his bald head perches like a gleaming death's-head. Contact with his cold, clammy hands reminds me unpleasantly of the grisly, loathsome, touch of the dead. Of course, I may just be prejudiced.

As I came in, Dr. Cural was rubbing his long, lean hands together like a miser, and cracking his knuckles horribly. Suddenly he turned around. A grin of sheer delight and anticipation creased his face, and revealed his sharp, pointed teeth, which always remind me of a hungry wolf. His bulging eyes shone with ill-concealed joy at the coming torture.

"Well, well, Mr. Douglas," he cackled. "How are your teeth?" he inquired eagerly in a I-hope-they - are-bad-so-I-can-have-some-fun tone.

I wet my lips nervously, and stared back at him like a hypnotized robin looking into the eyes of a tabby who is about to make a meal of him.

At this moment, Miss Smythe, an athletic, super-efficient, tall Amazon with big, blue, cow-like eyes and frizzy blonde hair, rushed up behind me. I was too weak to even struggle against her tackle, but I do think it was rather cowardly of her to attack a helpless man from behind. With frightening efficiency, she shoved me into the chair, and deftly tucked a napkin under my chin. I was trapped.

I closed my eyes, and waited for death. I hoped that it would be swift and merciful. Now I know how a helpless mass of clay under the competent hands of a modeller feels.

As I felt myself jacked up, the doctor gave a low, gleeful chuckle. Little streams of perspiration seeped down the lines of my wrinkles, and then gently dribbled into my ears, for my head was tilted back. I was helpless.

Suddenly I had an inspiration. I began to babble about my wife, the baby, mother-in-law, anything . . . Like a hot knife cutting through butter came the dread command: "Open please."

My prattle ended ingloriously in an inarticulate gurgle as the dentist pried my mouth open. I promptly closed it again. When I heard a yell of rage and pain, I was blissfully happy. I had bitten my tormentor.

Then came a splutter of oaths, and Miss Smythe's delighted giggle. Again he ordered, "OPEN OR . . . !" I opened.

"Wider! Wider!" yelled my tyrant. I opened until I was sure that he could see yesterday's supper in my stomach.

"Ah ha!" I heard my torturer comment, and to my sensitive ears it sounded like a paean of praise. Then he jabbed something sharp into the raw nerves of my molar cavity. I rose six inches into the air, and emitted a yell like a stuck pig. This time the dentist removed his fingers in time.

"Mr. Douglas," he said seriously, albeit maliciously. "I am sorry (the big liar!) to say that you have a large cavity in your right back molar. Very bad! We'll have to fill it, or pull it out."

"Pull it out!" I yelled entreatingly. At that moment anything was preferable to drilling.

"Pull it out?" he echoed in mock astonishment and sorrow. "No siree! We'll fill it. Why lose a tooth?" Why indeed!

"Freeze it! Freeze it!" I bellowed in despair.

"All right, sir," He sounded disappointed.

As I heard him rattling among his instruments, I opened my eyes a trifle. I hurriedly closed them again; they had encountered the wriggly end of the drill right above me.

Soon, too soon, my tormentor was back at my side. As I opened my mouth cavernously at his repeated command, I felt his fingers slide lovingly inside. "This won't hurt a bit," he assured me cheerfully, and I felt the sickening jab of the needle. He lied—it did! I emitted a faint "ah".

Then the injection took effect, and I felt my jaw growing numb. I denied this to Dr. Cural, but after five minutes he began to drill. It was exquisite torture, although, theoretically, I wasn't supposed to feel a thing. Who of us doesn't know the nerve-wracking rasp of the drill against enamel, and its malicious eternal whine?

After eons of time, during which my pores worked over-time, and I deteriorated into a sodden mass of helpless flesh and quivering nerves, the drilling ceased. Miss Smythe gurgled sympathetically, and mopped at my streaming brown solu- ously. I lay back like a limp rag

After flushing out my mouth, putting cement and other terrible tasting things inside, the torture began anew after the cement had set. I gave a helpless little blea and a solitary, hot tear rolled pit fully across my cheek into my ear; I felt it trace its slow cour down my ear channel. The dr worked on incessantly.

When it ceased for a moment whispered weakly, "Is it all over "Oh no!" he assured me cheerfu "I still have to trim off the edge

Again I suffered the tortures the damned. And then it was over! Miss Smythe said gen "You can open your eyes now Douglas, and go home."

I stared at her blankly. I surprised to see the sun gleami on the array of instruments. T with a shock I realized that world was still going on. Faint hop stirred within me. I moved one f experimentally. I was still alive!

Dr. Cural's voice floated to through a sudden burst of glor rainbows. "That will be five dol please." Five dollars! At that ment I would have given hi hundred — it was so good to alive!

I sprang to my feet, and thr the money at Miss Smythe, had a when-will-your-appointme be look on her face. I leered umphantly at Dr. Cural, who his habitual look of disappo ment when another victim is ping from his clutches. Adeptly dodged Miss Smythe's outstretch hand, and skipped out of the fice. I scarcely noticed the big lad in the anteroom. I felt like boy playing hookey.

I danced down the stairs, had no wish to encounter the tor leprauchan again. I pirou out onto the street, and felt kissing everybody. People regar me oddly, but I didn't care!

Suddenly soberness fell over like a cloud, for the inevit thought that in another six mon I would be back in that tor chamber had come to me like bolt from the blue. Like a moulting, I shed little bits of h piness all the way down the I'm sure that you could have the little heaps if happiness w solid thing. Finally, the last ment of my primitive joy had g and I was as unhappy as an u taker without business. Wild whirled through my brain like ulas. Should I get false Should I? Should I?

But a little voice, which was to be denied, whispered, "You very well that in six months' you will be sitting in that again." And, I will.

the policeman, having been ce deflected from his immedi- quarry, fell into a state of nfusion and said that he would the sergeant of police.

hen the lights in the theatre d flickered once to announce impending concert, and e theatre had grown et — waiting for our small ay to unfold — Celina pluck- me by the arm and said: ome." Very quietly she car- her chair into the side al- e and placed it there with a d view of the stage. I fol- ed close behind her and a ef pause while all our front friends watched the man- uvre intently, they, in turn, ied their chairs into the side oves until the front row had ased to exist. Not a moment er there was a loud noise at entrance to announce the ival of the sergeant of police. The sergeant marched to the ut of the theatre, turned de- rately and faced the whole dience. The house became et. Having scanned the rows faces in a leisurely fashion, eyes came to rest on the tleman in the aisle seat of front row. Looking down on as though from a great ght he said: "I order you to move from that seat."

"Why?" asked the man angrily. "Why?" repeated the sergeant with raised eyes, "you know very well why. Because the front row is reserved for the Minister of the Interior."

"But this isn't the front row," exclaimed the man, turning to those about him for support.

"What do you mean, it isn't the front row?" sputtered the sergeant, his confidence weakening visibly. "And you be quiet," he ordered the manager, "I'll handle this."

"This is the second row," the man said in a loud voice.

"But you are mad," exploded the sergeant, glancing about him quickly in a furtive attempt to fathom the man's meaning.

"Look," he yelled, "look if this isn't the front row. You are trying to make a fool out of me," he lashed the air with his arms. "I'll teach you. I'll teach you to make a fool out of me," and immediately ordered the two officers to throw the man out.

The two policemen dragged the irate citizen out of his seat and up towards the entrance of the theatre. The entire second row, aided by a few volunteers from the third and fourth rows, fought valiantly to keep the man inside the theatre. The manager wrung his fat hands in a perfect anguish of despair, knowing that an injustice was being committed, yet certain that if he tried to correct it, complete chaos would result. He followed the tide of battle up the aisle in a state of fluttering panic, and at that moment the house plunged into darkness.

While the sounds of the struggle diminished towards the entrance and grew faint in the street, the orchestra leader brought his nervous musicians to order and the music commenced. In a remarkably short space of time the house was again quiet and the concert had begun.

Celina listened attentively through the prelude, her delicate profile calm and beautiful in the faint light from the stage. But when the chorus entered and commenced to sing, a shadow crossed her face; and when the singing had continued for at least ten minutes she turned to her neighbour and in a loud whisper asked: "Is this going to be all singing?"

The man nodded.

"But we don't want to hear singing," she complained — as though we had been lured into the place under false pretenses.

"No," I whispered back hoarsely, "no, no."

"Then let us go," she said.

And together we walked across to the centre aisle and up the long and solitary corridor out into the night.

ESSAY

A Star Over My Head

Ian Vorres

I was standing indecisively at the corner of one of Toronto's busiest intersections, wondering whether to seek haven at the nearest bar or rush home before the storm broke. In the distance thunder pounded the horizon with fists of a cyclops. All around me crowds were scurrying down avenues in twisted throngs of nervousness. An endless stream of faces, bleak and waxen, kept brushing me by, faces that were strained and distorted by a tension dangling from the sky. The air was tense with a panic that grasped the spirit of the city and errupted in the shuttle of steps, the frantic honks of cars, the shrill whistle of policemen, the suppressed hysteria of laughing women. Spurned by anguish, people were dashing headlong into a maze of senseless directions, all ensnarled in the whirl of traffic and the jarring of revolving doors. Streets lay gasping in the tentacles of the storm that kept looming around corners, and was sliding with the speed of an octopus over the city's pulse. Lightning was now tearing through shadows and neon lights down the wind-swept facades of darkened buildings. Everything under my eyes blurred away, as if faces, shapes and things, only seconds ago mirrored clearly in a pool, were suddenly torn to pieces by little eddies and currents.

I was lost in a world that had left the moorings of reality. Only the newspaperboy at my side, with his keenness and businesslike pep, had retained a degree of realness. The sole part of him that shared the panic of the crowds, was an uncombed tuft of red hair tossing fire in the air. He resembled a magician ready to perform a most impossible trick. His freckled face twisted into a roguish grimace, as he shouted himself hoarse: "Buy the Toronto Daily Star, get your star, your Staaar . . . .". My gaze automatically turned to the sky, and I wondered how the stars that minutes ago were bristling over my head, had all disappeared behind a sinister blanket of clouds. My attention was entirely directed to the vanquished stars, when a hollow roar inundated the earth with howling winds and torrents of rain. Dimly through the noise I could hear the paperboy's voice: "Buy a Star to put over your head; buy a Star to keep dry." I slipped three cents into his hand and bought myself a Star. For an instant I had visions of being a future realtor, buying and selling interplanetary property. I tossed my Star over my head and blinded by its circumference, I launched into a chain of fearful adventures: Crossing the street against the full glare of a red light, I was bruised by the fender of a car; as I jumped to safety on the opposite corner, I smashed into a towering obstacle I vaguely recognized as a swearing policeman; the rebounce sent me flying over a garbage can and landed me on the neck of a short, stubby gentleman whom I promptly carried down with me into a well-chosen pool of water and slush. The poor man gave a groan reminiscent of a bullfrog drowning in a swamp. I raised my Star to have a better view of events on earth, and what I saw was enough to paralyze the toughest of souls: Staring at me from beneath, with the eager gleam of a cannibal ready ready to consume his victim, was none other than my professor of philosophy, who for the last two years had made it a hobby of failing me consistently. Raising a trembling finger to the sky (past the rags of paper still clinging to my head), I mumbled apologetically. "The Star over my head was blinding me Sir . . ." "Sta or no stars over your head" prostrate professor barked, obviously not your lucky neither today nor for the year come!"

I am still consistently fail my philosophy at the univ sity.

Who are you, lone black woman
With your drawn white face?
And why do you echo the elemental sob
Yet physically re-lived explosive pulmonary instances?

Are you perhaps a wife hoping for the return
From the tragedy-rocked mine-shaft
Of your man?

And what are you thinking . . . or feeling?

Do your organs ache and twinge
Where your man will never clasp you again?
Or does the front (detachable-feeling) plate across the brow
Through the hot tempest of explosion
Seering, ache as if through excess of ice-cold water-drinking
. . . And all for pain of fearful thinking to your children's future?
Or do the ribs where they unite at the breast-bone
Want to fly madly in and out simultaneously;
In, because your many anguished, long-drawn sobs have left a vacuum . . .
Out, because of the thousand still-born cries yet languishing for exit in the dark womb implacable of your insistent heart?
And does your stomach behind the navel wish to rush in and flow in sympathy up to nirvana in the lungs and heart?
Or do you deceive yourself?
Are you hungry?
Are you empty with apprehension
For your own future?
Sobbing for the cold?
Fearing next week's rent,
Not lack of custom-staled sex?
. . . And who will paint the cupboard now?

ISS SEMINAR IN INDIA
40 CANUCKS TO FLY

Forty Canadian university students should be going to India this year, to take part in the fifth International Summer Seminar. The site and other details of this year's seminar were announced yesterday in a release from International Student Service, the seminar's sponsors.

The Canadian participants will receive scholarships including free board, room and tuition for the five-week program, and travel expenses to and from India.

One hundred and twenty students in all will participate in the seminar. Besides the Canadians there will be 40 from South-East Asia and the same number from "other countries".

Theme of the five-week program will be "The Human Implications of Technological Change." This subject will be discussed with particular reference to the peoples of Asia, with comparisons being drawn with other areas represented at the seminar, ISS announced.

The seminar will be held from May 28 to July 2. Canadian participants will be flown to India to arrive on time. Director of studies will be Warden Nicholas Ignatieff of Hart House.

Canadian students taking part will be selected on the basis of leadership qualities and academic ability, the ISS release said. Applications will be open to all faculties. Preference will be given to senior undergraduates, and recent grads, who will be returning to a Canadian university in the fall.

The Asian students will come from India, Pakistan, Burma, Thailand, Malaya, Indonesia, and Ceylon. The other 40 students will come from the United States, European countries, Australia, and New Zealand.

In addition to the core program of study, the group will visit and discuss with responsible officials some of the programs undertaken to meet the problems of the area. These include irrigation projects, rural educational projects, health centres.

Discussion at the seminar will also include the philosophic and religious outlook of the Asian peoples.

Besides Warden Ignatieff, the staff will include three Canadian university professors, and members of university staffs from South-East Asia.

Estimated cost to Canada of the seminar will be $65,000, according to ISS, which adds "this is less than it costs to train and equip one fighter pilot." The money is to be raised from government, university, and private sources.

In describing the aims of the seminar, the ISS release said it will not be a business conference nor a meeting of a learned society, but "an international community group, joined together for a common program of study."

Seminar Administration will be in the hands of a staff member of Canadian ISS, in co-operation with the South-East Asian Field Office of World University Service, which ISS represents in Canada.

Application forms for the Canadian students will be available from the External Affairs Committee of the Students' Council, or from the National ISS Office at 43 St. George St.

This is the fifth such seminar sponsored by Canadian ISS. Previous ones have been in Germany, Holland, France and Canada.

Lester Pearson

L. Pearson Grad Installed Tonight

Two of Victoria College's most nous alumni are returning to today. Lester B. Pearson, inister of External Affairs is turning to be installed as Chanlor of Victoria University at ceremony in Convocation Hall 8.00 p.m. Another Vic Alumni, eutenant-Governor-elect L. O. Breithaupt, will be the guest speaker at a luncheon being held at the Victoria Board of Regents.

Pearson graduated from Victoria College in 1919 before going to Oxford where he received both a B.A. and an M.A. He returned to Toronto in 1924 and lectured for two years in Modern History before being made an assistant professor.

In 1928, Pearson became the first secretary of the Department of External Affairs. He was appointed as a special assistant to the League of Nations in 1933. After serving as Canadian Minister to the United States for three years, he was the Canadian Ambassador in Washington from 1945 to 1946. The first Canadian Minister to the US was another Vic grad, the Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey.

The Board of Regents of Victoria College are holding a luncheon for the Chancellor at Burwash Hall as part of the installation. The Principal of Queen's University will be present to represent the Universities of Canada and Dean Beatty of the Faculty of Arts will represent the University of Toronto. After the installation, a reception will be held in honor of the new Chancellor and his wife.

The Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry and Regimetal Parade Band will also be present. Vic publicity director Ed File said that far from detracting from the solemnity of the occasion, the SCGLIRPB will represent a "spontaneous outburst of student enthusiasm" befitting the installation of an old Vic Grad.

Blues Trounce Carabins 9-4 Ernie Frey Gets Hat Trick

By BARRY THOMAS

The Hockey Blues came up to true form last Friday night at Varsity Arena when they whipped the league-leading Montreal Carabins 9-4 in a free wheeling game in which 21 penalties were handed out. For the Blues it was their best effort to date and the way they played against the Montrealers was a good indication that they are going to be hard to beat from here on in.

Captain Ernie Frey led the Varsity parade with the hat trick, scoring three goals in succession during the first period and adding two assists later on in the game. Jack Wheldrake and Jack MacKenzie followed close behind with two goals and two assists each. Don Rope and Norm Fox were the other Varsity marksmen.

The Montrealers semed to be a shadow of the former great college teams that have competed here. Their defence was generally weak and at times next to nil while goalie Marcel Auger had a bad night. Andre Charest who played almost 60 minutes on defence was obviously too tired to do his regular job of sparking the Carabins' attack. Coach Arthur Therrien used only two lines most of the night with both of these lines being outbumped by the aggressive Blues. Consequently the pace was too fast for the Carabins and many of their dipsy-doodle attacks failed to materialize.

Claude Hotte was the best forward for the visitors, and brought the Carabins back into contention

All last week a Red Cross worker, in the line of duty, spent her mornings showing eager male students how they could arrange to give blood. She left on Friday.

Red Cross Denies Having Sold Blood To Local Hospitals

There is no truth in the rumor circulating around the campus that at the time of the Noronic disaster blood donated to the Red Cross was sold by Toronto General Hospital, according to officials in both the hospital and the Red Cross.

The rumor was brought to light at the last meeting of the Students' Administrative Council when Paul Forestell, IV St. Mike's, asked the council if any of the blood being donated in the Red Cross campaign would be given to local hospitals for "civil defence." Forestell said that two students in his college had told him that at the time of the Noronic fire, blood that had been donated to the Red Cross for nothing was sold by Toronto General Hospital.

The National Commissioner of the Red Cross Society, Dr. Stanbury, told The Varsity that he is quite certain that the Red Cross did not supply blood to Toronto General at that time. He said that there was no danger of Red Cross blood being sold as any hospital receiving blood has to sign a contract that it will not sell blood.

Dr. Stanbury said that the bulk of the blood is going to the armed forces in Korea. He said that the Red Cross had agreed to send 10,000 bottles of dried plasma to Korea and that about [illegible] 000 bottles have already been delivered; one bottle of dried plasma is roughly equivalent to three bottles of whole blood. The Society hopes to send the remainder by the end of March.

Some of the blood will be stockpiled for civil defence.

In the Toronto area the Red Cross only supplies blood to Bynybrooke and Chorley Park Military Hospitals, according to Red Cross officials and at the time of the Noronic fire they could not have given other hospitals a list of names of donors with rare types of blood.

The Toronto General Hospital has its own blood bank, according to Dr. Doyle of the hospital staff and he does not believe that Red Cross blood entered the hospital at this time. He said there is no charge for blood given to patients in the public wards.

When the subject of the Blood Donor Campaign was raised at the last SAC meeting, finance commissioner Bud Trivett said that perhaps many students did not realize how many Canadian universities have had similar campaigns and how high a percentage of the student body has given at some of these universities. Trivett cited figures as ranging from 80 to 90 per cent of the campi. Shirley Bratt, III OT, added that 80 per cent of the men at Kingston Penitentiary had donated when a similar donor campaign was held there.

City Hall Probes Phony Ball Game

By HUGH NIBLOCK

The ugly head of commercialized sport reared itself on our campus last Friday. From latest reports, City Hall has assigned a special committee to investigate this shameful display of game fixing.

The incident referred to is the Porter Trophy Grudge Match between the News and Sports departments of the local undergraduate paper. The news team, heavy favourites at game time, came out of the contest on the short side of a 37-31 count.

This fact alone caused no end of raised eye-brows among the boys in the back room. In a short interview in his office in the lower depths of a nearby hotel, Big John from Sunnyside, local book, stated that seeing as how in his books the news team had a decided edge over the lowly sports collection, something is rotten. It is a well-known fact that as Big John says, "according to his book", it is no doubt a sure thing. He continued to say that when well-known hoop stars like Jerry "Michigan" Brown, Frank "Flash" Moritsugu, Rich "Pin-Stripes" Anco, Hugh "the hat" Niblock can barely manage to scratch the score sheet, something is crooked. It is a well-known fact that when Big John says that something is crooked it is no doubt a sure thing.

Even at the beginning, when the teams lined up you could see that there was something wrong—the referee was Robert B. "Long-Sight" Dnieper, an ex-sports scribe for The Varsity. The choice of referee was agreed upon by both teams. This fact alone is no small item when such a well-known character as "Long-Sight" Dnieper is involved.

However all caution was thrown to the wind which was blowing from the general direction of Dnieper. The game itself is hardly worth mentioning as there was nothing spectacular to be noted with the exception of a dazzling hidden ball play executed by the female segment of the news team.

Denise "Buffalo" Richards, Pearl "OP" Parnes, Barb "Bo-Peep" Browne, Marg "Oshawa" Welch and Elinor "Longshot" Strangways deadlocked the game in the late part of the fourth quarter for the news department. They had the unfortunate sporters completely bewildered by this hidden ball play until referee called sports for illegal use of hands and awarded these said sports types twelve free throws. This, of course, was the deciding incident in the game.

The investigating committee on the case seems to feel that the power house usually floored by the news department made things a little obvious by continuing to slip the ball into their own basket.

If it hadn't been for the undying honesty of the time-keeper the news team would have probably again come out the victors. However as the contest grew closer he blew his whistle to end the game, pocketed his new crisp dollar bill and has not been seen since. Three cheers and a huzzah for the time-keeper.

Despite the undying attempt of the sports team in winning the game the newsies looked far better in losing. This is probably the reason for the big investigation. As Big John would say "when I places my pennies on a pony I expects the nag to at least run the right way." It is a well-known fact that when Big John says a pony is running the wrong way it is no doubt a sure thing.

Downtown Pros Talk on Press

During the next two weeks, The Varsity is bringing in professional help to tell its staff—and the rest of the university—some of the basic concepts of journalism.

Four prominent downtown pressmen will be coming up, starting next Thursday, to talk on various fields of newspaper work in a series of noon-hour lectures.

Starting off, on Feb. 7, will be Ken McTaggart of The Globe and Mail, speaking on Newswriting. McTaggart was awarded a prize as best Canadian reporter of 1951 for his coverage of the discovery of Chubb Crater in Labrador.

"The Dean of Canadian Sports-writers—Ted Reeve— will talk on Monday, Feb. 11, on the problems of his special field. Reeve writes a daily sports column for the New Telegram.

The art of Reviewing will be the subject of Nathan Cohen — CBC drama critic—on Wednesday, Feb. 13.

Final talk in the series will be given the next day by Wesley Hicks, Telegram feature writer.

"These talks are being given to explain some principles of newspaper work to students who do not work on The Varsity, as well as those who do," explained Varsity editor Barb Browne.

"As the newspapers grow in importance, it is more necessary to understand how they work. There has been many attempts to show the evil of the press in recent years, without realizing why these problems occur. We hope to correct this condition in our series of lectures", she added.

The basic purpose of the modern newspaper is to present the daily news in an impartial manner, she explained. The proportion of coverage—how much is devoted to world news, how much to sports, how much to sensationalism—must be determined by the paper's staff. This in turn will depend on the group for which the paper is published.

However, at a recent Hart House debate, it was suggested that the press must do more than inform —it must also stimulate thought through it editorial pages. It must also educate the public in fields other than of the current happenings, according to Maclean's editor Ralph Allen.

The press must guard against irresponsibility at all times, warned Varsity News Editor Ian Montagnes. This could be accidental mistakes in facts or deliberate falsefication of news designed to promote a paper's "pet" policy.

'But before criticizing the press too much for its errors, or for incomplete stories, you must remember the speed and tension under which all stories are written," he added. "Often there is not enough time to get the full story. However, errors—or irresponsibility—in one paper will nearly always be checked by other members of the press."

New Canadian Art Hart House Show Largest Since War

A unique Art Show opens in Hart House today. The paintings in the show are all the work of new Canadians, who came to Canada after the end of the second World War.

The largest Hart House show since the Armed Services Exhibition during the war, this will be the first thrown open to the general public, who will be admitted Saturday and Sunday afternoons from 2 to 5.

The show is sponsored by a group of six southern Ontario galleries in order to help new Canadian citizens feel themselves to be an integral part of Canada's social and cultural life, and to point out to the Canadian people the contribution and influences which are being brought to Canadian culture by recent immigrants. Dave Gardner, Assistant to the Warden, said it is hoped that by opening Hart House to new Canadians, they and their friends will be able to come in contact with the University and Hart House through the exhibition.

Warden Ignatieff expressed the hope that the show will convince these new Canadian citizens, most of whom could only come to this country as manual labourers, that, in Canada, their cultural abilities and aspirations will be respected for their worth, no matter what they make their living.

The difficulty, he added, lies in the fact that there are two [illegible] ed and established schools of art in Europe, while Canadian critics are all of the same age. The Warden said that many of these new Canadian artists would have ideas differing from the [illegible] ent artistic trends in Canada. One of the purposes of the show, he said, was to help the new Canadians see that Canada is moving along different lines in art.

The show, occupying 250 running feet of wall space in the Gallery, the East Common Room, the Map Room, and the Reading Room, continues until February 17. It will be open to women of the University from 4 to 5 on first Wednesday afternoon and from 4 to 6 on the afternoon of the 13th, when it is hoped that Dr. Bice, Curator of the London Art Gallery, who conceived and arranged the show, will speak.

Simultaneously with this show the Print Room will feature a contrasting Print Show, to illustrate and explain the modern movement in twentieth century painting.

Hoskin Accidents Normal In Number

The Hoskin Avenue traffic problem seems settled—at least so far as the city is concerned. The following is a letter received by E. A. Macdonald, Secretary-Treasurer of the Students' Administrative Council, from the Department of City Planning and Surveying:

Dear Mr. Macdonald:

I would acknowledge with thanks your letter of Jan. 10 concerning the need for traffic control signals at the intersection of Hoskin Avenue and Hart House Road. In response to similar requests over the past several years, I have had numerous field investigations carried out at this intersection.

Our studies show that the traffic flow at this point is not unduly heavy, and that many gaps for pedestrians appear continuously. It has been observed that many students take unnecessary risks in attempting to cross Hoskin Avenue immediately, rather than waiting a few seconds for a gap in the traffic flow. Certainly, some pedestrian delays occurred during the peak traffic flows, but it should be noted the peak rush hour flow occurs before the morning classes and after the late afternoon classes. There were few students attempting to cross at the peak period.

I have had a pedestrian crosswalk painted at this location and large messages stencilled on the pavement reading "Slow, School Crossing". It was noted that the location of the bus stops at the end of the painted crosswalk was somewhat hazardous, in that pedestrians cross in front of and behind the stationary Hill and Wellesley buses, without looking beyond. A representative of the TTC was present at a recent meeting of the Toronto Trafic Conference which discussed the details of our field reports, and he will consider the relocation of the bus stops to decrease this hazard.

The Toronto Traffic Conference is of the firm opinion that traffic control signals are not warranted at this location. The conditions which occur here during short intervals of the day are similar to conditions found practically at every intersection on busy streets throughout the city.

Yours truly,
(signed) H. R. Burton,
City Traffic Engineer.

This is a picture of several frightened co-eds seen last year when the Hoskin Ave. crossing problem was the result of many letters to the editor. Last year the problem was unsettled. This year the problem is no longer, according to the Toronto Traffic Council. However scenes such as pictured above may still be noted morning, noon and late afternoon as classes change.

Hoarse Davies Silent —Mrs. Davies Speaks

After last year deciding that Canada is culturally constipated, the campus debaters this year concluded that "the Canadian Environment is conducive to a distinctive culture," by a vote of 63 to 56.

The occasion was the Trinity College Centenial Debate held last Thursday in Strachan Hall, when Trinity went wide open and let co-eds, guests from other faculties on the campus, and alumni vote on the resolution.

The debate took an unusual flavour from the beginning. The guest speaker, Robertson Davies, was found to be suffering from a throat disorder, and had to have his speech read by Mrs. Davies. The attitude of the Government speaker was aptly summed up in Mrs. Davies' curt rebuttal at the end of debate: "It is a matter of total indifference to this house which way the vote goes."

In her main speech for the Government, Mrs. Davies stated that no nation really wants cultural development if it really understands it, for if they get it, someone's toes are being stepped on. "People don't thrive in the fact that they are undergoing a great cultural development," she said.

Pointing out that great culture could only come through great geniuses, she warned we must not mistake great nationalistic enthusiasm for real genius. "If we insist too much on Nationalist Culture," she said, "we will fail—as did Ireland and Scotland whose great men came before nationalism."

First speaker for the opposition was Prof. Lyndon Smith.

"It is the human environment that counts," he said. "It is only with good food and everything that goes with it that one can make demands on the mind and soul."

"A solid efficient government with a good surplus looking after the people is not conducive to any culture," he stated. "When people feel deeply enough about something to fight for it they will come up with something constructive. We go to war because we don't have the inevitable mind to think up any other way of getting out of the difficulty," he said.

"The solution as I see it," he said, "is in the imagination. Culture involves the life of a nation, giving it a real flavour, or attitude toward ultimate things. It is this attitude which in the imagination is art, and when forced into reality is morals."

"I cough from the rubble of a decaying mind," said John Bartoon, IV Trin., rising to speak for the opposition. He then went on to give the case that the government should have given, and gave his reasons for opposing it.

"To promote a civilization, a community must support a leisured class, or a state of inequality such as we had in the older civilizations," he said. "The masses are not interested in culture, and in any small Canadian town we find a cultural vacuum filled with a barren sea of materialism," he said. "It is understandable to consider distinctive Canadian Culture—it is a remnant of Nationalism we do not want."

An informal practice around the piano of the Vic Glee Club which will represent the University of Toronto at a Glee Club Festival this spring. At the last SAC meeting this decision was made and the Glee Club was granted $100 toward the rental of Convocation Hall. The Council had thought to sponsor a contest in which to decide the University rep for the Festival but no other clubs were interested in competing.

It is unlikely that Boch beer will be sold in local beverage rooms this spring as a poll of tavern keepers in the district shows that Boch beer sales were not very good last year.

Myra Hess At Massey

Very few seats were empty at Massey Hall last Thursday for Myra Hess's recital, and for those there it was one of the most rewarding musical evenings of the season. Her aim seemed to be to draw everyone there into her circle of friends and play for each individually.

That she was successful in achieving this feeling of intimacy in spite of a prodigious program which, consisting only of three sonatas, was especially unsuited for the purpose, is a tribute to her artistry. Any failure on her part to create this feeling must be attributed largely to a certain aloofness in the audience's attitude towards her, which arose out of profound respect for her.

The program was: Schubert: Sonata in A, Op. 120; Brahms: Sonata in F minor, Op. 5; Beethoven: Sonata in C minor, Op. 111.

Her effortless playing, and lyrical style served the Schubert to perfection. The web of simplicity woven during this number so completely gripped the audience that it was totally unprepared for the heights reached in the Brahms. In this episodic, explosive work, an all-encompassing grasp of the whole enabled her to interlock the episodes successfully and to keep the movements in proportion to one another. Her lyric touch gave a warmth to the work which was unsuspected.

The great Beethoven sonata is exceeding difficult to hold together, with its powerful, almost stormy opening movement and extended adagio for a finale. The problem of the sonata arises in the finale: how to make it complement the first movement and at the same time be neither boring nor disjointed.

At the hands of some pianists this movement degenerates into a series of episodes having little relation to the whole and each having its own climax. However, Myra Hess' relaxed, restrained, lyric playing enabled her to overcome this difficulty and give a magical performance which brought the recital to a most satisfying close and brought her an ovation.

SCIENCE NOTES

Embryo Rags

By ORIE LOUCKS

Woodsman, spare that tree
For they will change it into The Varsity. Oh can't you see
That it would be a sinto.

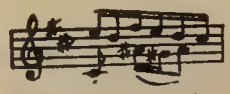
Paper was the original invention of the Chinese. They discovered it as we know it today, made from wood, about 105 AD. It was found that well macerated vegetable fibres could be reformed into a coherent sheet by simply draining off the water and drying them.

The art was carried across Asia by the Arabs who used linen rags instead of wood fibres for their paper. The wonderful new material made its first appearance in Europe about 1200 AD. Even in the new world, cotton and linen rags were the only things used in paper making until the discovery of modern wood pulp processing methods.

All the time the art of paper making was spreading across the continent, demand was doubling for the twofold reason that education was spreading, and the science of printing was facilitating it. A heavy load was thrown on the supply of raw material and efforts were made to find substitute materials of which macerated wood pulp was the only one to get into commercial production by 1850.

Four years later the soda-pulp process was started in which the wood was cooked under pressure in a solution of caustic soda. The caustic disolved out most of the non-cellulose material and left a pulp that could be readily bleached to a good white.

In 1863 the sulphite cooking process was invented. This way the wood was cooked with a solution of calcium bisulphite and sulphurous acid, and the product was a pulp sufficiently white in colour for most purposes without bleaching. There were great difficulties in handling the acid cooking liquor so that this process did not develop too quickly, but at the present time it is one of the most widly used methods of producing chemical wood pulp.



Other processes have been developed recently to break down woods such as pine, using its very long fibres for an equally strong paper. These papers made from the kraft process are usually dark, and are used for packing and bagging in place of burlap sacks.

The different papers as we know them are simply combinations of different chemical pulps along with a base pulp known as groundwood. This is a plain wood pulp made by simply grinding up the very light coloured wood of Canada's spruces until it passes a screening very near that of flour. It is a very low quality pulp and is commonly used in newsprint and cheap boxboard.

The usual composition of the common varieties of paper are as follows:

Strong wrapping paper — kraft pulp.
Light coloured wrapping paper — sulphite or bleached kraft.
Low grade wrapping — Unbleached sulphite and groundwood.
Hangings (Wall-paper) — groundwood and sulphite.
High grade writing paper — bleached sulphite and kraft or rag, or all rag.
Cheap writing paper — repulped paper with bleached sulphite with clay or other filler.
Typewriter paper — bleached sulphite or kraft well beaten; some low grades with groundwood and unbleached sulphite.
Low strength box-board — old paper, groundwood and unbleached sulphite.
Pressed pulp articles (Pie-plates, etc.) — groundwood.
Tissues — bleached or unbleached sulphite or kraft.

Naturally this isn't the whole story, for the process of paper manufacture has become a complex one. This article outlines the plot of what happens between the spruce of the north woods and the moment when the presses roll.

Jan Rubes

Jan Rubes, the basso who came to Canada in 1948 from an initially successful European career, is familiar to Torontonians for his many roles on CBC opera. His Saturday evening concert, the second in Toronto, gavt irrefutable evidence of both his background and his abilities.

The concert opened, perhaps unfortunately, with formal songs of Caldara, Mozart and Beethoven. They seem uninspired, undoubtedly because the singer was noticeably tense and nervous. A flatness or even roughness in the lowest ranges was characteristic of these numbers.

But when Jan Rubes came to the German ballads, the picture changed. He relaxed, smiled, and seemed really at ease with his language. His voice, his face, and his every dramatic gesture contributed to making these songs, as well as the later encore, "Song of the Flea", both convincing and pleasurable.

The English songs, like those Italian ones with which the program opened, were competently executed. The selection was unfortunate, since there was the inevitably unfavourable comparison to Enzio Pinza and William Warfield. The singer seemed particularly unhappy with the dialect of his encor, "Ol' Man River".

Moreover, these songs never seemed to come to life as did the "Suite of Czechoslovakian Folk Songs". Here Jan Rubes was smilingly at home. The appreciative applause with which this suite was received, brought forth a tidbit from the coming "Bartered Bride". Here it was shown that little of the original fun is lost by an English version of the words.

Anyone who missed—and Eaton Auditorium was not full—the death scene from "Boris Godounoff" is today so much poorer in fine musical experience. The restraint, insight, and drama in this aria are convincing proof of Jan Rubes' operatic gifts.

By DAVID PEDDIE

Last Thursday evening the U.C. Players Guild staged two one-act plays, W. H. Auden's THE DOG BENEATH THE SKIN and Bernard Shaw's THE SHEWING UP OF BLANCO POSNET. As is usual with such productions there was a decided lack of smooth professional efficiency, but as is unusual there was a great deal of enthusiasm on the part of both cast and audience, and the enthusiasm of the latter is very important.

Auden's play is quite frankly without characters. It is primarily about a search on the part of a young man for someone or something. But it is a very amusing little piece and the UC actors played it for all the laughs in the few scenes that they presented. Since there was no attempt to show us what the play was about, I can only conclude that they wanted to show Auden's style, and get some different kind of stage experience. I don't think, however, that anyone got very much. There was no attempt at stylized movement, nor poetic diction, nor at any particular meaning that might be inherent in the scenes But it was good for a few laughs.

The other play was one of the Shaw one-acts that should be classed—Tomfooleries, although the author classifies it "A Sermon in Crude Melodrama". Be that as it may, the sermon was just the usual line that we are all pretty wicked and on occasion we are all pretty good, and the law of chance is unpredictable.

A few of the actors understand that they were supposed to relax and try to get the audience to do the same. Don Michel perhaps was the most relaxed and at home in the part of the drunk, Nestor.

The scene of the play is the town-hall in the wild west of the USA and the action is the trial of a horse thief, Blanco Posnet. There are of course many melodramatic complications — the thief is the brother of the local preacher, who travels under an assumed name, the horse belongs to the Sheriff whose brother has further complications. In the end the Sheriff turns out to be very kind and tolerant and above the law as most judges are not.

Stanley Korchuck who played Sheriff Kemp was just right. With restrained and soft-spoken, he had complete control all the time he was on stage. He maintained it against great odds, for Roger Bloomer playing Blanco tried to be cavalier and loud as the quick-witted defendant. Unfortunately he has a trick of pretending he doesn't understand his lines, and how an audience is supposed to follow this type of acting is quite beyond me. Will Chrichton as Elder Dan picked a part for himself (he also directed) in which he could not miss. His voice, face, and style were just right for this hypocritical old reprobate.

The women in the opening scene were all, generally speaking, good they talked easily and naturally and started the proceedings properly. Beverly Simmers as the "eternal woman" Feemy played with enthusiasm and understanding.

All Varsity Revue

Brian Doherty, University College graduate of '26 comments on the All-Varsity Revue. He has produced The Drunkard, and The Red Barn Theatre shows at Jackson's Point.

The boys and girls at Varsity should be tossing high into the February air their hats, caps, and berets, not to mention their assorted scarves and snoods. For the ALL-VARSITY REVUE, complete with songs, skits, and a bevy of campus Cleopatras, will soon be making Hart House once more a place of music and merriment. And this, for many and sundry reasons, is truly a matter for rejoicing.

Revues are one of the most delightful and ingratiating forms of stage entertainment. Unfortunately we see very little of it on this continent these days. Locally, in addition to the ALL-VARSITY REVUE, we are fortunate in having "Spring Thaw" and the "Arts & Letters Club Revue", all of which make a great annual contribution to the gaiety of life in this rather inhibited metropolis. In England, Revues still flourish, the English having a genius for this type of theatre, which has produced some of their greatest stage artists.

Revues are ideally suited to the tastes and talents of University students. They are gay, lively, and impertinent—qualities for which students are traditionally noted. It's the perfect way to poke fun and have fun while you're poking. The basic ingredients of every Revue—satiric sketches and mocking lyrics — afford unique opportunities to blow off intellectual steam and to take a crack at everything from taxes to Truman. And if you happen to run out of ideas? Well—just bring on the girls!

It may surprise some to learn that shows like the coming ALL-VARSITY REVUE are an old annual tradition in several of the most famous Universities in the States. The "Hasty Pudding Cub" at Harvard produced its first musical on December 13th, 1844, and has presented one every year since. Princeton's "Triangle Club" was launched in 1890 with a musical comedy titled "The Honourable Julius Caesar", written by an undergraduate named Booth Tarkington. The "Triangle Club" shows, which are of professional calibre and feature an all-male cast, make an annual Christmas tour which sometimes includes Broadway. Cole Porter, Dick Rodgers, Oscar Hammerstein II, Joshua Logan, and many other celebrities in the Musical field, got their start in these and similar College shows.

Any of the performers in the ALL-Varsity Revue who have serious stage ambitions will find the training invaluable, no matter in what branch of the theatre they may ultimately specialize. This is exactly how Noel Coward acquired his perfect timing and Gertrude Lawrence learned the art of projecting her radiant personality.

Two years ago, when I was auditioning dozens of actors, singers, and dancers, for a series of summer Revues at my Red Barn Theatre, Lake Simcoe, I was amazed how frequently the most impressive performers turned out to be graduates of the ALL-VARSITY REVUE. This experience gave people like Jack Merigold, Jack Northmore, and others, a considerable advantage over those whose training had been confined to straight acting or singing.

The ALL VARSITY REVUE was also responsible for bringing to my notice the clever skits of Don Harron and George McGowan, and the skilful piano playing of Paul Chabot, later incorporated into our Red Barn shows. Other performers who are now making a name for themselves in the professional theatre, and who supplemented the splendid coaching they received from Robert Gill with a yearly frolic in these Varsity musicals, include Murray and Don Davis, Charmion King, Eric House, Ted Follows, Dave Gardner, and many others.

John Pratt, one of the finest comedians we have ever produced, received all his early training in the McGill "Red & White Revues", as did Roy Wolvin, hailed as the "Canadian Cole Porter". This type of theatre training should produce even greater rewards for the participants when TV production starts in Canada. One of the few things that has been clearly established, by the operations in the U.S.A. of this new, and rather terrifying, medium of entertainment, is that it creates an apparently unlimited demand for artists of the Vaudeville and Revue type.

In my day at Varsity, several of the Colleges and Faculties used to put on their own separate shows. The ALL VARSITY REVUE, combining the best talent from the whole University, seems a much better idea. Certainly better than the last "U.C. Follies" in which I participated, when, garbed like one of the witches in "Macbeth", they had me telling fortunes in a tent pitched in one end of the Hart House Common rooms. This monstrous swindle had only one compensation as far as I was concerned, it gave me a chance to tell a girl, whom I particularly disliked, that she was going to be very unhappy in love and end up a medical missionary in Darkest Africa. Yes—I'm sure the Varsity Revues have come a long way since then.

Just one last request to the producers of the show. Let's forget the Subway this year. The people who are supposed to be building it have obviously forgotten it, so why shouldn't you? And what if you can't think of any other topic of fun? Well—bring on the girls!

The INTERVARSITY CHORAL FESTIVAL

Sunday, February 10, 9:00 p.m.

Convocation Hall

NO ADMISSION CHARGE!

All Varsity Revue would be complete without "its curvaceous talent" to quote the description of this picture when it appeared in The Varsity on Jan. 12, 1950. One of the numbers the chorus girls did in this production was called the Teddy Bears Picnic, while another "turn" melted the house with "I've got my love to keep me warm".

Choral Music Will Highlight Coming Week

Toronto plays host to the Inter-Varsity Choral Festival the evening of February 10 in Convocation Hall. This annual event is new to Toronto, as previous festivals were held at McMaster and OAC. It is non-competitive, and consists of mixed choirs from University of Western Ontario, McMaster University, Ontario Agricultural College, and from Toronto, the Victoria College Glee Club.

The idea of these annual festivals grew out of a NFCUS conference some six years ago, which suggested that regional university music festivals be held. The original thought was to make these meetings competitive. However, it was decided that such a system would be unwieldy and that, in any case, the idea of a competitive festival was undesirable.

The Festival will consist of a group of numbers by each choir, with a final group of three numbers presented by the massed choirs. The music will be varied, with everything from religious anthems to the Irving Berlin setting of "Give Me Your Tired, Your Poor". There is no admission charge for the festival. A collection is taken to defray the travelling expenses of the choirs, allowing the audience to pay what they felt the concert is worth. Judging from contributions in previous years, it has been considered highly valuable.

Mystery Quartet Known Skulemen Enter Contest

The "Mystery Quartet" has been identified. The four men who practised anonymously in the corridor beside the Barber Shop in Hart House finally filled out an application for the Quartet Contest as the "Floor Polishers" from Skule last week.

The semi-final rounds for the contest are being held at 1.15 in the East Common Room of Hart House; the first last Friday, the second, tomorrow. Friday's entries were the "Floor Polishers", the "Four Artsmen" and the "Four Minims" from Pharmacy. Tuesday's semi-finalists will be the "Forestry Four", the "Emmanuel Quartet" and the "Four Cadavers" from Meds.

The two groups with the highest point score will be judged for the Finals at the Vic At Home in Hart House Friday night. A guest quartet from McMaster University will also take part in the program at the dance.

Judges for the contest are Ross Workman, Grad., who leads the Hart House sing songs every Tuesday and Friday; L. E. Jones, Assistant Professor of Mechanical Engineering, and Dick Farmer, Secretary of the Music Committee.

The judging will be on points, with 20 points for presentation and entertainment value, 70 points for musical ability, and 10 points for audience appeal.

The contest is sponsored by the House Committee. Sing songs will follow each of the semi-final rounds, to which all House members are invited.

The trophy, won last year by the Emmanuel entry, will be presented to the winning quartet at the dance Friday night. Each member of the winning group will also receive an individual inscribed cup.

Finally Elect 52 SAC Rep At Victoria

Audrey McKim, II, won the retake of the Girls' SAC elections at Victoria College. The repeat election was held on Friday. It was the consequence of over-eagerness on the part of certain scrutineers who started to count the ballots for the first election before all the votes were in. Friday's election brought out only a twelve percent vote.

Blue Trackmen Beat Buffalo, Macmen

The Varsity track team swept a three-cornered indoor meet at Hart House last Saturday afternoon, with 51¼ points to Buffalo Downtown Y's 33½ and McMaster's 20½. Toronto took all four places that counted in the 1,000, placed first, second and third in the mile, and won the relay. Buffalo piled up nearly all their points in jumps, Marmott winning both the high and the broad. McMaster entered only sprinters in the meet.

Best race of the day was the mile, with Church Wortman won in 4:26.7 by the thickness of his shoulder ahead of George Webster. Webster passed Wortman with about 20 yards to go, but the long-legged Wortman made it up again in the last fifty.

Don McFarlane, who broke the record in the 100 at the Intercollegiate meet last fall, took the 50 in 5.6 seconds and tied Toronto's Clint Husband in the 100 in 11.2 seconds. McMaster took another first in the 300, with Koenig edging out Toronto's Kofmel, Wilson and Warga.

Murray Gaziuk won the 600 in 1:17.5, winning his heat by half a lap. Jack Warga placed second winning the other heat.

George McMullen won the 1,000, overtaking Mal Crawford with one lap to go, after Crawford passed him half way through. Doug McEnteer and Gord Banks placed third and fourth respectively to give Varsity a clean sweep of the event.

Varsity's relay team, with Warga running 600, Wilson 150, Kofmel 300, and McMullen 900 yards, edged out McMaster's team of Fisher, Crawford, McFarlane, and Koenig, as Kofbel ate up McFarlane's lead of about eight yards and McMullen pulled ahead in the last leg. Varsity's second team of Crawford, Husband, Banks, and Tilson placed a close second, beating Buffalo by nearly a lap.

Wilson won the shotput for Toronto with a 42' 5½" heave.

Blues' Captain

Bill Huycke, the always dependable Blues captain, who netted ten points in the Varsity-Western game at London, on Saturday. In spite of his steady performance the Varsity team absorbed a 58-to-40 shellacking at the hands of the galloping Mustangs.

Varsity Blows Lead Western Wins 58-46

The Blues went down to their first defeat of the Intercollegiate Basketball season before a race-horse herd of Mustangs Saturday night at London. Western beat the Blues 58-46, running the Blues ragged in the fourth quarter when the home team came from behind a 36-35 deficit.

Star of the game was 5'8" Bill Pataky, who scored 21 points. He broke quickly when he got the ball and used a running one-hand push shot to deadly effect, much like Jack Gray did for Varsity last year. Ray Monnot, who has been Varsity's top scorer for the past few games, got three fouls in the first quarter and was used sparingly afterward. He fouled out early in the last period, having gone scoreless.

The Blues went ahead 18-12 at the end of ten minutes, as Bill Huycke put in two set shots to tie it up. A foul shot put the Blues one ahead. Western went ahead in the second frame as Pataky got hot and started sinking shots.

Toronto went into the second half with five points behind, but with Lou Lukenda covering the backboards like a blanket and Fawcett and Huycke playing steadily on the floor, the Blues went ahead 36-35.

Monnot fouled out fast in the fourth period, and Fawcett and Lukenda followed him soon after, reminiscent of last year's game at Western when Gray, Brennan, and Glover all fouled out almost together. McNichol of Western joined them almost immediately.

This fouling out, together with Western's fast-paced style of play, whipped the tension up. Western's Walt Karabin was heaved from the game after taking a swing at Garry Glover. Karabin is a former teammate of Huycke at Central Y.

Knowing that Western played a fast style of ball, the Blues took it coolly and slowly to keep the pace down, with three men back working the ball in carefully and keeping possession of the ball as much as possible. As a result, they took only 59 shots to Western's 77, sinking a better percentage of their tries than Western did. Pataky took 26 shots himself, almost half as many as all the Blues put together.

Lou Lukenda, besides handling rebounds well, was top scorer with 17. This makes him the Blues' top scorer for the season. Fawcett and Huycke played well in working the ball in, scored nine and ten respectively.

The Blues are almost finished their road games, play all their league games at home except for one at McMaster.

Toronto—Lukenda 17, Huycke 10, Fawcett 9, Binnington 4, Brennan 1, Oneschuk, Maynerick 1, Monnot, Glover 4.

Western—Pataky 21, Karabin 10, Truant 7, Ellis 7, McNichol 6, Pettinger 5, Wigle 2, Prowse.

JV's 69-51 Over OAC

The Varsity JV's started the new basketball season on the right foot Thursday by downing the Guelph Aggies, 69-51. The outcome was neevr in doubt, as Varsity controlled both backboards, with Kettle and Stulac excelling in that department.

Bill Corcoran topped all the hoopsters, garnering 18 points, closely followed by George Stulac with 14. "Sweets" Nielson and Karl Switzer were the high men for the Aggies with 11 and 10 points respectively.

Although handicapped by a small gym, Varsity sped to a 16-7 first quarter edge, completely outclassing the smaller Guelph team. The end of the first half saw the JV's coasting along with a 28-17 lead.

At the beginning of the second half, Guelph began to roll and tallied 10 successive points on an effective fast break before Varsity recovered. Carl Switzer was the payoff man on this play.

The most outstanding player of the game was Doug Kettle. He played a sterling defensive game besides taking time out to score 6 points.

Little Ollie Mandryk was always effective, and finally hit the double score column for 10 points. Garbutt scored 9, Brown 6, and Milne 2 to round out the Blues scoring.

Matmen Even After Jaunt

The Intercollegiate Wrestling Team split with Buffalo and Rochester on their weekend road trip. They lost to the Rochester powerhouse 24-8 but recovered in time to paste Buffalo 19-9. Outstanding men on the trip were Harry Robinson and Bill Chykaliuk both of whom won both of their bouts.

Heavyweight Robinson pinned Ed. Ross at Rochester in 5 minutes and 27 seconds. His best performance came on Saturday when he upset 245 pound Leslie Molnar in the first period. When Harry pinned Molnar, who was 10th choice in the New York Yankee football draft, the whole Toronto team carried Harry off on their shoulders.

In Rochester Wild Bill Chykaliuk despite some bad calls decisioned Hugh Forsythe. This was the first win of the evening there and it made things look a lot brighter for the Blue grapplers. Chyk dropped Julius Perlini of the Buffalo team on Saturday by a score of 8-1.

In a very exciting bout NCAA finalist Larry Wilson of Rochester beat Tommy Hatashita 10-1. Tom made the whole bout rough going for the winner but he didn't have enough to turn the tables. Hatashita recovered the next day to dump Ross Cellino in the second round. Obviously very tired, Tom thrilled the crowd with a top-notch performance.

Newcomer Bill Henderson split two decisions on the trip. He dropped his first encounter on time advantage probably due to nervousness but he looked a lot better the next time out as he decisioned Leon Wiggins 6-1. Joe Goldenberg ran up against the toughest opposition on the road. Fuller of Rochester pinned Joe at 5:37 and Repetski of Buffalo downed him 3-0. Both of the opponents had their better wrestlers in the lower weight brackets and this probably explains the showing in those classes.

Paul Phelan disqualified in the first match but he didn't let this worry him for he won a 6-0 decision in Buffalo. Orie Loucks had a lot of trouble on the trip as he lost two decisions. Wally Pitman also dropped both his bouts with a decision Saturday after a fall Friday. Doug Hamilton pinned his man in an exhibition bout Saturday taking only 57 seconds. No opponent was found for his on Friday night.

The team didn't get back to their hotel until 2:30 Saturday morning after their first dual meet. Two of the boys who were overweight spent the afternoon sweating it out. Coach Kirk Wipper remarked that he was quite satisfied with the team's showing but he was rather displeased with the officiating in Rochester.

JV's Upset 7-4 By OAC Icemen

By BRUCE NORTH

Sparked by the 4-goal effort of wingman Jack Reeves, the OAC hockey crew shocked the small gathering at Guelph last Thursday, and possibly themselves, by defeating the Varsity JV's 7-4. This is the first time the Aggies have beaten the Blues on their home ice since 1938.

Reeves was Johnny-on-the-spot for all 4 of his markers. He scored the first two on long shots from the blueline and the last pair on passouts in front of the net.

The Blues looked like a far different team from the one that defeated Waterloo 15-3 two weeks ago. The small size of the rink might have had something to do with it. All of the other 3 Aggies goals were scored from scrambles in front of the net and the JV's seemed to have trouble in clearing from that area all night.

The game wasn't too rough as Intercollegiate games go, although Varsity's Bob Westlake spent quite a long time in the cooler. He also scored his first goal in many a moon.

The score might have been closer except for the excellent work of Wynch in the Aggies net, and some glaring home town calls by the Guelph referees. The play of Varsity wingman Ernie Bodnar was also impressive both offensively and defensively. Bodnar scored one goal but it was disallowed by the rtferee.

All four Toronto goals were singles scored by Yeo, Dies, Westlake and Davison in that order. J. McLean, Holmes and Tolleavan notched the other 3 Aggies goals.

Vic Seniors Win Edge Meds 38-34

Vic Seniors dropped Pre-Meds 38-34 in one of the best games of the season last Friday. Both teams exhibited some phenomenal shooting that left even the Sr. Blue players who were watching the game commenting on the play.

Vic scored two quick baskets in the opening minutes and they were never headed again. Then the teams traded basket for basket throughout the first quarter. Jim Goodfellow took six shots and scored twelve points to lead the sharp-shooting. Goodfellow didn't score again in the game.

After the start of the second period both teams slowed down. Vic gradually built up a lead until they went up 26-16. Meds looked very tired as they did their best to close the gap. At the period's end the Docs were within only seven points of the winners.

Sparked by Tile who hooped 11, the Pre-Meds boys closed the gap to as close as three points in the last period. Vic managed to hang onto their slim edge and the game ended with the score 38-34.

Next to Goodfellow, Glauin (8) and Rogers (7) were the best for Vic. Copalleno with six was the next best to Tile's performance for Pre-Meds.

on the sideline

By CAROL LOGAN

When the Senior basketball squad takes on Hamilton Normal School in a return match at OCE gym at 6:45 tonight, the Varsity girls will be doing their durndest to record a win. Last Wednesday, the Hamilton teachers pinned the Bluebells to the boards until late in the second half, when the U. of T. team put on an extra burst of speed and enthusiasm, and managed to pull ahead by one slim point. Whether the Varsity crew was suffering from an over-dose of self-confidence, or whether the Green and Yellow opposition was as stiff as it appeared, will be shown by this PM's fracas.

Hamilton's strength is centered in the Waterford line, consisting of Kitty Laning, June Haviland and Mary Ann Langs, who accounted for all of the teachers' 25 points. These three play a fast, close type of ball that is hard to crack. The fate of tonight's game will depend largely on how well the Toronto girls can hold them.

Tonight's game should bring the mystery of just who is on the Toronto line-up to a close. Fourteen girls have been playing in the two games thus far, but the number must be whittled down to twelve. Coach "Mickey" Barnett has set the deadline for tomorrow night. Considering the fact that the Intercollegiate tourney is just four short weeks away time is running short.

Puck Blues Win 9-4 Friday

early in the second period with a pair of goals which narrowed the Varsity lead to a 4-3 margin but goals by Wheldrake and Rope quickly increased the Blues' advantage.

Even though there were 21 penalties, the game was not as rough as the previous week's McGill game. This contest was more wide open with the forwards having a field day. Altogether 31 scoring points were picked up by both teams during the course of the game.

The Blues from the opening whistle turned on the pressure and it wasn't until about the 5 minute mark that the Carabins got their first shot on the Varsity goal. For the Blues Don Rope played a tireless game while turning in his best effort of the season. Wheldrake, MacKenzie, and Frey also did likewise. In general nearly all the Blues contributed their best displays in the 9-4 rout.

Paul Prendergast filled in for the injured Joe Kane on defence and while appearing a little awkward at first he gained confidence as the game progressed. In the second period especially he engineered a couple of good rushes. Fitzhenry, Fasan and Stephen showed improvement over the previous Friday's game. Jack Ross who seemed a bit loose on a couple of the Montreal goals, held the Blues together several times in the third period with some brilliant saves.

Varsity still has to win almost every game from here on in if they hope to overtake the Carabins who are 5 points ahead at present date but having played two more games than the Blues. Laval still holds down second place in the league on the strength of their 7-4 win over McGill last Friday. The Quebeckers will be the visitors here for this Friday's game.

Rink Remarks: Two of the Blues received injuries . . . Don Rope collided with the goal post in a third period scramble but was able to continue . . . Phil Arrowsmith broke his nose in a first period fracas . . . Wheldrake's second goal was a picture play, he soloed around the goal to slip the puck in the corner of the net in true Syl Apps style . . . MacKenzie's second goal also was a good effort . . . lying flat on the ice in front of the goal he slapped the puck under Auger's feet and into the net . . . also their power plays aren't nearly as effective as they should be due to the frequent offsides . . . This is exemplified in the fact that they have failed to score when they have had several two-man advantages . . . the addition of Fox and Vernon strengthened the team considerably . . . the band came up with a sparkling performance playing "Three Blind Mice" when ever Varsity received a penalty and "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" when the Carabins received the gate . . . also they chimed in with "I'm in the Mood for Love" during the Fasan-Quesnel skirmish . . . the crowd filled almost all but the south end of the arena.

U. of Montreal—Goal, Auger; defense, Vernier, J. Day, Charest, J. Leduc; forwards, A. Day, Lazure, Quesnel, Bruneau, C. Hotte, G. Hotte, R. Leduc, Dagenais, Bisson.

JV's Lose To Colts

The University of Toronto Jay Vee's suffered their first basketball defeat Saturday night, as the Western Colts downed the Blues 59-53. The game, played in Thames Hall, was close all the way, with the home team pulling away in the final minutes of the last frame to take the win.

Big factor in the Western victory was the sharpshooting of Ron Tracey who led his squad with a 16-point effort. Ron threw in four baskets in the last frame spurt, and this was the Colts' margin of victory.

High scorer in the contest was Blue Jack Garbutt, who hooped 20 points, and turned in one of his best games to date. Jack put the Blues ahead in the early moments of the game with three baskets, all from different angles.

The Varsity crew were ahead 15-14 at the end of the first frame, but at the half, the home team were up 29-26. The Blues looked good in the first half and although they were down three points at the intermission seemed to be the better team.

The Jay Vee's came back strong in the third game, and led by Doug Kettle and Ollie Mandryk caught up to their opponents. They stayed even with the Colts until the last few minutes of the game when the Purple crew, led by Tracey, unloosed their game-winning spree.

Sports Staffers Win B-Ball 37-31

The Varsity sports staff brought back the Porter Torphy where it belongs, as they beat the news staff 37-31 (according to the official scorer, former News Editor Jim Knight). The score was tied at the end of regulation time, but the sports staff came back to form and took the lead by dint of sheer hard work, despite boasts by the News Staff that they threw the game.

Actually, the sportsmen were ahead several points at the end of regulation time, but Knight's glasses steamed up several times as sports staffers went in to score in the last period, so the game went into overtime. Fouls were not counted, though newsmen Niblock and Anco received at least six apiece by impartial referee Bob Dnieper, former Sports editor.

Dave Rotenberg scored 17, Joe Scanlon 13, Doug McEnteer 8, Mal Crawford 5 (adds up to 43).

The sports staff is willing to take on the news staff again at any time in case they think they did not throw the game fairly.

Think Canadian

Nationalism, as has been noted by Dr. Forsey as well as vociferous Tories has hit the Post Office. But it has taken on a variety of expressions, some of which reach an imaginative peak not usually associated with governmental offices.

Of course, there is a sort of mundane confusion within the Post Office as to its present status. In the phone book it is listed under the Government of Canada, but the voice on the other end of the line usually mutters that it is the Canada Post Office. When pressed for details, he might add that it is the Dominion of Canada Post Office. In desperation, he simply concludes that "it's just the Post Office". The only thing that the post office information service is really sure about is that letters and parcels are no longer carried by the Royal Mail.

A further, and more fanciful indication of nationalism on the march are the signs liberally sprinkled about the confines of the Post Office, advising everyone to "Think Canadian". In order to elaborate on this enigmatic phrase, large multi-colored posters are placed beneath the signs. They are safety posters.

At first we wondered about the connection between safety first and Think Canadian. Finally, however, we found a poster and sign which explained much. The poster showed an over-turned canoe —(typically Canadian—with two people in the water (most likely Canadian). The message pointed out that a little thought would prevent such accidents.

Obviously the couple had been sitting in the canoe (most likely on the thwarts, as Robert Taylor usually does) and what is even more despicable, they had probably been thinking American thoughts. The canoe was rightly upset—it was a Canadian canoe.

However, this still leaves us wondering as to what the Post Office means when they urge us to think Canadian. If they had said Think Canadien, we might have been less puzzled and more concerned with bilingualism.

But what is a Canadian thought? How are we to be sure that when we think we have a Canadian thought that it will be considered Canadian by other Canadians. Judging by the Massey Report, Canadians cannot agree on any subject. Even a "substantial majority" cannot agree, unless of course they just don't give a damn.

But a little Canadianism goes a long way. A. Y. Jackson, in reviewing an exhibition of Western Canadian artists, remarked that he did not particularly care whether they were influenced by the United States, as long as the result was art.

Perhaps the Post Office, too, should simply try to stimulate thought, rather than worry about its root, its branch and its origin.

SHARE The Results

How successful has the SHARE campaign been? How much money has been raised? How much still must be collected to make up the $11,000 objective?

Last Wednesday, the Students' Administrative Council requested the SHARE committee to release this information. Although the official campaign has been over now for more than two weeks, no one seems to know how the monetary matters stand. And the committee has ignored the SAC request to date.

Presumably students are interested in the success or failure of a campaign to which they were asked to contribute.

If the campaign has not been a success, then students may also be interested in devising ways and means of raising more money—jazz concerts, candy sales, masquerades—anything which the fertile imagination of the college student can produce. And if the campaign has been, or is expected to be, a complete and unmitigated success, then there is reason for loud rejoicing.

Even if complete and final figures are not available, an interim report, as the SAC recommended could be released. But someone on the SHARE committee must have a faint notion of how much money has been collected. And if they don't, then possibly students should begin to worry.

Science In Society

Not Witchdoctor

The following is the first in a series of articles by Michael Humphries, IV Psychology, who attempts to define the boundaries of science — something which scientists occasionally, and society often, tend to ignore.

A hue and cry typical of a witch hunt could be detected in the recent frantic vilification of science as the handmaiden of the devil. The intimation was that science, a hardened old crone, thoroughly corrupted by her partial knowledge of questionable issues, is attempting to destroy our fundamental institutions and deny in the nature of man all that is really good and valuable. This concept of a witch may be applicable to the scientist making observations on the moral direction of our society, but it seems to me that the theologian critics have the metaphor inverted. A more accurate picture would be the scientist as a pure young thing, tempted by the devilish element of humanity in him (for even the scientist is human) to prescribe for the social ills of the other troubled souls around him. In doing this, he is infected, not by any satanic element in science, but by a hellish and most unscientific overstepping of his only valid area of operation.

The ultimate nature of man, the problems of what he should do and be, are not scientific problems, and science cannot make pronouncements on these issues. As we stated, scientists, being simultaneously human beings, can and do make value judgements, but we must recognize them for what they are to avoid further useless bickering over the relative functions of science and religion in society. The operations of these two are quite distinct.

SCIENCE is a method for obtaining from nature knowledge about a certain class of events, so that statements of relationship can be made. The method is fairly rigorous and has characteristic limitations. The events must be observable, or inferred directly from the observable. Propositions have to be empirically verifiable or must have the possibility of being so tested. For example, the proposition that "the moon is made of green cheese" is a hypothesis that could be tested if and when we reach the room. The statement that "man is immortal" cannot be proven either true or false empirically, and so is not a scientific issue.

There is another major restriction on science which distinguishes it from religions. Scientific statements are never certain, they are only probable. Those who demand certainty would be better to refer to other less humble systems. All scientific statements are qualified by such phrases as "probably true", "all other things being equal", "if the present conditions obtain". As knowledge increases these statements can be refined, but the conclusions never change from ones of probability to ones of certainty. The more precise statements are still qualified. For example, the breaking point of a steel bar can only be given as plus or minus a specific number of stress-hours. Statistics is one tool by which to refine your statements so as to express the probable degree of confidence with which the conclusion can be made. (Note, please, that modern physics and chemistry, as well as the social sciences, use statistics.)

We repeat, then, that anyone who pronounce a value judgement, defines absolute moral values, or outlines the goals of man and society is not being scientific. The scientist may describe what does happen, but as a scientist he cannot say what should happen. Therefore, if someone, a scientist by trade, propounds ideas which you, as an adherent to a religious or political belief which claims absolute authority for its statements, oppose, you cannot criticize his values as being "scientific—damn them!"; you are entitled only to say, "they are WRONG—damn him".

There is, as we have seen, no basis in the scientific method which would enable the scientist to "prove" whether values are relative or absolute, or what is the "ideal" man. If society will define what it conceives as the "good", science may then make valid contributions. If six foot rugby players, free from disease are considered desirable, medical science may then be applied. If a certain product-child training is deemed "ideal", the social scientist can specify how to obtain this result. If sudden death for heresy is demanded the atomic physicist can very readily supply an efficient means of elimination.

The problem facing society is this: it must decide who is to be responsible for defining moral and physical objectives. The flaw, ironically enough, is not with science but with society—the necessity to prove what cannot be proven, that one body has supreme authority to define the good for man. This is the issue to be settled: not whether science is leading men astray, but whither are men leading science?

Report On A Report

The president, with due consideration
(You know he's often deep in contemplation,
When he's not in some Eastern Asian nation),
Has viewed the scene with much disapprobation,
And coming to the point with consternation,
He lays the blame on higher education.

First to the staff Sid says without conjecture,
"Immediately you fellows must correct your
Bad tendency to emphasize the texture
Instead of content when you start to lecture.
You'll find if you do not improve e'er next year,
Professorship is not a mere sin-e-cure."

And now the balefull eye turns to the masses
Of nincompoops who often cut their classes,
To hibernate in pubs and study glasses,
Instead of reading Kant or Pippa Passes.
Why, sixty-five percent of all you asses,
Could not define slide-rule or epistasis.

Last on the list we find schools secondary
(And primary, who, Blatz to the contrary,
Should teach much more than when to use the Jerry).
Sid exhumes his Latin, quote, "Pueri
Ignorati sunt!! Disciplinary Measures must improve vocabulary".

Go sinners, down upon your knees, repent all
The errors that evoked these detrimental
Comments. Let us attempt the continental
System, and we will find that when we've spent all
Our efforts, then with voice parental
Sidney will get more money governmental.

Karshish.

OUR READERS WRITE

From The Heart

Editor, The Varsity:

Your comment of January 29 concerning the PRESIDENT'S Report was, indeed, quite interesting; for it reveals much that must and should be considered in the field of education. As you have so well stated, there is no need for golden throated Ciceros! Students go to university to learn to think for themselves, and the tragedy comes when they fail to do this! Yet they do need inspiration, and this comes to a large degree from the professors . . .

Professors do need, in many cases, to rely on the manuscript, but when they rely on this too much, their lectures become dead . . . they miss the personal contact with the students. Many such manuscrips are just boons which any student can read if he has the desire within him, if he has been so cultivated to study. The need today is for the professors to lay the manuscript aside for a minute or two and speak with conviction. They have received their education and have, I hope, related it to their own lives. Now we need to see what it has to do with us . . . the students. Then, if a professor has something to say, something besides mere facts, much will be received inspiration. Yet the theolog, the engineer, the physician, and so on, must realize that success is 99 per cent perspiration. But they have got to be motivated, have within them the desire to study. Mere acquisition of facts will not do that.

Pearson Sees World Peace Depending On University

THE VARSITY

VOL. LXXI NO. 76 THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO Tuesday, February 5, 1952

Colourful ticker-tape, exploding balloons, a student band, and a battery of greetings from several university organizations welcomed Lester B. Pearson at his installation as Chancellor of Victoria University in Convocation Hall last night. In welcoming Pearson, Chairman L. Macaulay of the Victoria Board of Regents described the new chancellor as "a brilliant student, a seasoned diplomat, a Christian gentleman, and now a statesman of international reputation".

In his inaugural address Pearson stated that the world must look to the university for achievement of world peace and betterment. "The problems of peace and settlement to which we put our hands after victory remain unsolved", he said, "Nor can there be much hope that they ever will be solved, unless those who must make the attempt are properly educated."

Pearson warned that education must be utilized to weigh and elect truth from "a constant battery of information and misinformation . . . from radio and television, the headline and the movies, the columnist and the commentator".

"Direction finding in these matters—security—lies in ourselves; in our maturity of mind, in our moral integrity, in our acceptance of spiritual values as the foundation of conduct", he added.

The new Victoria chancellor indicated that this security may be found at the university, "to judge in the light of historical experience . . . to refresh our acquaintance from time to time wtih those great creations of the human mind."

Discussing the threat of Communism, Pearson defined it as "an idea" and as "the spearhead of brutal imperialism". "No idea", he said, "can be killed by bayonets or even by an atomic bomb. As an idea, it must be resisted by intellectual and spiritual weapons, and also by removing the conditions of poverty and misery and injustice in which it grows."

"To the idea of Communism and submission, we must oppose freedom and responsibility," he indicated, "but we know very well that a free society is made, not by governments, but by free individuals and by free institutions" among the most important of which are our universities.

Pearson asked that the student be given a faith, a sense of mission, an understanding of social and moral values. "This will never be found in any single 'ism' of today, in socialism or profitism or materialism . . . nor will it be found in encouraging him to find a niche in a state system which will provide for all his wants and crush his own being in the process," he added.

Before and after Pearson's address, present residents of Gate House, a Victoria College residence where Lester Pearson lived in his student days, showered the dias with streamers and balloons and let off mild but noisy explosives. They were accompanied by the "Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry Regimental Parade Band" (SCLIRPB), who played the Victoria song.

Wax Back From Rio Conference After Plane Downed In Jungle

Toronto's globe - trotting SAC president, Syd Wax, returned to the campus on Sunday after a quick trip to Rio De Janeiro. Wax flew south with NFCUS President Jean De Margerie to attend a conference of Pan American student unions.

Before flying to Brazil, De Margerie and Wax (who is the NFCUS International Affairs Commission chairman) had flown to Edinburgh for a conference of Western student unions. At that time the two Canadians tried to fly to Prague for a meeting with the communist-dominated International Union of Students but were forced to return to Paris when their plane encountered bad weather.

Commenting on his South American trip, Wax said yesterday that he was amazed by the political orientation of the South American students. He explained that where Canadian students tend to think in terms of the University and the community, the Latin Americans determine student needs solely by the politics of their country. As a result, Wax said about 90 percent of the conference was spent discussing the political, economic and social problems of the South American students.

Wax and DeMargerie almost did not make it down to Rio. While flying from Belem, at the mouth of the Amazon River, on the 1,700-mile trip to Rio, one of the motors on their plane "conked out" and the pilot was forced to land at a Brazilian Air Force emergency landing field on a plateau in the jungle. The two Canadians spent a day waiting for spare parts to be flown from Rio de Janeiro.

Wax said that there were six delegations at the conference from countries ruled by dictators, and that these delegates wanted the proposed union to act as a means of consolidating South American students' oppression in their countries. Some of these groups, he said, represented radicals, such as anarchists, syndicalists, (a form of communism) and communist youth who had come to the congress to take a stand against imperialism, colonialism and capitalism. As an example he said that the Uruguayan delegation brought forward 60 resolutions which laid the blame for illiteracy, and other troubles affecting their countries on the doorsteps of the United States and other capitalist countries.

The Congress was dominated by radical groups such as these, according to Wax, and their concept of the conference was not to meet and discuss exchanges of students but to form a new society. Their main interest was in arousing opposition to colonialism, imperialism, and foreign investment.

The conference was scheduled to end today but when Wax left Rio on Friday he felt that the South Americans could talk about some of the issues raised for another six months. No decisions were reached by the five plenary commissions formed at the conference and Wax said that any final decisions would be brought back to Canada by De Margerie who stayed behind when Wax returned to Toronto.

Congratulations

Above is Dr. A. B. B. Moore, president of Victoria College, welcoming new chancellor and old Vic Grad the Honorable Lester Pearson at his installation ceremonies held in Convocation Hall last night. Pearson serves as the Minister of External Affairs in the Federal Government. Previously he had served his old College, as a lecturer in Modern History and later as an assistant Professor, after taking both a B.A. and Master's degree at Oxford.

McTaggart Journalism Lecturer

First in the series of Varsity lectures to be presented during the next two weeks will be given by Ken McTaggart of The Globe and Mail, on Thursday of this week.

The lectures are being sponsored by The Varsity "to explain some principles of newspaper work to students who do not work on The Varsity, as well as those who do," said Varsity Editor Barbara Browne.

McTaggart gives a short series of lectures yearly to the Western School of Journalism. His subject for Thursday's lecture will be Newswriting.

The lecture series will be open to the student body. It will be held in Room 8 of University College at 1:00 p.m. on Thursday.

Hits Maclean's

Translation Triumphs

By ADELE KREHM

One of the newest services established for the convenience of students on the campus is the Translation Bureau. This service was set up last Fall under the auspices of the Students' Administrative Council at the suggestion of Dr. F. Heichelheim of University College.

There have been about fifteen calls from people wanting help in translating foreign languages, some of them quite unusual. One Czech student wrote an article in Italian and came to the Bureau to have it translated into English; The article was accepted by Maclean's magazine for publication shortly after.

Another problem was sent to Dr. Heichelheim from Vancouver by Miss Eloise Street of the Indian Tribe Magazine. Miss Street was sent a letter from Madam Chiang Kai-Shek enclosing some documents in Old Chinese which she wanted translated into Modern English. These documents are expected to throw light on some Chinese explorers who may have crossed Behring Strait to America.

Miss Street was also recently given a cycle of Indian poems of an Indian tribe which migrated from the southern part of the United States up along the coast to British Columbia. These poems constitute a complete ritual of sun worship and point to an Asiatic background. The name of the sun god of the Yeuchi, an ancient seagoing Chinese people, is mentioned frequently throughout the poems. One student has been contacted by the Bureau who may be able to translate the documents if the Chinese used is not too archaic.

A woman student recently came into the SAC office with some letters a friend had found behind a panel in a castle in Germany. These letters were decorated with the Royal crest and belonged to the German Royal family. The letters were apparently written around the 1860's and were addressed to the Grand Duke of Oldenburg and to a well-known German Count.

The Translation Bureau is simply an agency which has on file the names, addresses and phone numbers of University students who are able to translate various foreign languages. When people come to the bureau with a language problem, they are referred to a person on file who is able to translate that particular language. Of the 65 people listed with the Bureau, some can translate such languages as ancient Greek, Icelandic. Old Norse and Serbo-Crotian.

"I think this service will be very useful and will improve the standard of the University, because nobody in the future will have the excuse of not knowing a language when an important paper is published in a foreign language," commented Dr. Heichelheim.

Express Gratitude For Aid

Letters of acknowledgement have been received by the Students' Council office for equipment sent to Delhi last year through All Varsity Aid.

And thanks have been received from both the President of the Republic of India (acting in his capacity as Chancellor of the University of Delhi) and from the Indian High Commissioner to Canada.

The letter from World University Service (which was in charge of distribution of AVA material) said arrangements are being made in Delhi to distribute injections of the Canadian penicillin and insulin to needy and refugee students.

On Campus

Muddy Spring

By JOE SCANLON

'Tis Spring! The boids is on the wing! Muddy days are here again! The front campus is in its usual muddy spring condition. Officials of the superintendent's office are issuing an appeal to students to please walk around the front camput. They admit it's a long way 'round but nevertheless if you want to keep the front campus beautiful — keep off!

Next Summer when visitors are strolling through our campus we want them to see something we can be proud of. Think of the poor soccer players who come thousands of miles to play soccer for the U. of T. When you have just twenty seconds to make that lecture, remember it's only being read anyway; so why not walk around?

The broken-down fence which should still be in hiding is there for a purpose. This fence is going to be repaired in the near future. Although it's easy to step over it or for pigmies to crawl underneath it why not walk around.

You offenders who wear toe rubbers, beware! The superintendent's office is collecting these specimens of human frailty and keeping them as a record of your past misdeeds. If you repent, however, you may visit the dignitaries' offices and retrieve your wandering rubbers. A polite attendant will fit you with your own size when you sign a document to remain off the quagmire and murky depths decorating the perspective of the bored students from the southern rooms in University College.

Of course if you are sadly in need of toe rubbers and are willing to sign on the dotted line you may secure these step-ins by simply putting in an appearance at Simcoe Hall.

Perhaps you never realized it but there is some lovely scenery on the outer limits of this thoroughfare. On one side you pass the library, whose circulation of books per student has fallen down, then you pass the hallowed regions of that wonder of wonders the medical building. After a brief trip into the gully you reach the heights of the little red skule house.

In the other direction you first pass Knox College, then you can either stroll by Simcoe Hall or walk in and pay your fees that are now overdue.

If you don't want the round mud bath presently existing to be a perpetual monument to lazy students and a practice ground for the water polo team just stride the few extra steps and preserve the grass for future generations.

Dean Of Law At Open Lit

The Junior Common Room will become a "no-man's land" at 8:00 tonight when Dean Cecil Wright of the University Law School speaks on legal education in Ontario, according to UC Lit President Dave Rose.

"This is a very controversial question" said Literary Director Al Strauss. "The University is attempting to gain equal status with Osgoode Hall in the length of time required to produce licensed lawyers. The purpose in inviting Dean Wright is to provide the students in UC, who are contemplating law, with a speaker who can outline the situation accurately."

"Both the University Law School and Osgoode Hall are made up of a goodly proportion of UC men, Rose pointed out. "This will be an opportunity for UC men, law school men, and Osgoode Hall boys, to discuss the different sides of the legal situation. We expect the usual fiery Lit Debate," said Rose.

Holidays And Study In England

Canadian students again have been invited by the British Council to attend special summer schools and courses in Britain, the United Kingdom Information Office (UKIO) recently announced. The schools, primarily formed for teachers, post-graduate students and undergraduates in their last two years, are to last for six weeks during the summer vacations.

While it is reported that there are only a limited number of bursaries and travel grants available, the UKIO says that the bookings for the summer schools are always heavy.

The courses are to be held in some of Britain's leading universities and will cover a number of subjects. The 1952 topics include "Shakespeare and Elizabethan Drama", "Problems of Britain's Economic Recovery", "Education in England," and "Life, Literature and Politics in Contemporary Britain".

In addition to the actual courses, the schools will include tours and visits to various places of interest, it was also announced.

University of Toronto students may obtain further information from Assistant Professor Douglas Grant of the Department of English. Applications should be made by March 31.

Visiting Women's Housing Service Is McGill Plan

Women from other universities visiting McGill will no longer have to worry about accommodation, according to a letter received in the Student Council office recently. The McGill Women's Union will undertake to supply rooms for visitors in the homes of its members.

Ruth Taylor, Secretary of the McGill Women's Union, said in the letter that this service will be in operation with the forthcoming Winter Carnival in Montreal, February 14 to 16. "In order that suitable arrangements can be made, we would greatly appreciate a list of women attending this event be sent to us within the next week," she wrote. Normally, she said, arrangements would require from ten days to two weeks.

This will be a new function on the campus at McGill, and it is planned to relieve University officials of the responsibility attending events which draw students from other colleges. All arrangements will be handled through the McGill Women's Union.

There is at present no official arrangement for the billeting of women who visit the Toronto campus normally, although in the case of special events the sponsoring group usually undertakes to find accommodation for the visitors.

But No Fury

Sounds Like 20 Trams But It's Only A Scream

In an unusual experiment yesterday, four engineers found that Varsity reporter Denise Richards makes more noise than anything else on the campus. The quietest place on the trip was none other than the famous KCR.

The experimenters, four final year electrical students, were carrying out one of the regular experiments in the light and acoustics lab. They travelled from place to place around the campus and recorded the noise at each stop.

Denise screamed into the mike at a distance of only six inches; so this explains the remarkable results. The noise that resulted was roughly equivalent to that resulting from twenty street cars at twenty feet.

Another stop was made at the nut display on the second floor of the parliament buildings. People in the buildings make very little racket. However, a curious policeman questioned the scientists. After having the apparatus explained to him he commented, "I still don't get it."

A suspicious waitress in the Elm Grill was quite wary of the outfit and refused to approach close enough to serve the customers. The manager in the Elm Grill commented, "I think you're crazy." Patrons in Murray's Restaurant were not even aroused when the Varsity photographer took a picture of the experimenters.

All the readings were taken on a sound level (noise) meter which is an electro-acoustic device to evaluate noise found under different environments. This little gadget consists of a microphone mounted on a recording device and enclosed in a case suitable for carrying.

The procedure starts off in a soundproof room in the engineering building where the reading on the instrument is at the lowest level. Then they proceed to the power plant near the Medical Building. There the rotary generator reaches a top limit of 112 decibels. Normal sound of offices such as the Registrar's would give a reading of 66 decibels.

Other readings were as follows: KCR 52 db., Denise Richards 118 db., busy street corner 80 db.

Radio listeners will probably understand the device a little better if they remember how Arthur Godfrey judges his contestants.

Ex-editor At Vic

Mark Harrison, Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity in 1948-49 and now Labor Editor for the Toronto Daily Star, will be the speaker at a meeting of Vic Alumni, to be held in the Burwash Hall Senior Men's Common Room at 8 p.m. this evening. His topic will be "An Outline of Trade Unionism in Canada".

Harrison said that he would outline the structure of trade unions in general, as well as describing the form they take in Canada, and destroy some "popular misconceptions". There will be a question period after the talk.

New Laws In Divorce Radio Talk

New rules may be promulgated tonight to set asunder what God has joined together when the Varsity Radio Round Table discusses "Should Ontario Change Its Divorce Laws?" on CKEY at 10:05.

The discussion panel will consist of Rev. E. M. Nichols, Chaplain of Hart House; Mr. J. N. Emerson, M.A., Lecturer in Anthropology; Bud Trivett, II Law, and Barbara Screaton, UC III. Harry Rasky, CKEY news editor, will moderate the program.

Nichols in his capacity of Hart House chaplain has had considerable experience in solving marital problems. He said, "In entering a discussion like this we must realize there are two definite positions — church and civil law—and bound up with the question of divorce is the whole problem of the relationship of church and state. What right either has to dictate to the other is, of course, subject of another discussion."

Mr. Emerson has said that he did not feel any changes were necessary with the present laws, and his position has been reinforced by the law student, Trivett. The latter is also a member of the Students' Administrative Council.

Miss Screaton felt her feelings could be summarized in the statement, "As I said when I disposed of my fifth husband . . ."

Delayed For Two Years Song Book On The Way

The long-awaited University of Toronto song book should be ready next September according to Larry Heisey, IV Trinity, in charge of the project. Containing words and music to 150 college and fraternity songs the pocket size book will sell for about $1.00.

The idea for the song book was first presented to the Students' Administrative Council in 1949 by Larry's brother Alan, who graduated last year from Engineering. The last official song book was published in 1922, while other universities have kept theirs up to date.

After copyright difficulties and deciding which of Skule's bawdy ballads couldn't be used, a group of 150 songs have been chosen. These include college and fraternity songs, sea chanties, drinking songs and other favourites. The book will have the melody for all songs and will be illustrated with cartoons.

Big difficulty is in cutting down expenses, Heisey said. Mrs. Audrey Dickie, SAC secretary, has been typing the lyrics, and Bill Marwick, grad, has collected and written out the music.

The music has now to be drawn by hand on white cards to be photographed for the final engravings for the book. Heisey said that at present a group of seven volunteer "music artists" was drawing the music and would like more to help.

The SAC has granted $200.00 to cover expenses in preparing the book. It is hoped the sales of the book will eventually pay for all expenses involved.

Dream Girl Likes Laughs

Lakeland, Fla. (Exchange) — The Southern, weekly student paper of the Florida Southern College has been running a weekly series of "Dream Girls" on its front page. Part of a year-long contest for the "Beauty of the Week", one co-ed will be chosen in May for the title of Southern College Dream Girl. Each picture shows an SFC co-ed reclining on a sandy, sun-drenched beach.

The contest is part of the policy of the paper to "print all the news that's news — and then some" as the banner reads at the top of every issue.

Description of the most recent "Beauty" includes the comment that "she likes to laugh".

By FRANK MORITSUGU

If you were a citizen of Washington or Los Angeles, you would have a fair chance of becoming quite depraved right now. But if you are a New Yorker or an Ontarian, you can relax. Everything has been taken care of. The dangers of exposure to an immoral French film, LA RONDE, have been prevented.

For "the time being," LA RONDE is banned from Ontario and New York.

This week, I am feeling terribly depraved. And it isn't from contact with Mickey Spillane's real blondes either. That's allowed, you see, as long as you have a quarter in your jeans. My demoralized, or perhaps "immoralized," condition is a result of seeing LA RONDE last week.

LA RONDE is based on Arthur Schnitzler's Reigen, a play that provoked riots in Austria when it was first played, because of its "brutal" attitude to love. Later, Reigen in book form ran into American censorship in the days of Comstockery. If opposition to Reigen (or LA RONDE) is based on its sex, the opposition does not make much sense. LA RONDE is a cold cynical view of the place of sex in the lives of "civilized" folk. The film is subtle, sensitive, humorous and adult

The round concerns ten liaisons between citizens of Vienna, with one partner in each coupling being a part of the following episode. There is little suggestiveness, hip-swaying or direct frontal approaches to passion. And each liaison ends in disillusion and remorse. Those involved include Simone Simon, Fernand Gravet, Danielle Darrieux, Gerard Philipe, and Anton Walbrook.

As someone has commented, LA RONDE is a "terribly moral" film, but it will be appreciated by the adult only. Others will probably find it either meaningless and much ado about naught, or giggle uncomfortably at it.

In a film era of mammary emphasis, LA RONDE is as suggestive and titillating as the statistical tables in The Kinsey Report. But you can't see it here.

DISTANT DRUMS (Imperial) is another "different" western. Notice how many "different" westerns we're getting? But DISTANT DRUMS isn't that different. The difference comes from the use of a new locale: the Florida Everglades in Technicolor.

Otherwise this is a western that has Bad Indians (Seminoles) chasing Gary Cooper and his band of Good Guys through the swamp. This is undoubtedly one of the most energetic films in a long while. Instead of a climactic chase sequence, the whole of DISTANT DRUMS is a chase.

There are short breaks in the flight, of course, at which times heroine Mari Aldon gets a chance to flaunt her assets at Cooper in the blue-green moonlit swamp. But the chase is the big thing, the Seminoles keep on coming, and we take a deep breath and take to our heels again. In fact after the long chase the supposed climax—an underwater fight between Cooper and the Seminole chief — is pretty disappointing, although pretty brutal.

The star of the film is the swamp with the flamingoes brightening up one scene, giving it some genuine excitement for a change. The photography is ordinary, but despite this, the natural scenery and the technicolor often burst out into beauty. Unlike THE RIVER, where the background was integral to the story, the Everglades are treated rather uncharitably by the camera. Just as we get set to savor a beautiful view, the camera whips to the trouble-worn mug of some human actor.

It must be admitted, however, that when the camera whips to Miss Mari Aldon, Toronto's latest contribution to film stardom, the view is not uninteresting. But this young lady, a fresher and somewhat softer version of Virginia Mayo, presented us with a problem of some perplexity and concern. Her costume in the film is a thin blouse and thin skirt. Yet, they remain intact despite the terrible race through the deadly Everglades "from which no one emerges alive."

Everything ends quite happily though, which may be why pressure groups haven't squawked about the sex or violence in this flim. The Seminoles have been dealt with, General Zach Taylor's forces come to relieve the brave little troop. And down the white sand of the beach, throwing out her arms and her chest, goes Miss Aldon to meet Cooper, and things are just fine.

After the frantic running and heavy breathing of the Gary Cooper western, YOU CAN'T BEAT THE IRISH (International) is a nice relaxed little bit. The Irish, judging by this British import, are a garrulous bunch, never did you hear so much talking. But much of the blarney is fun, and you probably will enjoy it.

YOU CAN'T BEAT THE IRISH isn't much more than a skit, in which a Shakespeare-quoting ne'er-do-well (Jack Warner) hoaxes a village into believing he is to come into a fortune. His status in the village changes considerably, and he manages to set up his grown-up children into the manner they would like to assume. Barbara Mullen mugs her way free-hand through this comedy as the embattled and puzzled wife and mother.

And maybe you too will see the resemblance between the loquacious ne'er-do-well and some of the unforgetable undergraduates you have met.

More Men Needed For Laval Weekend

The SAC reported yesterday that enough girls have applied for the Laval Centenary weekend, but that more boys are needed for the delegation.

The group leaves Toronto at 9.15 Thursday morning, and will return Sunday night. Application is open to all faculties and years. Laval has promised a memorable weekend, and is even going to get dates for those who wish them.

The weekend will cost approximately twenty-five dollars.

"Intellectual Order From Chaos" States Cassirer In His Latest

PHILOSOPHY OF THE ENLIGHTENMENT by Ernst Cassirer. S. J. Reginald Saunders, 1951, $8.00.

In the 18th century, reason, as a concept of agency, functions to construct a new whole. The movement from Descartes to Newton is from "systems" to "observations"; to dare to know: not the content but the form of nature. The skepticism of Hume and the relativity of scientific knowledge make the truth of nature not deductive and mathematical but an inference from the part to the whole. Diderot predicts that mathematics must yield to physics and with Buffon biology takes on its own form. For Leibnitz life is not only thinking but a forming power; we must find a derivative in original forces. Fusing the organic and aesthetic philosophies of Leibnitz and Shaftesbury gives us the "Harmony" (Liebnitz) of "Inward form" (Shaftsbury).

In this era psychology is the basis of epistemology and we must create the human mind anew to understand its structure. Mind for Leibnitz becomes a mirror of reality, and so of the universe; not a sum of image but a whole composed of formative forces. The task of psychology is to elucidate their forces and understand their reciprocal relations. Not the content but the energies of the mind are to be studied.

In religion the intellectual centre of gravity moves from a concept of God to the concept of the "form" of each science. Opposed to this, Pascal tries to show the powerlessness of reason and the movement is toward Shaftesbury's imminent, aesthetic and legal theodicy. Rousseau mak society not the individual responsible. Lessing says religion belongs to neither the temporal nor eternal, but is both in one. Analytical Reason is replaced by synthetic and static reason by dynamic.

Historically Bayle makes facts the end of knowledge while Montesquieux emphasizes the spirit as the end. Thus the latter expects from the advancement of knowledge a new form which is dependent on the whole. In Leibnitz, Lessing and Herder human nature becomes a moulding clay which assumes different forms in different situations.

In Law Grotius says reason is the law that antidates all others and therefore the church as well as the state must submit. This does not hold for long, for here too, there is a shift from reason to experience. Men are united not by reason but by inclinations, appetites and passions. In this clash of doctrines the inner spiritual unity of the age appears once more in a new light.

Aesthetically there is an intellectual synthesis of literary criticism and philosophy. Boileau belives that genre in art parallels that of natural objects and its chief concern is expression. Condillac sees a unity between art and science in language and use of symbols while Boileau transforms aesthetic ideals into sociological ones. The development moves from the nature of things to that of man ab generis to psychology. For Bonhours process and emergence of unexpected forms is most important. Bubos establishes introspection and in Hume aesthetic judgement over the logical; the latter may change, but the former is always the same. "The Poet," says Baumgarten, "endows the cold symbols of the language of daily life and of Science with the breath of life; the life of knowledge.

Cassirer has, I think, shown that order does come out of chaos in the intellectual as well as other worlds; that enlightenment thinking cannot be seen in its clearest form in particular doctrines and axioms but where it is in process of doubting, seeking, tearing down and building up. The book is a must for anyone in Philosophy or English.

Ave Atque Vale

By ANNE CARNWATH
BOOK REVIEW EDITOR

As far as we can see, there are two possible standards of criticism which can be applied to the literary efforts of university students. Some critics maintain that the moment you pen a line of poetry or write a few paragraphs of deathless prose, you are automatically subject to the same standards of criticism by which Homer and Dante are appraised. You may be granted some consideration because you are a novice, but in the long run the end for you and Dante is the same to create—and therefore the critical standards applied to your work should be the same.

Then there are critics who hold that students should be encouraged to write at any cost. The very fact that a student considers something worth writing about in his own mind, and follows through by expressing himself on paper is enough. That fact is that the work is its own justification.

We are inclined to think that the latter standard is applicable first to children, and second to people who are not aware of the high achievements and traditions of the past. Presumably, Arts students at a university do not belong to either of these two groups of people, yet The Varsity Literary Issue would indicate otherwise.

In it there were contributions whose only justification was that they were written. Are we children? By submitting them for publication the writers indicated their ignorance of the traditions into which they presumed to enter as it were without batting an eye. And, should not they, as students of the Arts be more aware than any other group in the country of the responsibility that such an assumption entails? If we can only write like children, then let's at least show our awareness and appreciation of the achievements both possible and actual in that high calling by refraining altogether.

Of course there were exceptions in The Varsity Literary Issue—the first prize entries in poetry and prose for example—but generally speaking the issue hit an all time low, Ere , we heartily recommend that The Varsity dispense with a Literary Issue altogether.

Incredible Manhattan

INCREDIBLE NEW YORK by Lloyd Morris. Ambassador, 1951, $6.50.

Probably the most succinct statement anyone could make about "Incredible New York" is "Wow!" It's one of the few words capable of describing the astonishing amount of material Lloyd Morris, co-author with John Van Druten of "The Damask Cheek", has tried to compress into the nearly four hundred pages of his latest social history. Even at that, "Incredible New York" is social history in rather a limited sense, for it confines itself almost exclusively to describing very high or very low life, mostly both at once. The tremendous amount of material Morris amasses is nothing if not enthralling, but it may give you a bad case of literary indigestion.

"Incredible New York" purports to describe the history of New York from 1850 to 1950 but the largest portions of its pages (and, I suspect, the author's interest) is occupied with the seventy-odd years before the depression. He describes the expansion of New York in the eighteen-fifties, some spooky seances, bloomer girls, famous hostesses, early gang warfare in the Bowery, and all the sights and sounds of New York of the nineties, the literary New York of the turn of the century, theatrical New York, Lobster-palace society, Cafe society, and Harlem.

He writes with wit, and a good deal of nostalgia about the raucous New York of the twenties and one senses that when New York sobered up during the depression it lost the interest of Lloyd Morris. The short, dutiful epilogue 1930-50 tries to cover too much ground, and gains heart only when describing oddities that ought to have happened in the New York of forty years ago, not in today's steel and concrete fortress. Never judge a book by its ending, however, for that of "Incredible New York" is in no way indicative of the richness that went before.

A fact of interest to the book-collector: "Incredible New York" is one of the most beautifully designed books, in a sober sort of way, to be seen in ages. The page design and choice of illustrations while not antediluvian are deliberately unmodernistic. In this way it reflects the times it describes and the style of its author, which, though "witty and urbane" (according to the book-jacket) is often self-effacing, never slick, and always fitting.

For book-collectors and lovers of Manhattan, "Incredible New York" is a find; for others it is the sort of book to buy and browse in for years. Whichever you are, you'll find it crowded, comprehensive, and never dull.

Mankind At Crisis

AWAKENING: THE WORLD AT MID-CENTURY by Erwin D. Canham. Longman's Green & Co., 1951, $3.50.

With preparatory assistance from his staff, Erwin D. Canham, editor of The Christian Science Monitor, has written a short account of man's experience and discoveries of the past fifty years. Or perhaps we had better narrow it down and confess at once that Mr. Canham's World at Mid-Century is, in reality the western world with a huge emphasis on the crisis that faces American civilization.

Very general chapters are presented outlining the development of modern medicine, music, literature, politics, education, theology and women. A communist ideology is presented as the alternative which America must face if she does not learn how to use her democratic freedom for truly spiritual ends. Modern science affirms Christian Scientist Canham's conviction that the things of the spirit are much more pertinent than the tangible things of this world in directing man's course, in its conclusion that "the whole objective universe of matter and energy, atoms and stars, does not exist except as a construction of the consciousness, an edifice of conventional symbols shaped by the senses of man."

Canham finds another support for the Christian Scientist's belief in the influence of mind over matter in the current trend in modern medicine to attribute physical illnesses to a psychomatic cause. It is not difficult to guess that Canham's last words concerning the condition and cure of the world at mid-century are an appeal to return to our eternal birthright, "the meaning of God and man's relationship to Him."

Students who might possibly like their monthly dose of 'Reader's Digest' between cloth covers for a change will enjoy Awakening: The World at Mid-Century. For the reader whose time is precious, however, this book will prove too general in scope and partial in spiritual affiliation to merit reading.

Middle East Life Is Described By Discoverer Of Hotu Bones

CARAVAN by Carleton S. Coon. Clarke, Irwin & Co., 1952, $6.25.

Last summer LIFE magazine ran a four-page story on what may prove to be a significant discovery. Digging a prehistoric mound near the Caspian Sea, Dr. Carleton S. Coon, Professor of Anthropology at the University of Pennsylvania, unearthed three skeletons of what has been named Hotu Man. It has been said that Hotu is the earliest known direct ancestor of Homo Sapiens, living before the last glacier retreated. "If he didn't," said Dr. Coon, "I'll eat every damned bone with ketchup".

Dr. Coon is not always so definite in his statements. In his recently published book on the Near East, Caravan, the anthropologist modestly confesses his feeling of inadequacy in tackling such a broad and controversial subject. Footnotes and comments give full credit to assisting scholars, and allow for the fact that his conclusions may be mistaken: "My account . . . soon may be not only outdated but proved wrong in detail".

Hand in hand with this broad-minded approach goes a large amount of fact which is a product of extensive travel throughout the Middle East, first-hand observation, and studious research. The author discusses as thoroughly as possible in 360 pages, the geography, history, races, economy, and society of the cradle of our civilization. Dr. Coon seldom forgets that he is addressing the layman and thus writes clearly, avoiding technicalities when possible and explaining things thoroughly when necessary.

But sometimes the terrific amount of detail slows the author down. Certain descriptions approach dulness when they consist of sentence after sentence of statement. Usually, however, Dr. Coon escapes this pitfall and mixes fact with interesting conjectures, relating local peculiarities to present conditions. The subject itself is far from being dry. To the ordinary westerner, the picture given in Caravan is new and different. The exotic romance of The Arabian Nights and the peculiar carelessness of the Rubaiyat are discussed and explained in terms of oriental environment and culture.

Misunderstanding is the greatest cause of strained relations between the Middle East and the West, says Dr. Coon. Our society, he says, strains toward uniformity and the elimination of racial differences. He adds that our system works most smoothly on this basis but that "this tendency has been carried so far that there are many books decrying race as a 'myth'". On the other hand, in the Middle East, "the members of each ethnic unit feel the need to identify themselves". Concludes Dr. Coon, "Each attitude is 'right', in its own setting". This conclusion may be applied to many, if not most, of the east-west diferences.

Dr. Coon asks his readers to apply what they have learned of the Middle Easterner to forming intelligent opinions about the foreign relations practised in the area. The author presents a fresh reason for preserving an interest in these people: "We Americans are not trying to help the peoples of the Middle East attain a standard of living comparable to our own merely out of the kindness of our hearts, nor are we doing it, I hope, only for our own material advantage in building new markets, nor just to keep rivals of the moment out of the oil fields, although both of these are valid reasons. If we are smart, we also are doing it in order to learn something of value to ourselves."

Noted Educationist Examines US Plan

CRISIS AND HOPE IN AMERICAN EDUCATION. R. Ulich. S. J. Reginald Saunders, 1951, $5.00.

Robert Ulich is a German educationalist who left his native land in 1933 because of his opposition to Nazi politics. As a result of his European background of this opposition to Nazi politics. As a result of his Education in the light of the Continental System. He leans heavily on the latter system for the gentlemanly qualities it imbued in students and sharply criticises the American System for trying to find a short-cut means of mass producing such a desirable citizen. Culture and a sense of values comes slowly, and the American System wastes too much time cluttering up the student's mind with inconsequential data and irrelevant tests. Instead of fast reading courses for slow readers, Ulich advises the universities to send their slow readers to technical schools and to start slow reading courses for fast thinkers to make sure they assimilate at a pace which will eventually lead to maturity.

Ulich's remarks concerning higher education are well worth reading. However when he starts talking about the deficiencies in the American Education System at an elementary and secondary level he does not seem to be as aware of the problems at hand as he is in the case of higher education. Ulich realizes that we have failed miserably to take into consideration the emotional factors which provide the impetus to learn in the case of children and adolescents, yet in the solutions he offers there is not one mention of either sex education or courses to help these children and adolescents understand themselves emotionally.

Ulich rather recommends that every high school have a chapel with no denominational affiliation. In it, great music will be played beautiful poetry will be read and the student will attach himself motionally to these arts in a way that will resolve the excessive feelings that accumulate in the youthful products of a city culture. We agree with Ulich that the feelings of the people subjected to edcation have been neglected, but if the school systems take over the job of developing and directing personal attitudes and adjustment, then we do not think that the solution will be as simple or as much a matter of aesthetics as Ulich makes it out to be.

He Shoot, He Doesn't Score!

Jack Ross goes down to his knees to stop a near goal in the hockey action from last Friday's game. It was spectacular stops like this one that kept Varsity in the win column and the game. Norm Fox (11) is shown huddled with Al Fasan helping out Ross to make the save. An unidentified Toronto player is shown behind the net. The Universite de Montreal player who made the shot is not in the picture. The Blues returned to expected form in the game and upset the league leaders by the surprising score of 9-4. Two of the stars not shown in the picture were team captain Ernie Frey and Jack Wheldrake, who each scored three and two goals respectively, to lead the Blues in the scoring department.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

For a few weeks it looked as though Toronto was going to wake up and rise out of its customary lethargy in respect to track and field. The first big indoor meet here in fifteen years was scheduled tentatively for February 23 at the Coliseum, which was to be loaned by the CNE free of charge provided nothing profitable came along in the meantime.

Something profitable has come along—an evangelist from the Deep South who has been laying them low out west for some weeks, a "Dr." A. C. Valdez who bills his show as a revival and healing campaign. He has reserved the Coliseum from the tenth to the twenty-four.

We do not blame the CNE directors for preferring a deal which will probably net them something up in four figures; they are in the business, and local track teams which have been using the Coliseum for work-outs have not paid a nickel for light and other maintenance expenses.

However, a growing interest in track and field, through the efforts of organizations like Lloyd Percival's Toronto Track and Field Club, and Fred Foote's East York Track Club, has been promising to put Toronto on the map in international competition in this sport. But Toronto has not had an indoor track meet to compare with the ones which are staged annually in Hamilton and Montreal, since 1936, we believe it was, when Glen Cunningham came up to form the feature attraction of a meet at Maple Leaf Gardens.

The meet was a moderate financial success, but evidently not enough to warrant making it an annual affair.

In Hamilton, the 92nd Highlanders annually stage an international meet which packs the armories and attracts some of the biggest names and colleges in the field, Canadian and American. Last year, there was Don McEwan of Michigan U. (Ottawa) in the mile, Ellis of NYU, George Lynch of Illinois (Toronto), and McCardle of Seton Hall in the 1,000, Charlie Slade of Seton Hall and Bob Maiocco of New York in the 600, Maurice Curotta of Seton Hall (Australia), Don Stonehouse of Georgetown U. (Hamilton) and Hatch of NYU in the 300 and the 50. It ranks as one of the finest sport spectacles in Canada, we believe. Indoor track is more exciting than outdoor to watch, since the fans are closer to the track, and the runners come around about three times as often on the standard 160 yard circuit.

There is no reason why funds could not be raised to set up a board track in the Gardens, or at Varsity Arena for that matter, to stage a similar meet here. The Coliseum with its clay track makes an excellent running surface although the lack of banking on the turns would make good sprints impossible. It is not as centrally located as the other two places, and would not likely attract as big a crowd.

An indoor meet, staged on a sufficiently large scale, with established stars as well as local talent, would not take long to go over in a big way if given a year or two of pushing. Maybe even this year, being an Olympic year.

While we are still in a suggesting mood, we might add that it is time a decent ventilation system were installed in the upper reaches of Hart House, where the track is. At present the only air obtainable is from the windows, which blow a cold draught right across the track if opened wide. If they are not all opened wide, runners in a long race or working out hard nearly suffocate.

Pitching Sportshoes

In major and minor league basketball all action was very one-sided in yesterday's play. However, on the hockey front the opposite was true for all, the big games ended in ties after some good net minding and close calls.

The biggest pounding of the day was administered by SPS who pounced on Architecture B and dropped them 54-10. The Skulemen took a 24-3 lead in the first quarter and just kept piling it on. Only in the last quarter did the score resemble a normal one for there the winners outscored the architects only 11-4. Bararid with 15, Covert with 10, and Carr with 9 all had field days for the Skulemen as they ran up the score.

Fisher, St. Mike's minor league team trounced Vic Hostlers 41-12. The Mikemen went up 15-0 in the first period and then slowed it down to a runaway. Jerry O'Dwyer sparked the winners with 20 and Vieggo Rambuch trailed him with 14.

Pre-Meds and Junior Vic staged a tight hockey encounter over at Varsity Arena. Jardine was the big man on the ice as he scored both of the goals for Vic. Despite his good showing Cappalino and Arnold each drove home a counter for the future Docs to leave the final score deadlocked.

There were only two penalties in the hockey game and this was indicative of the play. Both teams tried to shove in the winner at the end of the second period; but barring Jardine no one was in a scoring mood yesterday.

Track Meet Cancelled

Yesterday's track meet was cancelled due to unforeseen difficulties. Coach Hal Brown was away with his basketball team and the roof of Hart House was leaking.

Blue Swimmers Win Stulac, McIlroy Star

Toronto swimmers literally swamped Buffalo in a dual swim meet over the weekend. The Blues' swimmers downed the hapless Buffalo team 56-28. In their win the Varsity men set two pool records. George Stulac cut five seconds off the 150-yard medley relay time and Bill McIlroy cut the 200-yard back record by one minute and three seconds.

Toronto won seven of the ten events at the meet losing only the diving, the four hundred yard relay, and the fifty yard free style. Brundage of the Buffalo team won the diving contest and was really outstanding. He beat Al Roger and Hugh Sutherland of Toronto, two very good divers.

Doug Gibson of the Blues won two firsts, as he topped the swimmers in the 100 and the 220 yard free style events. George Stulac, Bill McIlroy and John Bate also scored two wins apiece swimming on their relay and one other event.

Perhaps the most surprising thing that happened was Toronto's loss in the 440 yard relay. The swimmers were undoubtedly tired out by this time and this may explain the loss. John Stulac commented that the easy victory was a surprise as it was expected that Buffalo University would be a much better team than the State Teacher's college.

Complete results:

300-yd. medley relay: time 3.14.7; 220-yd. free style: time 2.26.8; (Toronto).

150-medley relay: time 1.49 Gibson (T), Hodgins (T), Carson (B).

50-yd. free style: time 24.6; Zangerle (B), Garside (T), Haig (T).

150-medley relay: time 1.40 (record); Stulac (T), McIlroy (T), Hammond (B).

Diving: Brundage (B), Roger (T), Sutherland (T).

100-yd. free style: time 56.7; Gibson (T), Centre (B), Garside (T).

200-yd. back: time 2.25.6 (record); McIlroy (T), Langer (T), Ihle (B).

220-yd. breast: Bate (T), Herzel (B), Spencer (B).

440-yd. free style: 5.43; Capraru (T), Hackbourne (T), Carson (B).

440-yd. relay: time 4.02.5; Centre, Dickson, Hammond, Zangerle, Buffalo.

Doctors Tie Redmen In Rough Game, 2-2

In a game that meant nothing to either team as far as play-offs are concerned, Sr. Meds fought back to get a 2-2 draw with Sr. UC. It was a rought and tumble affair with referees Orr and Bowden meting out 22 minutes in penalties and having difficulty in keeping the game from breaking out into a general hey-rube.

UC took a 1-0 lead in the penalty-ridden first period but Meds tied it early in the second. UC took the lead again but the doctors took advantage of a Redmen penalty to tie it up.

Meds were putting on lots of pressure early in the game and Smela was keeping them off the score sheet with acrobatic goaltending until UC sent on their third line of Tilson, Bewley and Bratty which took the play away from the Docs. This peppery line put on an aggressive display that they kept up during the rest of the game and they carried the play into the Meds zone.

Tilson of UC and Zatelney had a tiff at this stage and went off with roughing sentences. Bill Bewley was given credit for the Redmen's first goal which popped in from a scramble. Tyndall went off for tripping leaving UC short again. While he was off, a brawl broke out in the Medical end. After it was broken up, Bratty and MacDougall were singled out as the main eventers and were assessed majors. The period ended with a crowded penalty box.

The second stanza opened on a dull note but the pace sped up after Hyde made a great save off Bewley who had been set up by MacDonald. Shaw tied it at one-all, but a few minutes later, Ballantine gave UC the lead again as he backhanded in a pass-out at the 13-minute mark. Then Tyndall got his second penalty and Stu Sims scored during that time as he flipped in a loose puck.

UC played a man short for the rest of the game as first MacFarlane for tripping and then Tilson for charging, were sent to the cooler. Smela in goal saved the tie for them.

The tie leaves UC in the cellar with Meds one point ahead of them. Both teams have been eliminated from the play-off hunt.

Sportswoman

In a neck and neck hockey tilt yesterday, UC emerged victorious over POT in the last three minutes of play, with a 3-2 score.

Di Walker of UC touched off the scoring early in the first period, and netted a low covered shot. Mary Bowden took up the challenge for POT, and scored on a clear breakaway within the next minute. UC'er Barb Hill made a colourful breakaway, and broke the tie with a tally into the corner to end the period 2-1.

POT failed to wear out the short-handed UC players in the second frame, and skated into the third frame still trailing. A goal by Physot Kathy Kavanaugh tied up the game until the clincher scored by Carol Johnson wrapped it up for UC. Beth Murgatroyd's net-minding saved the day for UC, with defenceman Liz Scroggie brilliantly helping her behind the blue line.

Blue Sailors Buy Ice Boat For Hamilton

The sailing club has done it at last! They've bought an ice boat to keep the members interested throughout the winter period. The boat, a very big one, is being kept at Hamilton Bay where several of the yacht clubs keep their boats.

Each weekend the sailors expect to make a trip by private car to Hamilton to go ice-boating. These craft can reach maximum speeds of 150 mph. but this model reaches around seventy miles per hour for its upper limit.

Over the week-end club members tried out their handsome Blue and White craft with some of the other boats on the bay. With a 10 mph. wind blowing they kept within four or five mph. of the other craft. The top speed reached on Sunday with this breeze was sixty miles per hour.

If enough interest is aroused in the new sport and enough of the sailors become proficient the students intend to enter the Canadian Open Championships at Hamilton Bay on February 23 and 24 this year.

Tonight at Wymilwood they are showing movies of ice-boating and welcome anyone interested. (For details see "to-day" column.) One of the executive commented that sailing with the 400 pound craft would probably be continued until the beginning of March unless there are some extremely bad weather conditions.

Road To Peace? Gelber Comments

Marvin G. Gelber, Chairman of the National Executive of the United Nations Association in Canada, will be the speaker in the fourth of a series of talks on the "Nature and Attainment of World Peace", sponsored by the Political Commission of the Student Christian Movement. His topic will be "Freedom and Responsibility".

MARVIN GELBER

Mr. Gelber, a graduate of the University of Toronto, served in the Second World War as an officer, and is at present vice-chairman of the Toronto branch of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, in addition to his position with the United Nations of Canada. He will be speaking today on behalf of the UN association.

The address, which will be presented in the West Hall of University College today at 4 p.m., follows a speech by Mr. B. Mickleburgh of the Canadian Peace Congress, who stressed the need ofr a united and militant public opinion if world peace and disarmament are to be compelled.

Campus Profile

Dean Cecil Wright

By PEARL PARNES

Dean Cecil Wright is a fighting man. Four years ago he was appointed Dean of Osgoode Hall, after twenty years of teaching in that austere training ground of the legal profession. It was the shortest deanship on record.

Dr. Wright had long advocated a full class-room schedule for law students, who at that time were spending only mornings in classes and afternoons in law offices. The Benchers (governors) of the Law Society of Uppper Canada rejected his suggestion, claiming that graduates of the school should immediately be able to earn their bread and butter, though they might not be great legal minds.

This was precisely what the Dean was against. He and his supporters insisted that the lawyer should have a thorough background in jurisprudence, labour law, international law and other subjects that might not pay off in dollars and cents for the average lawyer, but would provide what they felt to be an absolute necessity in the formation of a lawyer.

"The philosophical ideas behind law and legal order were being ignored", explains Dr. Wright. "Men were being trained only for the tricks of the practice. But university must teach much more than mere mechanics. Medical courses are geared for public health, not for merely practicing medicine. The lawyer must develop and seek solutions for the problems of social living, to help people, groups and countries to live together. Law is, after all, applied humanities, applied philosophy and applied sociology."

But the Benchers could not see Dr. Wright's point of view. So he resigned, in protest against the turning back of the clock. And less than two months later, he was invited to join the faculty of the University of Toronto as Dean of the School of Law. Here he continues the "fight between a narrow professionalism with all the emphasis on training and know-how, and a broad, liberal education in law."

The School of Law enjoys an excellent reputation. "We are better known in the rest of the world than in our own province," says Dean Wright. Inquiries and graduate students come from countries as far away as China, the British West Indies and Ireland.

"We're looking for what the other provinces give us, equality and fair treatment", Dr. Wright explains. Graduates from the School are penalized now by Osgoode, by being forced to take an additional year.

The School of Law replaces and considerably enlarges the old Honour Law course. "We've taken it out of the Arts courses and put it on a professional basis, as in the other provinces and the United States, to equip students for admittance to Practice". Courses in jurisprudence and comparative law have been introduced under Dr. Friedmann.

"Comparative law is almost completely neglected in Canada. The nine common law provinces know very little about the civil law system of Quebec. And Canada until now has produced little of a juristic nature aside from textbooks". The School is faced with the paradox of an increasing faculty and a decreasing student body, pointed out Dr. Wright. "Our student enrolment will always be small until the disability of the extra year is removed". There are 65 students in the whole School, as compared with 700 at Osgoode.

Dean Wright is celebrating his twenty-fifth year of teaching. A native of London, Ontario, he was a gold medallist from both the University of Western Ontario, and Osgoode Hall. He earned his degree of Doctor of Juridical Science at the Harvard Law School, an honour shared by only three other Canadians, and in 1921 became a lecturer at Osgoode.

After twenty years of teaching, he was for a year and a half, the youngest Dean ever to hold that office in the history of the institution. He was made a King's Counsel in 1933, and has received Honorary LL.D. degrees from the University of Western Ontario and the University of British Columbia. In 1946 he resigned after ten years from the editorship of the Canadian Bar Review, but continues as editor of the Dominion Law Reports and the Canadian Criminal Cases.

"The ultimate aim is to establish a national, rather than a provincial school of law, free from control by the professions. There it would be possible to carry on graduate work, which is almost non-existent in this country." Dean Wright stressed the need in Canada for law schools like those at Harvard, Yale and Columbia. "Training here is rigorously limited to the individual province. There should be an inter-mingling of students fro mthe whole country".

Dean Wright sums up the situation in this way. "The values of living are involved in solving the problems of living. We must take the law out of mothballs and make it live!"

Indian Summer

Three months from now—if all goes well—forty Canadian students will be winging their way across the Pacific Ocean. Sun-tan oil, mosquito lotions, short pants and pith helmets will be spilling out of their bags. They will be bound for India, to take part in the fifth International Summer Seminar.

To many people, they will only be going on a joyride, seeing the beauties of the Orient on someone else's money. And to a certain extent, this is true: certainly they will see India's beggars, and her temples; her ruins and her newest irrigation projects. But for these tourists there will be no safaris, no tiger hunts or dancing slave girls.

For they will have gone, not only to see the land, but also to meet their fellow students in Indian universities, and to try to find (in five short weeks) some of the things which make their brown-skinned brethren tick.

The seminars are, especially, an attempt to set up over a short period of time an international community of university students and professors. In this they strive towards a world university community—the aim of World University Service, the Canadian branch of which (International Student Service) sponsors the seminars.

At the seminars, personal friendships grow up which bridge differences in color, language and religion. These friendships—or their memories—should continue long after the principals have left university and have grown to the economic, social and political leadership of their lands; they could become one of the strongest layers of mortar binding the world into one undivided house.

Last year the seminar was held on the banks of the Gatineau River, just outside Canada's capital. It had originally been hoped to have the seminar in Europe, but financial difficulties intervened; even on the comparatively economical Canadian site, one week had to be cut off the seminar because the drive for money had fallen $2,000 short of its $14,000 goal.

This year ISS has taken a big step, and has made plans for a seminar it estimates will cost $65,000. This, it adds, is no more than the cost of training and equipping a fighter pilot. Whether or not this means Government aid is expected is hard to say; certainly the attitude of the Department of External Affairs towards last year's seminar suggests little hope in that direction. And the universities have never been noted for the ability to give large financial donations. This leaves Big Business as the only remaining source of income. an almost-virginal field in the realm of seminar finances. The ISS might find ripe picking here; if it doesn't the site of the seminar may have to be changed from Raja-land to Hogtown.

The jump from $12,000 to $65,000 is a big one. But to envisage a seminar in India, ISS must have figuratively donned its seven-league boots. True, the step was foreseen in 1951, when for the first time Asian students participated in the seminar, and the theme changed from a comparison between Europe and North America to one between the East and West.

But last year's seminar was still in Canada. This one is in India. The students won't be able to—can't be expected to—absorb even one-hundredth of that ancient land during their stay there. But at least they won't be learning about India second hand.

There will be no "country-club atmosphere" to dull their interest in their studies; rather they should be stimulated by the sights about them. Instead of hearing lectures by American experts on India, they can visit the temples and markets themselves.

Through personal observation they will learn some of the problems of India, and maybe—if they really look—they will be shocked out of their native Canadian complacency enough to do something about them.

Another Approach

Aid, Not War

In the following article Mr. Catto, a First Year Emmanuel student, suggests a new approach to world problems, an approach which he feels would prepare us for World Government.

By CHARLES CATTO

"Militarism has become an American trait. During the decade that we reached our social maturity, war has been made an almost necessary aspect of 20th century living."—The Daily Californian.

Yes, militarism seems to be here to stay for a while. But it's doing things to people. Many of us have heard veterans tell their experiences in language similar to these words from an American soldier, printed in The Atlantic Monthly, February 1946: "What kind of war do civilians suppose we fought any way? We shot prisoners in cold blood, wiped out hospitals, strafed lifeboats, killed or mistreated enemy civilians, finished off the enemy wounded, tossed the dying in a hole with the dead, and in the Pacific boiled the flesh off enemy skulls to make table ornaments for sweethearts, or carved their bones into letter openers. We topped off our saturation bombing and burning of enemy civilians by dropping atomic bombs on two nearly defenceless cities, thereby setting an all-time record for instantaneous mass slaughter."

That's what modern war does to people; it destroys mind as well as body, of both sides. War anihilates spiritual values along with flesh and blood, obliterating truth, reason, and all the elements of morality. War elicits the most bestial in our nature and in our culture; another world war might well be the final blasphemy of homo sapiens.

Few university students will deny this; but who will say more? Are we yet big enough to admit that modern wars are EVERYONE'S fault? The root causes of militarism were and are in all of us, in our selfishness, ignorance, prejudice, and greed; negatives deriving from the lack of a great constructive common striving for the whole human race. Social psychologists tell us that war can be avoided: war is not born into men, it is built into men. No race, nation, or social group is inevitably warlike. Frustrations and conflicting interests which lie at the roots of twentieth-century wars, can be reduced and redirected by social engineering.

We can see that world wars do not achieve their intended goals anyway. A few years ago we were supposedly fighting to free the world from "tyranny". Our "free" side, the Americans, British, Russians and Chinese were all good guys, "our heroic brothers-in-arms". The Germans, Italians and Japs, however, were all bad guys, "fascist beasts", to be exact. But now those "courageous heroes of Stalingrad" who we declared would never be forgotten, are "dirty Reds". Well, what were we fighting for?

Today it seems that anybody who hates Communism is "a friend of freedom", which term apparently includes such paragons of virtue as Franco, Alfred Krupp, and Chiang-Kai-Shek. Also, in spite of the fact of Allied military victory in the last two wars, the number of our opponents is somehow increasing. In World War I there were 140 million people on the other side. In the last war, we fought 300 million; but this time there are almost a billion lining up against us. Freedom is certainly having quite a struggle with tyranny! Yet if we thought it would benefit humanity we'd gladly throw our lives away as our fathers did

The younger generation, confused and resentful, is doubting old slogans, in spite of Time Magazine and Steve Canyon. We wonder when we read about the "peace threat" in the financial pages; we wonder when Maurice Chevalier is denied entry to the U.S.A. for having signed the Peace Petition; we wonder when it takes months to send wheat to a starving nation, but only a few hours to send an army into Asia.

We are faced with a tremendous and baffling problem, yes. But why not look at the causes instead of the symptoms. We can't fight fire with fire

Men and women all over the world are beginning to realize that some aren't getting a square deal or a square deal, while others have private golf courses; the UN Declaration of Human Rights sounds hollow to the disenfranchised, segregated negroes in South Africa. People are becoming increasingly aware that there is "goodness" and "badness" in everyone, and that the same blood plasma is good for Roman Catholics, Communists, Indians and Jews.

Now it stands to reason that out of the present world mess some sort of world government will eventually emerge, if we don't kill ourselves first. Since our next stage of cultural development is probably to be world government, we should be prepating our Canadian minds for World citizenship. But how can the horrors of World War III prepare US or the World for one government?

It is imperative that we try a different approach. If the world spent its 150 billion annual armaments dollars on education, houses, clothing, foodstuffs and the required factories and transportation, the world's standard of living could match Canada's in twenty years. Such a program could be implemented through the body of a regenerated UN—recognized as a vehicle for eventual world government—never an instrument for the enforcement of a corrupt or unjust status quo. Its policy would have to be completely supra-national and positive; implemented on the moral rather than the political level.

At present the U.N. is not completely effective in this capacity; but it can work at building some sort of common idealism, as a beginning, as a foundation phase.

For instance, in Korea we could have sent a different kind of army. We could have sent thousands of doctors, nurses and welfare workers to both sides, armed only with food, medical equipment and indomitable goodwill. We could have made "UN" a symbol that everyone, in East and West, would respect as standing above national differences, interested only in strengthening the bonds of the human family. Think of the impression action like this would have made on mankind. The world might have been filled with hope by such an example. Of course this isn't conventional, but we've tried everything else.

Why not stand on our principles, for once?

Lectures: A Solution

Editor, The Varsity:

The recent annual report of President Smith supports our belief that the present method of instruction by lecture at the University of Toronto is outdated and inefficient.

A question that has often been asked is, "What is the purpose of instruction in the University?" Its primary function is to develop methods of approach in the student's mind to certain types of problems. Secondly, it presents a body of facts and examples necessary for the understanding and solution of these problems. It should also stimulate and maintain the interest of the student in his course. These goals are supposedly attained by the lecture system. We maintain that lectures do not achieve these ends and here are our reasons:

(1) Spoken arguments presented by the lecturer follow one another so rapidly that no time for thought about them is allowed, especially when the student is trying to write them down. The result is that students do not think during lecture hours but copy down the words of the professor and wait till the end of the day, (or week, or year) to do their thinking.

(2) The slavish copying of facts which could be available in printed form seems unnecessarily tedious.

(3) By keeping his students copying during the lecture hour the lecturer loses the opportunity to approach them on a personal level.

Thus the principal fault of the present lecture system is the waste of both students' and lecturers' time. It is an inefficient method for producing poor stenographers.

With the above in mind we propose the following alternative:

(1) At the beginning of the year printed notes covering in detail the facts and ideas to be presented in the course should be distributed. These notes should be comprehensive enough so that no lectured supplementary notes would be necessary.

(2) At the same time each professor should give a few talks indicating the purpose of the course and important parts of it.

(3) The bulk of the year would be devoted to discussions and/or question groups. The instructors' duties in such a group would be to pose leading questions, and answer student difficulties.

(4) At the first of the year dates should be set for a specified number of small tests. These tests are designed to keep the student working, help him estimate his progress and give the instructor an evaluation of his knowledge.

(5) At the end of the year the professor should give a series of talks summing up the results of the course and indicating how it fits the educational pattern.

We are ready to admit that the above proposal has some limitations and the methods of applying it would require careful thought. However we do feel that if it were given a fair trial it would overcome many of the evils of the present system.

Returns Incomplete, But

SHARE HAS OVER $6,000

An exhibit to promote blood donations in the current campus blood drive has been erected in the University College rotunda. Shown reading some campaign literature is Mary Lewis, III UC.

Skule Gave Most; Knox Contributions Biggest Per Capita

"With the second, third and fourth phases of the Student Help for Asian Relief and Education campaign still not over we already have $6,198.08," said Ron Turner, SHARE Treasurer, last night to the External Affairs Commission. Only the canvassing is over; Business Houses, Graduate Students and some members of the University teaching staff are still to be canvassed, he said.

S.A.C. president Syd Wax will report on the Rio Conference Thurs., Feb. 14, to an open meeting.

"The canvassing was mildly successful" said Tim Armstrong, chairman of the SHARE Committee, and added, "Especially gratifying were the personal canvass results of some of the Professional Faculties, in particular those of SPS". It was probably the most successful canvass they ever had, he said.

Largest single contribution to the canvass was made by the Engineering Faculty totalling $661.80, a per capital donation of 40.9c. Trinity, the second largest contributor, collected $579.59. Knox College collected the most per capital, $1.89. Four colleges collected more than one dollar a person altogether.

The low average contribution of Victoria College is due to the fact that Vic students contributed through many other events, said Turner.

Receipts from the Skule-sponsored Band Contest amounted to $149.75, according to the report. This figure would have been greater if Vic's $300.00 cheque (with which they won the Contest) had been added to it, but this would have made Vic's total personal canvass $2.00 and brought their average down considerably, said Turner.

Joan Presant, Chairman of the Toronto Branch of the National Federation of Canadian University Students thanked Tim Armstrong and the SHARE Committee in the name of the EAC. "We have as much already as we had a year ago now, and last year our receipts consisted of money as well as goods," she said. "This year we still have the sources of outside contributions," she added.

Miss Presant said she thought the campaign was "definitely successful".

Blood Drought Here Clots Up Campaign

Less than seven per cent of the student body has come forward to donate blood for the recent campaign sponsored by the Red Cross.

This news was received yesterday in an interview with Miss Miles, director of the Red Cross Branch service in Toronto. Commented Miss Miles, "We are very pleased with the initial enrollment but we're hoping for and expecting a great many more."

The campaign, which was conducted on the campus by the Students' Administrative Council, ended officially last week but applications are still being accepted. A special clinic for students is being held this Friday from 12:00 noon to 4:30, added Miss Miles.

"The demand is, and has been great" stated Miss Miles. "Our commitment for the Armed Forces is 10,000 bottles of plasma which is 30,000 donations of blood." Civil Defence also needs blood and a stockpile of plasma is essential. In case of an atomic attack, Miss Miles estimates that 250,000 unit (comprised of plasma and blood) would be needed in the stricken area. National disasters such as floods and fires would also be covered by this Civil Defence stockpile.

Miss Miles felt that donators should not wait until fierce fighting breaks out but that they should donate regularly so that sudden outbreaks will not deplete the supply. An instance like Korea, where the fighting has died down temporarily, should be used to stock up plasma.

Miss Carruthers, the nurse in charge of the donating ward reported that about 80 to 90 students had donated yesterday. The relaxing music and subdued atmosphere had its effect, as none of the students fainted.

To Show Photos In Annual Exhibit

Entries are now being received for the Hart House 30th Annual Exhibition of Photography. The show will be held in Hart House Art Gallery from Mon., Feb. 18, to Sun., March 2. Any member of Hart House may enter prints which must be handed in to the Hall Porter at Hart House not later than 6.00 p.m. Friday, February 15th.

The Exhibition is being arranged by the Camera Committee of Hart House. Exhibition Manager is Dave Sprott, IV UC, who will be glad to answer any inquiries on submitting entries. Entries may be submitted in five classes: pictorial, record, scientific, color transparencies and natural color prints. Only prints never shown before in the Annual Exhibition may be entered.

All mounted prints should be 16" x 20", though either vertical or horizontal mounts are acceptable. Prints should be packed flat and be submitted with an entry form which can be obtained from the Hall Porter at Hart House. Each entrant may submit a maximum of twelve prints and six transparencies.

This year a large entry is expected in the color transparency section. Last year there were over 200 entries. Those accepted by the judges will be displayed in light boxes in the Art Gallery. Transparencies should be 2" x 2".

The judges will be John J. Lawson, A.P.S.A., A.R.P.S. of the Toronto Camera Club, Professor A. F. Coventry, Chairman of the Hart House Camera Committee for the past twenty years, and F. E. Moffatt, Toronto commercial photographer. There are three awards in the competition; the A. F. Coventry Award for the senior division, the K. B. Jackson trophy for the junior, and the Hart House Award for the color section. These trophies are on display in the Camera Club rooms at Hart House.

There will be a private showing of the exhibit for members and

Urge Yearbook Sales Deadline Draws Near

Material for this year's Torontonensis has been coming in fairly well, but sales on the book are still low, said Torontonensis Editor Walter Mackenzie yesterday.

"The emphasis in this year's book will be on an all-year mixture rather than just the graduating class". Mackenzie said. "We are putting campus life pictures throughout the grad section, and this year we hope to increase the total number of these informal shots by two or three hundred percent," he added.

The major problem is selling, Mackenzie said. "The estimate on the contract is for two thousand copies and to date we have not sold more than a thousand." Orders are being taken by Torontonensis reps in all faculties, he said, as well as in the SAC offices. He urged that students who want a copy of Torontonensis buy them now. "With the paper situation the way it is, it takes two months to fill an order, and we must give the printer ample time to order the paper if we want to get the book out by June," he stated.

Decide Divorce Laws Bad But Marriage Laws Worse

Marriage is the great compromise and should not end in divorce, decided the Varsity Radio Round Table last night. Although there is much wrong with Ontario divorce laws, there is even more wrong in Ontario marriage laws, said the panel.

"While there is a strong feeling among Christians that marriages are made in heaven", said Rev. Mr. Nichols, "I'm quite willing to discuss the possibility that some marriages that are performed by civil offices might fall outside the Bible teachings regarding divorce."

Strong objection to non-church weddings was raised by Bud Trivett, Law II. He felt that all the philosophy and belief that went with such a wedding made civil marriages a poor second choice. This thought was countered by Barbara Screaton, UC III, who said, "Two people marry themselves, and while the church may perform a necessary office, as long as the two are sincere I feel they will not suffer from a civil ceremony."

Professor J. N. Emerson, of the Anthropology Department, maintained that our reforms could come in pre-marital instructions and exposure to the "hazards" of a married life. He qualified the latter to "within a reasonable point." He felt that present laws used adultery as an excuse rather than a reason for divorce.

Mores and morals of the American scene were also held accountable for the necessity of divorce. Among these was the "Hollywoodized" ideal of the perfect marriage. "This is not only unrealistic but undesirable", said Professor Emerson. Marriages are part of a mature person, and no one having maturity could imagine the saccharine sweetness of film marriages, he said.

This was the third program of the current season of University Round Table discussions. The program was moderated by Harry Rasky, CKEY staff man. Only one of the participants, Ted Nicholls, has had previous experience on the radio. He was part of a crowd at one time and in his second appearance read a line.

Liberal Law School Is University's Role

In 1949 the University of Toronto finally realized that the teaching of law is peculiarly the function of the University and, according to Dean Wright of the Law School, his appointment at that time was on the condition that he would not allow the University to be pushed about by any profession.

Dean Wright was the guest speaker at last night's open meeting of the University College Lit. The Junior Common Room was packed for the open meeting .The last Lit meeting was cancelled for lack of a quorum.

In his speech on legal education in Upper Canada, he said that law is concerned with the problems of people, groups, and nations living together and is connected with political science, philosophy, and the other humanities. Dean Wright said that law is a creative process with shifting concepts and it is this aspect which many lawyers have not admitted. This problem is not confined to Ontario according to Dean Wright.

The difficulty experienced in legal education, he said, is whether the University is to play the role in law which it plays in the other professions. Dean Wright said that the medical profession stands highest in public opinion amongst the professions and this is because it is built around the University which encourages research and integrates the profession. He said that he never could understand why the legal profession had not taken the lead from the medical profession.

However, now that the University has realized the position it should play in the teaching of law the University was spending money and would continue to do so, according to Dean Wright, as the University was determined to have a School of Law.

Dean Wright said that the University thinks that it has laid the basis of a national law school and he said that the University of Toronto Law School is the equivalent of any law school in Canada. He said he could not see why a graduate of the University Law School should be required to take an additional academic year at Osgoode. He said that it is not a question of standards of education as a student from Ontario could "sneak in through" the back door to be admitted to the Ontario Bar by first being admitted to the Bar in another common law province and paying an admission fee.

Dean Wright emphasized that he did not want to see the Law Society lose their right to regulate admission as he felt that some standards were necessary, but that he did feel that competition in educating lawyers would be for the better. He said that he would like to see Law Schools set up in the other Universities, provided that the standards were maintained.

Malnutrition and Disease Are Problems for UN

The real problem of the United Nations in advancing Freedom and Responsibility is the serious malnutrition existing in many areas of the world, said Marvin G. Gelber in his talk yesterday. Mr. Gelber, a graduate of Toronto, was speaking to an assembly of the Student Christian Movement. His talk was the fourth in a series on the Nature and Attainment of World Peace.

There are many insecurities in the world, he said. Ravages of disease, political and military insecurity, fear of German and Japanese expansion by their neighbouring nations are also causes of the general unsatisfactory conditions in the world to-day.

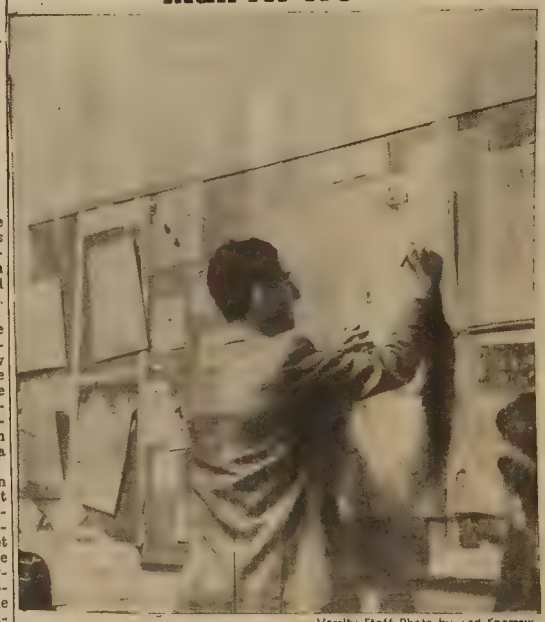
The United Nations is combating all these situations, but because of their small budget the work is slow, explained the speaker. VD, TB, Typhus and Malaria are all being attacked under the health program. This comes under the direction of the Food and Agriculture Division because they are trying to increase the productivity of the agricultural regions first.

European countries have long been troubled by German industrial power and their military might, he said; for many years this fear has troubled them and for this reason they refuse to accept aid from Germany.

It is a notable fact that the USSR and the satelite countries are not represented on the councils that are constructively helping out world conditions. Despite this fact these councils are doing a vital job and are doing it well, added Gelber.

"Freedom is a slow progress," was his concluding remark. He attacked the principles of the Colombo Plan in that although it gives peoples progress as we see it, it does not fill their needs for food and health. He mentioned that the average Arab lives to be only thirty-five years of age.

After the talk there was a discussion group.



Feierabend Addresses IRC Today

Dr. L. Feierabend will address the International Relations Club's meeting today on the topic "Communist Industrialization of Eastern Europe". The meeting will be held in the U.C. Women's Union, 79 St. George St. at 4:00 p.m. today.

Formerly the Minister of Justice and later of Agriculture in Czechoslovakia, Dr. Feierabend is now working for the radio programme Voice of America. Before the war he was Managing Dierctor of the largest Czech union of agricultural cooperative associations, and then President of the Czechoslovakia Grain Monopoly.

While his government was in exile in London during the last war, Dr. Feierabend served as Minister of Finance, but when he refused to co-operate with the Soviet Union and the Communist party he was forced to resign from the government in 1945. He left Czechoslovakia for the United States in the winter of 1948 during the Communist coup.

One of the most important positions on The Varsity is held down by News Editor Ian Montagnes (above). Among his other duties, he is faced with the task of evaluating and criticizing each news article in every edition of the paper each morning. He is seen here pinning the pages of yesterday's paper up on the bulletin board in the News Office, where eager and ambitious reporters may "learn by their mistakes." Every morning the News Editor has to take time out to fill the news book with possible leads for stories. Then he spends the rest of his almost-lectureless day trying to find writers to cover these stories. The New Editor must be constantly contemplating possible news stories.

SPS Invaded By Speakers And Movies

For the next two weeks the Engineering Society will be helping the Engineering Institute of Canada (EIC) stage their annual undergrad membership drive throughout the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering. The reason for the endorsement, said Ron Turner, IV Eng., is that the EIC is the only organization that can speak for all engineers. Furthermore it is the only national organization of its kind in Canada, he added.

The campaign is to consist of two parts. For the next few days Skule men will be besieged in the form of place by prominent engineering speakers and secondly, by five movies. All will endorse the Engineering Institute of Canada. These are the many signs hanging in the engineering buildings will introduce the undergrads to the Institute and indicate the benefits of membership.

Starting next week, February 11, the actual recruiting will begin. The feature attraction will be a real honest-to-goodness country fair booth with Skule lovelies selling not kisses—but EIC membership applications.

REPRINTED FROM MANITOBAN

You sit in a barren, medium-sized room, and you inhale deeply on your cigarette. It is your seventh cigarette that morning and the butts of four others lie flat on the floor around your feet. You stare at them and you start shifting them around with the toe of your right shoe.

Four other people are in the room with you, sitting on benches or chairs. Two are policemen, although only one wears a uniform. One is a girl whose face is reasonably familiar. The other is a stranger, and his face means nothing except that if you were to venture a guess you would say you thought he was a doctor. (You would be right, too, because he happens to be from the coroner's office.)

Nobody talks—nobody is supposed to. In front of the open door a uniformed guard walks back and forth, every so often directing people to various parts of the building, according to their inquiries. Every so often somebody goes in or out of the large courtroom across the hall.

You are a witness in a murder trial and consequently you are not allowed to hear the proceedings, but may only enter when summoned. Even then you may only take the stand and answer questions asked you by crown counsel or defense attorney. You will be under oath and expected to tell the truth.

You cross your legs, and then you uncross them. You stand up and stretch and the other four pair of eyes look up at you. The doctor smiles understandingly; the girl has an embarrassed grin on her face, and then she looks away. You light up a cigarette and try to put one smoke ring through another. You don't succeed.

The door across the hall opens and a name barks from the official just on the other side of it. The guard at the door repeats the name and the doctor jumps up, coughs self-consciously, adjusts his tie, and nervously walks out. Everybody goes back to their meditation. Every so often the girl gives a deep sigh, and once you thought you caught her sobbing.

You wonder how things are going across the hall. Sometimes you want to rush out and demand to know. Three days have elapsed since the trial began and you've been in this room each day. You are still not sure what you are going to say. You see, your brother is charged with murder, and you are the only eye-witness to the crime.

One of the policemen (the uniformed one) is called now. You look down and rest your head in your hands. You just stare at the cigarette butts. You try not to think about it. You know you're just kidding yourself. You weep wondering what you are going to say. You wish you could make a decision and not worry about it.

Now there are only yourself and the girl left. You offer her a cigarette and she declines, politely. You admire your brother's taste; on his behalf, you appreciate her loyalty. You feel genuinely sorry for her. Ere long she is called and now you are left completely alone with yourself.

You saw it happen, and you can see it now, as if it happened yesterday. You saw your own brother pick up a baseball bat and smash it against the deceased's skull. You were sitting with him in his apartment and he was complaining about this guy who was bothering his girl. He said he had warned the guy to leave her alone. He said that he had told the guy to come over, and they would iron this out. He said the guy would never bother her again.

You remember how you had treated his words lightly, how you thought he was just excited, and talking tough. You remember telling him to take it easy, that things were not as bad as he thought, that everything would be all right. You remember him pulling the guy into the room by his lapels, grabbing the bat which was in the coat alcove, coldly uttering, "I warned you", and smashing the bat on the unfortunate guy's skull. You can still hear that sickening thud, followed by the dull plop of body meeting floor. You remember, too, that it was all over before you could do anything about it, and you sit there now and kick yourself for not taking him more seriously, for not doing something, anything. But now it is too late, and no one knows better than you do.

You wipe a few beads of sweat off your brow, and you ask yourself again what you are going to say. You clench your fists and unclench them and you want to be a million miles away. You want to know how you can hang your own brother. Your own flesh and blood is in there on trial, and with you rests the answer to whether he will live or die. You know also that he has taken the life of a fellow human being, and you know that it was premeditated, and within the legal definition of murder. You understand that you may be punished for perjury, if you lie. But worst of all the arguments against lying is the fact that by doing so you know you are taking the law in your own hands, just as much as your brother did.

As much as you try to justify the honest approach, you can't for one minute divorce from your thoughts that he is your brother.

You hear the door open across the hall and you hear your name. The guard at the door of the witness room repeats your name. You struggle miserably to your feet, and your feet feel like feathers as you move too quickly into the crowded courtroom and into the witness box. You barely have time to take in the judge in his purple robe and scarlet sash, the twelve good men, tried and true, and your brother sitting in the prisoner's dock right in front of you, before you are sworn by the clerk.

The crown prosecutor moves over in front of you, a few papers in his hand. You twist your neck loose from the tight collar of your shirt. What are you going to answer?

Carnival Will Feature Fireworks And Sports

The McGill University Winter Carnival Committee has invited all University of Toronto students who are interested to take part in its annual Winter Carnival to be held in Montreal and St. Sauveur from February 14 to 16.

This is McGill's biggest annual event with a program including fireworks and sleigh-riding under the floodlights on the top of Mount Royal, skiing competitions, an ice show, Carnival Revue featuring production numbers from the annual revues of several universities and a Grand Carnival Ball Saturday evening.

The committee has sent a letter to the Students' Council offering to provide official escorts to ensure the visiting students of seeing and taking part in everything as well as to arrange hotel accommodations if desired.

The McGill Women's Union has already informed the SAC that it would be happy to provide accommodation for all coeds interested in going to Montreal for that special weekend.

For all students who want to spend one final smashing weekend before the exam fever rolls around, should contact either SAC office. If enough students are interested special arrangements will be made for the trip. The train will leave Union Station on Thursday, February 14.

2 Quartets Will Compete Friday Night

Finalists in the quartet contest were announced after the second semi-final round in Hart House at noon yesterday. The "Four Artsmen" and the Emmanuel College "Four Dog-Catchers" were the quartets selected to compete in the finals at the Vic At-Home Friday night.

Heard last Friday were the Skule "Floor Polishers", the "Four Artsmen", and the "Four Minims" from Pharmacy. Yesterday the Meds "Four Cadavers" and the Emmanuel "Dog-Catchers" sang. An entry from Forestry withdrew because of illness.

The Emmanuel four yesterday sang two medleys of old favorites. The group is composed of Bruce Vanstone, first tenor, Bruce McLeod, second tenor, Roy Neehall, baritone, and Paul Morrow, bass. Director is Doug Gardner.

The "Four Artsmen" are also singing in the All-Varsity Revue. The quartet includes Larry Heisey, first tenor, Monty Coughan, second tenor, George Tovall, baritone and Ernie Ball, bass.

"NO STUDENT SHOULD MISS THIS REVUE"

By DAVID PEDDIE

Moliere is one of those great geniuses of the theatre who combines many elements in the simplicity of a truly great drama. TARTUFFE is just such a play, one of Moliere's best, and so it was a real pleasure to see it performed at Hart House Theatre last night by the Trinity College Dramatic Society. But for college students to present such a play was daring, and it presented a challenge to them that one could not expect them to meet fully.

Considering this then it is safe to say that TARTUFFE is the best student production I have seen this year—generally speaking that is. No one gave a very bad performance, but neither was anyone really outstanding.

Tartuffe is a religious hypocrite of the worst kind, who invades the house of Orgon, a wealthy gentleman, by means of his prostestations of piety. He completely fools this generous man and even turns him against his own family. He is given the deed to Orgon's house, offered the hand of the daughter, Mariane, in marriage and confided in completely. His ruse is discovered by Orgon through Tartuffe's lusting after Elmire, Orgon's wife. However by this time Tartuffe has had the opportunity to gain control of the house, and he is about to put Orgon's family out in the street when he is arrested by the police. King Louis XIV has seen through the imposter.

Nothing could be more straight-forward than that, but Moliere's genius lies in his mixing together of social satire, a stylish comedy of manners, and pure farce. To convey all these things would tax better actors than we have in Toronto. But the Trinity actors are to be congratulated for allowing us poor starved theatre-goers the thrill of seeing Moliere performed.

Director Herbert Whittaker deserves credit for the fine set which is in the proper spirit of the play. It was also a pleasure to see the way he achieved groupings on stage—especially in the last act when Orgon's family was gathered around his prostrate form. However I felt there was a serious lack of good pacing. In the first act the laughs were few and far between. Since judging from the rest of the play he was emphasizing the farcical element, it seems to me that it would have been more consistent to play the beginning to the hilt. This emphasizing of the farce was however a clever move for it was handled with much more gusto by the actors, and the style required for the comedy of manners would have been impossible.

The more formalized manner of playing that is more common in France is unknown here, but it was evident from the production last night who were the actors of experience, for they displayed at least the beginnings of a certain superficiality that is the most essential to Moliere.

James Armour as the foolish Orgon was the standout of the evening. His rages were funny and yet one never forgot the real meaning of them. His bearing was at all times authoritative and indeed he was not only the butt of jokes but the master of them. As his wife Elmire, Ann Murray was charming, beautiful, and very gracious. I felt that her original reaction to Tartuffe's advances was too overt and girlish, yet in the scenes where she makes the first advances she was just right. Her movement were always stylish and in keeping with her feelings and thoughts.

Martin Hunter as Tartuffe had, I felt, the wrong approach to the part. He was too ingratiating and one could not believe in his religion at all. He is supposed to be the ultimate in hypocrisy not lechery.

Of the others Margaret Martin, Joan Armstrong and Harold Threapleton gave good characterizations that were colourful and convincing.

Bye Bye Bat

A bat invaded Hart House Barber Shop yesterday morning apparently seeking a shave and haircut, but to its unexpected dismay no barber would volunteer to shave it. Instead it was shooed out in a great hurry while startled students sa:, "hair-cut", and looked on in helpless amazement. The entire incident took only a few minutes and after the winged intruder had been disposed of the 'hair-cutters' returned to finish their jobs and the line of "long hairs" seated outside began to move normally again. It had been hinted that greater care will be taken from now on that both women and bats will be kept out of the traditional male stronghold. Precautions were called for when it was feared that the bat may have been a female.

Year Book Sales

...ver of the Students', more students in their junior years are buying Torontonensis this year than in the past. They like to have a pictorial record of their college days, he said, and thinks the trend is towards getting a copy for each year at school. "It is a grand book for the graduate to have", he added.

According to Mackenzie, Torontonensis should be off the press by June 1, in time for graduation. The absolute deadline for recent athletic pictures and February social events is February 28, he said. Sales officially close this Friday, but unless we have reached the quota for each college we may have to continue selling into next week, he said.

Social Work Students Convene In Montreal

Seventeen students from the University School of Social Work are planning to attend a national conference of social work students in Montreal this week end.

The purpose of the conference is to consider the formation of a National Association of Social Work Students and to discuss the place of social work in Canada today. Mr. George Davidson, Deputy Minister of Health and Welfare will be the guest speaker and he will address the group Saturday night.

Representatives from all eight social work schools in Canada will attend the Conference. The Toronto group includes six official delegates: Irving Mann, Henry Hicks, Jan Martin, Ann Snoblen, Norman Gulko and Morris Stein.

To Show

their guests on Monday, February 18th, when the judges will give a criticism. Women of the university will have an opportunity to view the exhibit on the two Wednesday and Sunday afternoons during the show. A second criticism will be given at 5:00 p.m., Wednesday, February 27th.

Call Meeting To Take Action To Open Radio Station Here

There has been agitation on the campus and in the back page of The Varsity for the University of Toronto to have its own radio station. A meeting has been called for Tuesday, February 12, in Room 60, UC basement, to do something about this, said John Tinker, spokesman for a new campus group whose goal is to have a radio station operating by next fall.

Pointing to the example of Queen's and St. Xavier University, both much smaller than the University of Toronto, Tinker said that with a scattered campus and so many students living in the city, a university radio would mean greater participation in events. It would help to secure a bigger audience for forums, debates, and dramatic and musical presentations on both a student and staff level.

At present the problems of space, equipment, licensing, finance, and programming seem formidable, but a determined working team can put that station in operation, he stated. He would like to see at the meeting all those who are interested, and particularly those who will be active on the staff next year.

It will take a great deal of work, imagination, and responsibility to operate a station which will maintain the required standards, Tinker emphasized. The initial steering committee will need people to work on technical, programming, and administrative problems he said.

When We Had Snow

The last time snow fell on the University of Toronto the campus appeared like this. Unfortunately, the capricious weather has been melting the snow almost as soon as it falls and the landscape looks like something that just came out of a mud bath.

Coming Up

THURSDAY—
1:00 p.m.—CAMPUS L.P.P. CLUB: Stewart Smith on Marxist view of Capitalist System: first of four lectures in series sponsored by U of T LPP Club, in Rm. 13, UC.

LPP Leaders Have Series On Marxism

The Campus Labor Progressive Party is sponsoring four lectures this month on the views, methods and objectives of the LPP party. Publicity director Ron Biederman said that these lectures, at 1:00 p.m. on Thursday, have been started because of the confusion on the campus about the party and to explain what really constitutes the party platform.

Stewart Smith will open the series tomorrow with a lecture on the Marxist view of the capitalist system. Biederman said that Hal Proctor will speak on Feb. 14th on the Marxist view of the state. Proctor is actively engaged in education work for the LPP party.

The third speaker will be Vic Hopwood, speaking on historical materialism. Hopwood has a Ph.D. from Toronto in philosophy.

"What is Socialism" will be the subject of the concluding lecture by Harry Hunter.

ISS Seminar

Four students from the University of Toronto will be allowed to go to the International Student Service-sponsored seminar in India next summer. Application forms will be available in the Students' Administrative Council office in Hart House in ten days. This year's number is two down from last year's Toronto quota of six.

EAC to Urge OttawaAdopt Colombo Plan

The EAC recommends that the SAC urge the Canadian government to commit Canada to the Colombo plan. This motion was passed at the EAC meeting last night, in view of the failure of the Canadian government to date to announce any commitment for the next five years.

This recommendation came in response to a letter from E. M. Nichols of the Student Christian Mission, requesting immediate action on the part of all university organizations to get our government to support what Nichols terms "one of the few positive approaches which are being made in today's international crisis".

Nichols' letter urges a three-point public program in support of the Colombo plan. He suggests that concerned individuals write to various cabinet ministers asking that Canada commit herself adequately and publicly. Voluntary groups should study the plan and make public statements concerning its use, to be forwarded to the government.

Finally, the members of such groups should undertake to send an individually written letter to each member of parliament, Nichol said. These steps should be taken as soon as possible to try to secure government action before the end of this fiscal year, in March.

The Colombo plan calls for a capital development program in the Commonwealth countries of South East Asia totalling about $5 billion over a six-year period, two billion of which is to be raised internally, the rest externally, by contributions from other commonwealth countries. This money is used to give Asian students technical training in other countries, and for technical developments within India.

Blues To Play Buffalo To-night Meet Queen's Again On Saturday

Pitching Sportshoes

The biggest game in the Major intramural basketball game yesterday was the Pre-Meds-UC III tilt which ended with the Medsmen on the long end of a 29-21 count. The Docs jumped into an 18-1 first period lead, and were on their way after that. Cowan with eight and Dalgleish with seven were high for the winners while Klein netted six for the Redmen.

Vic Fifths doubled the score on the UC VI 34-17 after running up a 28-10 margin by the end of the second stanza. Corner swished 13 for the Vicsters with Garfinkel hooping six for the losers.

There were five Minor B-ball games played at Hart House yesterday and two at Little Vic. In the Upper Gym contests PHE A's muscled their way to 40-23 win over IV Eng. Business as McKenzie and Barnhill racked up a dozen markers apiece. Endear and Burke scored seven and five respectively for the Skulemen.

The UC Lit. quintette massacred Vic Scivs 67-24 in the highest scoring tilt of the day. Bernstein got 19 points for the UC'ers with Freedman running him a close second with 18. Dobson managed ten for the Slarlet and Gold.

Dents scored a double victory over SPS as the III yr. team beat III Mech. 34-31, and II yr. edged III Civil 21-19. Dodick fired nine for the Incisor squad in the first game, while Martin dropped in 13 for the Engineers. In the second game Hollingsworth of SPS was high man with nine, and Hraisowsky got eight for the Dentists.

Those poor Trinity Orphans still seem to be lost as the Meds IV year boys buried them under a 58-12 score. Tops for the Surgeons were Hutchinson with 16 and Mackenzie with 13.

Over at Vic the St. Mike's basketballers swept two games from the Viosters. In the opener House 63 took a 44-35 win over the Vic Blues despite a 21 point output by Atkin of the losers. Cookie Lynn and Bill Giblin were best for the Mikemen with 17 points each. The second game saw House Ten jump into a 22-7 first point margin to smother Vic Flukes 58-23. Bull Winters sunk 12 points for the Irish with Sullivan and Byrne getting ten each.

In a couple of games played late Monday, St. Mike's 49 swept to their third straight victory as they downed the UC Doughnuts 34-15. Len Thompson netted 13 for the forty-niners with Jascha Dillon adding seven. "Macaroni" Bartolini was off his usual game and was held to a single bucket. Seyfreid hit six for the Doughboys. Vic PU's raced up to 36-20 win over Pre-Med Ib and Crooner Burnett potted 18 points. Sweitz topped the Medsmen with 11.

Hockey action saw Forestry A's team swamp UC III 7-2 as Swartzma turned the hat trick. Hall with two and Beatty with one completed the Woodsmen's scoring. Frame and Smith divided the UC counters.

Skiing Team Is Selected

Toronto Coach Bill Beck announced yesterday the skiers he will take with him to the intercollegiate championships at St. Saurent next weekend. The six skiers will include three of last year's team and three newcomers.

The oldtimers are Per Berg-Johannesson, cross-country and jumping, Hal Godding, four-way competitor, and Don Esson, downhill and slalom. Newcomers are four-way Jorgen Myhre, cross-country and jumper Haakon Greaker, and downhill and slalom entry Pete Bowen.

The team leaves Toronto on Wednesday. They will stop overnight at Montreal before continuing to St. Saurent on Thursday. The downhill and slalom are held there and the cross-country and jumping events are held in Montreal on Saturday.

The Senior Basketballers will have a bull by the horns tonight in every sense of the phrase, when they play the University of Buffalo Bulls, who have been ranked 12th in the nation. It will be a return match, as the team lost 81-54 at Buffalo in December.

In that game, Bud Natanson was still playing, but Eddie Brennan had not yet joined the team. The best performer in that game was Bill Huycke, who scored his most yet this season, 17 points. A return to the form he showed in that game would aid the Blues a great deal. The game will be played at Mutual Street Arena, will start between 8:30 and 9; or whenever the Jayvee game is over. The Junior Varsity takes on the Buffalo Jayvees, who beat the Toronto outfit in an abbreviated game in December. Madden and Russell were not playing in that game, and will be available Wednesday in the effort to even up the account. They stand a considerably better chance than their senior counterparts.

Buffalo has one of the hottest cage prospects in action, in an 18 year old 6 foot negro freshman, Jim Horne. Horne outjumps men six inches taller than himself, and has quicker reflexes than any opponent Toronto players have faced. Other Buffalo stars who were with last year's team are Hal Kuhn, Jim Rooney, and Charlie Johnt.

The Blues play their first Intercollegiate home game this Saturday with twice-beaten Queen's providing the opposition. Varsity's record in Intercollegiate competition is two wins and one loss, with one of the wins a 64-52 squeaker over this same Queen's aggregation. The Blues will have a slight advantage since they will be playing on their home court, but the game can still go either way. Western leads the league with two wins and no losses, and a Varsity loss could put the latter out of the running completely.

The wrestlers also take on Intercollegiate opponents as they match muscles with the University of Western. Coach Wipper's matmen have done well in the most of their meets so far and should give Western a battle.

Swimming rounds out the A-night program with Toronto meeting the U. of Rochester.

The John Stulac-coached mermen have cut a wide swath through their opposition this winter with Olympic prospect George Stulac showing the way.

Sportswoman

The PHE I hockey team swamped Meds I 7 to 0 in the arena at noon yesterday. Although June Collier was the goalie that recorded the shutout for thePhyseds, it was Shirley Kyle, the doctors' net keeper, who shone in the nets. The PHE squad was almost constantly breathing down her neck, but the number of spectacular saves increased rapidly as the game progressed.

PHE scored early on their shorthanded opponents, sinking two goals in the first period.

Meds grabbed the puck from the face-off in the second frame, but soon lost to the PHE crew. Then Jackie Calhoun, on a clean breakaway, slammed a third counter home for the Physeds. The Red and Blue team added two more counters before the end of the frame.

The third period saw the Physeders walk all over the tired Meds team. Shirley Kyle kept up her terrific performance in the Saw-bones net, but couldn't keep PHE from scoring two more goals.

Top scorer for PHE was Bobby Plant with three, while Jackie Calhoun copped two. Kay Legate and Anne Sharp fought hard throughout the game, sinking one goal each. The Meds crew sadly missed the Haines-Sarles combo, but Marilyn Sonley and Mary Arnold gave all they had in a losing cause.

SPORTS PROFILE

Eric Kofmel

One of the University's strongest competitors in a sport which consists almost entirely of man-for-man competition every moment the participant is engaged in it, is Eric Kofmel, for four years Varsity's best sprinter from 220 yards up to a quarter of a mile. In any race against competition of normal Canadian Inter-collegiate calibre, you can always count on Kofmel.

In his fourth year of Civil Engineering, the husky skuleman has had a record of nearly perfect consistency in his main event, the 440, ever since he enrolled at Varsity. He has always registered times of from 51.8 to 53 seconds in all his races over that distance.

Last Saturday, in the indoor meet against McMaster and Buffalo, he ran the 300 yard leg of the relay against McMaster's Don McFarlane, who in last fall's Intercollegiate meet won the 100 in 9.9 and the 220 in 22.5, both well below any times recently posted in Canadian college competition. When Eric got the baton, he was six or seven yards behind McFarlane. McFarlane lengthened his lead a couple of paces in the first lap, but in the second Kofmel poured it on and passed his highly-touted opponent on the final bend.

He placed second in the 300 yard dash, in which only two men at a time are run together at Hart House. Koenig of McMaster won the event, best time winning. Both men were paired with Buffalo entries, and were left behind after one lap.

In the 440 last fall, the same Koenig took the lead early in the race. Several runners took off at a breakneck pace and Kofmel was boxed neatly on the first turn. In the straightaway, he came up from sixth to second, and with five yards to go he passed Koenig to finish in 51.9, to provide the fans with the most exciting finish of the day.

In many ways a nearly perfect image of Western's B. McFarlane, he would likely have been a good man to have had in the blue uniform carrying the football in Varsity's lean days on the gridiron in 1949-50. Standing 6' 1", he weighs around 190 pounds normally, though now, in probably his best condition ever, he has somehow got down to 175. Possessing a stride of about six or seven feet, he has a very powerful high knee action which few of the stragglers around the Hart House track care to stay in the way of.

He had never taken a very serious interest in track or any other sport while in high school at Oshawa, except perhaps football, where he played on the line. Even now, he does not believe in working so hard in any sport that the participant ceases to enjoy it, has no use for runners that train to the point of exhaustion every day.

His fastest quarter mile was in the Intercollegiate meet in 1949, when he placed third behind Bob and Don McFarlane in 51.8. Bob McFarlane won the race in about 50 seconds flat. His best 220 is 23 flat.

Being a staunch believer in the policy of not letting the left hand know what the right hand is doing, he has firmly forbidden the printing of anything concerning his (pardon the expression) love life

on the sideline

The Senior basketball game scheduled for last Monday night with Hamilton Normal School, was cancelled from the Hamilton end. Seems the teachers were busy practicing their chosen profession at game time. However fans will have a chance to see some basketball as played by the better half tonight, when the Varsity Intermediate squad takes on a team from St. Clements School, a private school for girls. The tilt is slated for 5:30 in the OCE gym.

The Intermediates have already shown their colours, when they trounced the McMaster Intermediate team in Hamilton two weeks ago. Since that time the squad has been reduced to the normal twelve player size so the team should present more co-ordinated front tonight. The Intermeds boast the experience of such players as Donna Howson, who played Intercoll basketball last year, and Josh Scott, down from this year's Senior team.

Unlike the Senior team, the Intermediates have no previously appointed coach. The girls rely on golden-hearted grads for a guiding hand. This year they are fortunate in having Kay Bates at the helm. Kay brings all sorts of valuable ideas with her, for she managed the Intercollegiate team in her days as a PHE student. However, this unstable coach situation means that the Intermed team can't be organized until after Christmas, which cuts the practice time pretty short.

Of things to come: Varsity Intermeds tackle Humberside Collegiate squad on Monday, February 11, at OCE gym. On Tuesday (Feb. 12), McMaster brings both Senior and Intermediate teams to Toronto for a return bout at Ryerson gym.

Could be that the carrier pigeons in Edmonton are taking the statistics of the distribution of the male population of Canada seriously, this being leap year, and don't want to waste their time flying this far east. Or maybe the telegraph boys are peddling square wheeled bicycles. Whatever the reason for the delay, we'd still like to know the out-come of the Canadian Intercollegiate Telegraphic Bowling Meet. The deadline for entries was January 16th. That was two and a half weeks ago. Should be time enough to figure out the standings if they are using the usual methods.

McMaster University Gets A New Library

A millionaire philanthropist who spent half his lifetime helping needy people and worthwhile institutions as self-termed "trustees for their fellow men and stewards of God," never forgot from the time he left home his father's vital interest in McMaster University.

This remembered interest has resulted in the recent opening of a new $540,000 library at McMaster University, the major part of the cost coming from the foundation of David Mills and his wife Ella for whom the library is named.

Originally a native of St. Catharines, Mills made a fortune in the United States as the inventor of a spark plug that General Motors used as one of its standard models. Using this fortune he became known as a philanthropist of large wealth and broad sympathies.

The huge new library building is designed on a functional plan but in keeping with the architecture of the rest of the campus buildings. It features a browsing and music room. Students can listen to the music here reclining on comfortable lounge chairs or choose from among the more recent and popular books for leisure reading. There is also an art library, a Rare Book Room and a social room for housing the Baptist Historical Collection.

Three principles that have guided the policy of the library in the past were constantly in the minds of the planners of the present building. These principles encompassed the needs not only of adequate material for undergraduate work readily available in books as well as the latest developments of microfilm, films and records, but included a desire to promote general reading among the students outside their courses and, according to their own inclinations, as well as an appreciation of the fine arts.

Considerable attention was also given to adequate lighting, acoustical treatment, air conditioning and the design of furniture and equipment, because, commented the Librarian Miss Marget Meikleham at the dedication of the building, "there is nothing inherently scholarly in discomfort in a library."

To permit anticipated future growth and development, no bearing walls were used and partitions dividing rooms can be altered for future needs.

A novelty that Toronto students can well envy is the colour scheme designed to provide a pleasing background for reading and study, Miss Meikleham said. Gray, rose, green, gray-green and beige in various shades and combinations in different rooms harmonize with the light oak or birch of woodwork and furniture and the light and dark brown cork, the gray linoleum or cream terrazzo floors.

To speed traffic, the floors have been specially arranged. On the first floor are grouped the main circulation desk, card catalogue, bibliography room, cataloguing and order departments, administrative offices of the library and the reading room, huge and rectangular with seats seating eight people. The circulation desk and card catalogues are situated in the Memorial Hall which one can gain entry to all other rooms on the floor.

On the second floor, reached from both the stair hall and the reference room, are housed the fine arts collection. The third floor includes the Reserve Reading Room and Book. Desk, the Rare Book Room and the Browsing and Music Room.

A further novel innovation is the provision of a typing room for students who want some peace and quiet as well as the benefit of a typewriter for that final draft of an essay. The floor stack floors, in addition, are connected with the main desk and other parts of the building through an intercommunication system.

With all these new features keyed to the most efficient and progressive use by students and faculty, a plan that had long been mulling in the minds of administration and faculty finally has come to fruition.

Above is McMaster's new library-building. To the right is a room it contains for browsing and music. McMaster was the scene of this year's Canadian University Press Conference.

ART REVIEW

New Canadian Show

More than a hundred paintings, drawings, etchings and prints are crowded on all the available wall-space throughout Hart House. They are representative works of European artists and hobbyists, who came to Canada to live and work freely.

The exhibition illustrates almost all schools of painting and some of the national influence on Continental art. In many respects the exhibited works differ from the the art usually shown in Toronto. It is not an exhibition of the work of European artists who were transplanted into a new surrounding. These artists brought their heritage from overseas and are slowly digesting a new land, where everything is less tightly knit and less crowded.

Some use their past visual experience as a contemporary inspiration. As long as their representation is not quite literal the results are very pleasing. Where, on the other hand they tried to be literal, the results are rather disastrous.

Some, like Helmut Gransow in his "Burnt Farm on Upper St. Lawrence", forgot the charming European post-card views and expressed what they are seeing now.

In abstracts, the painters lack the charming humor which can be found in the American works.

The most outstanding artist is Mlle. J. Gilson, whose work is represented by four paintings, "The Pipe Smokers" in the Art Gallery and three paintings in the Map Room. Her work is very pleasing because of its rich dark coloring. It is very rhythmical in its staccato composition.

Several paintings, also very mature are by Mme. Martha Rakine, who had her first Canadian show in Hart House Art Gallery last year. Her work is a little looser in execution than most Canadian paintings, but it is very humane, organic and very deliberate.

A surprisingly low number of paintings reflect political or social comment (past or present). This may be a result of the new and unexpected artistic freedom, an unwillingness to be melodramatic or a sort of escapism from the harsh realities of the past. Also a criticism of some of Canada's startling ugly streetscapes is missing. This may be a kindness or a result of the jerrying.

At any rate, this show will give an encouragement to many a "new Canadian". To the "old Canadians" it will give some idea of what is happening in art behind the various cultural and political curtains. It will show him also what the average painters of other lands do. To some it may be a shock, to the others a surprise. To some, by comparison, it will clarify the pronounced flavor of Canadian art.

It is an interesting show, worth seeing and thinking about.

The exhibition will stay in the Gallery, Reading Room, Map Room and the East Common Room until February 17. It will be reviewed on Wednesday, February 13 at 5 p.m. by its organizer Mr. Clare Bice, Curator of the London Art Gallery.

Joe Kamenicek.

President's Report (3)

Library Fuel

If University College had not given an English test, the declining circulation of library books at the University of Toronto might have aroused a furore of public indignation all by itself. As it is the library has had to play second fiddle to remedial English, adding fuel to the fire of illiteracy charges.

The average student is reading less than half as many books as in 1938-39 and the Chief Librarian, Dr. Wallace, suggests that the growth of extra-curricular activities partially is responsible for this. According to Dr. Smith, however, the problem of extra-curricular activities "did not bulk so large in 1950-51" and yet the library circulation declined 15% over the previous year.

Of course, there are many diversions — movies, plays, radio, even television — aside from those sponsored by the university, which take up student time. Time which otherwise might be spent reading. None of these activities, with the exception of television, are particularly new. Nor are beer talks and party-going recent innovations.

Students are apparently still reading, but not much, not imaginatively, nor avidly. Or so Acta Victoriana's reading poll indicated. Yet, obviously students are not resorting to the library for their books.

Some of this may be the library's — or the University of Toronto's — own fault. For about thirty years now, the library has been overcrowded; each year its inadequacy has been increased. When it has been found necessary to place over 85,000 books in cold storage, we can hardly be surprised that many students have been displaced in the crush as well.

The restrictions which hedge about the withdrawal of books from the library do not encourage carefree trips to the library. The long voyage to the desk and the delay in port, present healthy challenges to the determined reader. Yet, it appears that few of this species remain. Today few will use the library unless forced by the desperation of essay deadlines to do so.

Nor is the overnight book habit a salutary one. The number of books which can be read by ten o'clock the following morning is fairly limited. It is usually difficult to do justice even to one. As a result, a generation of scanners and leafers, rather than readers, is being produced. Few students think of reading University of Toronto library books; rather they consult them.

Finally, the bureaucratic attitude, trademark of all large organizations, tends more and more to filter into the library. University librarians usually put rules before individuals, the good of the community before the need of the individual. Desperate students find themselves continually confronted by regulations with the strength of steel. Admittedly, rules are very necessary, but they are made to be broken occasionally. They should never be made into gods to whom unfortunate students are occasionally sacrificed.

However, a new building and a liberal outlook will not immediately produce a race of bibliomaniacs. Even socialists admit that the proper number of calories will not produce an artist; nor will a specific number of cubic feet and a cheery smile bring forth a generation of curious readers at the university.

The University of Toronto can only provide a "local habitation and a place" for those interested in reading. The bounty of the Building Fund is promised but at present the University Library is one of the last places where students really want to read.

Science And Society

New Signs Needed

The following is the second in a series of articles by Michael Humphries, IV Psychology, in which the author suggests that although science may point to social defects, it cannot remedy them.

Many of us have observed how children experiment with the environment in their efforts to discover what could and could not be done to satisfy their needs. To succeed in the social environment the child soon learns that certain signs (symbols) require him to behave in a specific manner. If the consequences do not follow in a consistent manner the sign will soon cease to have any significance. The signs used by the individual in a society gain whatever consistency they may have by virtue of the fact that the consequences are defined and maintained by the society. However, as societies change, the consequences to specific signs also change, giving rise to uncertainty and confusion in the minds of those for whom the signs were once dependable indicators of rewarded behavior.

The process of education is one in which society tries to instill in their young the desired sign-behavior patterns. In societies where there is no formal education system these sign-behavior patterns are contained exclusively in myths and rituals, or they are obtained by the individual through the tedious process of trial and error. With the advent of writing the wisdom of the culture in the form of systems of reliable signs was recorded and transmitted vicariously to the next generation without the necessity of the inefficient trial and error method.

In time certain institutions developed in society as authorities responsible for the clarification and exposition of these reliable sign-behavior patterns. Religion at one time was such a system, and so long as society supported the consequences the signs were adequate in the social area to satisfy the needs of the individual. In the years that followed the origin of the institution, the signs and behavior-expectancies supplied by religion in regard to the physical environment were found by experience to be inconsistent with the satisfaction of certain needs. Eventually the same scepticism which motivates the child to experiment with the object his mother calls the "hot stove" stimulated some men to experiment with the physical environment. Unlike the child, these early scientists discovered that the sign was unreliable due to the inadequacy of the behavior evoked by them.

First in the physical area, and later in the social area the scientist applied this child-like curiosity to the world in his efforts to find some system of signs which would be reliable measures of what to expect The more reliable the signs became the more efficiently was society able to satisfy the physical needs of its members. Just as the individual must experiment to a degree with the sign-behavior patterns supplied by his parents, so the scientist with his refined methods test the adequacy of the sign processes present in his culture.

Many of us have seen people react inadequately to certain signs. The reaction of some people to garter snakes is obviously inadequate—it would only be adequate if the garter snake were in fact a dangerous reptile. In the area of social sign-behavior the mention of a word, or some small gesture, is sufficient in some instances to produce behavior which we classify as eccentric or psychopathic. This abnormal behavior can be described as behavior to signs which are in fact not what they are assumed to be. If the belief that Mother Jone's special remedy will cure tuberculosis is not born out by experience, this sign-behavior is one which might threaten the well-being of the individual and is consequently considered an unreliable or pathic one.

Often social groups enforce the acceptance of prescribed reactions to pathic signs beause to admit that the signs are unreliable is to endanger the entire belief structure of the group. To take away the navigator's compass on the ground that it is faulty without supplying him with a substitute makes it impossible for him to act at all. If you can provide him with a more adequate instrument no harm will be done, if you can convince him to try it, and if you can train him in its uses. All to often the pathic signs are maintained long after they have been shown to be unreliable largely because there have been no established substitutes.

In the past the artists, poets and philosophers, the people interested in the organizational aspects of society, have been the persons responsible for the creation of new signs. Science has developed as a specialized aspect of society whose responsibility it is to test the reliability and adequacy of the signs; science does not supply new signs, it merely informs us of the relative usefulness of the ones we have. Science may suggest that if certain goals are desirable then we must cease using the sign-behavior patterns now enforced and search for more adequate ones. The inability to define such behavior patterns as "democracy" and "communism" for example, in terms that are adequate indices of the existing state of affairs will very likely force us into another war. If our present behavior patterns are based on unreliable signs, why not admit it, and change the signs to ones by virtue of which the responses made will be adequate to our needs.

OUR READERS WRITE

Bookophile's Beef

Editor, The Varsity:

May I congratulate The Varsity! This week's book page has achieved critical heights beyond which it seems almost impossible to climb.

In the leading article on this page ("leading" indicates it appeared at the top of the page) supposedly dealing with Ernst Cassiner's newest book, one of your contributors has achieved the Absolute. He has succeeded in mentioning the names of TWENTY writers (including Camner's) during the course of one short article. More than this — he has written a book review of some six paragraphs, and nowhere has he mentioned the book. Let us not take this lightly — I am sure that this procedure fulfills some obscure need on the author's part. My problem is simply this — why should I be forced to read it?

I turn to The Varsity's book page (I don't think I am alone) to read about a new book, not to be confronted with the eighteenth century from the worm's eye view of the pedant. Is the book page the proper place in which to demonstrate one's "memory-work" in the history of philosophy? Is it not possible for the critic to tell us whether the book appeals to him or whether he thinks it up to Cassiner's usual mark, or as a last resort, whether the jacket is red or blue? Is it really necessary for him to relate his own prejudices and opinions about philosophy? Is there any thought behind a review whose only critical comment is that the book "is a must for anyone in Philosophy or English"? In short, my point is this — let us reserve the editorial pages for learned discussion about philosophy and religion; and on the book page, let us talk about books!

Science Should Paint Them

Editor, The Varsity:

On February 4 in the first article of a proposed series on the role of science in society, Michael Humphries stated that science is a method for obtaining knowledge from nature. This knowledge is to be used to help man obtain certain specified results; but it is not to be used to help him decide what these specified results, these values, are to be.

I suggest that it is foolish not to use all information available in making any decision; surely this holds in deciding what is of value, what is "good". Scientific knowledge is the largest body of verifiable information that we have. Why not use this knowledge in deciding what is "good"?

Scientific knowledge is not, of course, easily acquired. No person, when confronted by a problem, can quickly and easily grasp all the relevant scientific information. Surely, then, it is the duty of those who have this knowledge, the scientists, to use it in deciding what is "good"! And should not society at least be made aware of these decisions?

Is this not a courageous and challenging stand much to be preferred to Mr. Humphries' plaintive question ". . . but whither are men leading science?"

VARSITY MOURNS KING

Campus Frivolity Pauses Pay Homage To Sovereign

The King is dead, and with the rest of the world the University mourns his passing. Around the doors of University College and Simcoe Hall, black crepe will mark the death of a monarch. The social whirl of the University has slowed to a standstill, as have the intercollegiate sports and Athletic Nights. The Union Jack returns to the top of its flag-pole today to honor our new Queen, but tomorrow it will sink again until the Funeral of George VI.

At a special meeting early last night the Caput requested that out of respect for his late Majesty, all dances and other evening events of a social nature be cancelled or postponed until the day after the funeral.

Classes and labs will continue as usual, until the day of the funeral, when they will be withdrawn. The Library will be closed the same day.

There will be a memorial service for the late King in Convocation Hall, at 11 a.m. the day of the funeral.

Front doors of University College, Simcoe Hall and the Museum will be draped in black in his honor.

No decision will be made concerning the date of the funeral, until Queen Elizabeth returns to England. She is expected to arrive late this afternoon.

The flag flying in front of Hart House was at half-mast yesterday, and will remain so, after today, until the funeral. Today it is at full mast in honor of Queen Elizabeth.

All intercollegiate sports have been cancelled for a week. As a result, the Basketball Blues didn't play last night, nor are they expected to play next week. The scheduled hockey game with Laval on Friday has also been postponed, as has Saturday's Athletic Night in Hart House.

The Trinity production of Moliere's "Tartuffe" played in Hart House theatre last night, but there were no curtain calls, and at the end the audience sang "God Save the Queen." The All-Varsity Revue is expected to continue, except for the night of the funeral.

However, dances at Victoria College, the Newman Club, and the University Naval Training Division have all been postponed.

In the absence of the Chancellor and President of the University, no messages of condolence have been sent to the Royal family, Registrar J. C. Evans said last night. Chancellor Vincent Massey is in England; Dr. Smith is in New York on his way home from India, and is expected imminently.

The Caput, which defined the University's observation of the King's death, is a body composed of the President of the University, the Warden of Hart House, and the heads of the faculties and federated colleges of the university.

Dances Cancelled For King's Death But Shows Go On

Hart House Theatre will be open next week, but there will be no dances to supplement the social life of the campus.

Out of respect for the late King, Victoria College, the Newman Club, and the University Naval Training Division have all announced postponement of their dances.

The postponement followed a request from the Caput that all dances and evening events of a social nature be cancelled until the day of the King's funeral.

The Vic At-Home was to have been held this Friday in Hart House. Alex Gigeroff, Social Director of the Victoria College Union, said last night that the dance would be held at some future date. He added that the bandleader, Benny Louis, had agreed not to hold the VCU to its contract.

The Newman Club has also decided to cancel its Ball, to have been held in the Royal York. The Club's President, Ron Williams, said the hotel had agreed to release the club from its contract.

In harder straights are the sailors of the UNTD, whose formal on Feb. 15 has been cancelled. According to Lieutenant I. D. Townley of the UNTD, no cadet dances will be held until permission is granted by Ottawa. And at the death of of King George V in 1936, the orders took nine months to come, he added.

The Whitney Hall formal is also on Feb. 15. So far no information is available as to whether or not the dance will continue.

In Hart House, the 5 o'clock concert went on as scheduled yesterday. Sunday evening concerts are also expected to continue as scheduled.

In the theatre world, there is no certainity as to future action. The Trinity production of "Tartuffe" played last night, but may not continue. As matters stand now, the All-Varsity Revue will go on next week, except for the night of the funeral.

A V R officials announced last night that when the funeral date is set, tickets for that night will be re-distributed between the other three week-nights, provided the funeral is in the middle of the week. They added, however, that Friday and Saturday nights are sold out.

This means that students holding tickets the night of the funeral date should be able to exchange their tickets for others on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday nights.

"My first reaction is that the AVR should go one," commented Registrar J. C. Evans, Secretary of the Caput. "However, I feel I should get further advice," he added.

I expect that anything of a theatrical nature for which tickets have been sold will have to carry on except for the day of the funeral, the Registrar continued.

When the news of the King's death was first announced, members of the Trinity Dramatic Society wanted to cancel their production of Moliere's "Tartuffe", now playing in Hart House. However, on the advice of Trinity Provost Seeley and the Lieutenant-Governor's office, they decided to continue last night.

They will be meeting this morning to decide whether or not the show will continue until Saturday.

Caput Request

Out of respect for his late Majesty, King George VI, the Caput requests the cancellation or postponement of dances and other events of a purely social nature until after the day of the funeral.

J. C. Evans,
Registrar.

Masthead Meeting

All masthead members of The Varsity are asked to attend a meeting in the editorial office at 5 p.m. today.

THE VARSITY

VOL. LXX1 NO. 78 THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO Thursday, February 7, 1952

KARSH, OTTAWA

Mourn At Other Colleges

Other universities will be affected by the King's death in much the same way as Toronto

At McGill, Principal Cyril James announced cancellation of all social and public activities. The order affects both staff and students, and will remain in effect until after the funeral.

The cancellation order does not apply to meetings of small groups of students or staff where the general public would not normally be invited. However, all inter-collegiate sports scheduled for this weekend have been postponed.

"The intramural and academic life of the university will continue as usual," a McGill official stressed.

Among the scheduled activities cancelled or deferred are the last performance of the Red and White Review (McGill's version of the All-Varsity Revue), and a Model Parliament scheduled for last night at which the Liberal Government was to propose the annexation of Canada to the United States. Also postponed was a tea, at which the five finalists for the title of Winter Carnival Queen were to be selected.

At both Queen's and McGill lectures will continue as usual but will be cancelled the day of the funeral.

The social life at Queen's has been hit hard by King George's death. Among the activities cancelled are the annual Co-ed Formal, the Aquacade, Tri-Service Dance, and the Year Socials.

The Queen's Journal staff expects all athletics will be cut, but no confirmation was immediately available at their press time. However, they expect out-of-town trips will continue, except on the day of the funeral.

—VARSITY—CAPUT—

Our Queen seen on a visit to the University of Toronto last October, when she was the Princess Elizabeth. The visit to the campus was part of the Canadian tour which she made with her husband, the Duke of Edinburgh. Behind her is Vincent Massey, Chancellor of the University, who has since been appointed Governor General of Canada.

McTaggart Talk All 'Bout News

The man who received the National Newspaper Award for 1950 for best reporter of the year will speak to the student body today at 1:00 p.m. in Room 8 of University College.

He is Ken McTaggart, feature writer of nine years standing with the Globe and Mail. He will be speaking on the field which he has specialized in since 1924 — Newswriting. This will be the first in a series of Varsity-sponsored lectures on the newspaper field. Primarily for the Varsity staff, they will be open to the student body.

Mr. McTaggart has covered every federal election since 1924, and "most of the big stories" in the last 25 years. He has been overseas several times in connection with his newspaper work.

Born in Toronto, he attended University College at the University of Toronto in Pass Arts. He was an occasional contributor to The Varsity, and worked on The Goblin, campus humor magazine of the 1920's.

After College, he wandered from job to job, working, for instance, on steamboats for a while. He drifted into the newspaper field, working for the Toronto Daily Star for five years. He worked with the Mail and Empire till its amalgamation.

McTaggart has worked for the government, as an Information director for welfare research. In 1943 he joined the staff of the Toronto Globe and Mail, and has remained there ever since.

Other lectures in the series will be given by Ted Reeve, Sports Editor of The Telegram, Nathan Cohen, CBC drama critic, and Wesley Hicks, feature writer for the Telegram. They will be held on Thursday of this week, and Monday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week.

KEN McTAGGART

Present Caput Measures Not As Drastic As '36

Empire Mourns King George V"; this was the headline that greeted undergraduates 16 years and 16 days ago, at the passing of George V.

Undergraduate activities were curtailed to a greater extent than at the present time; Hart House Theatre was "closed indefinitely", and the play that was scheduled to open that week, Tolstoi's "Power of Darkness" was indefinitely postponed.

The C.O.T.C. dance, the University of Toronto's one big military social event of the year was cancelled. The U.C. Junior-Senior Dance also scheduled for the same evening was postponed.

Day classes went on at the regular tempo but all evening classes for two days after the King's death were withdrawn. Classes and labs were, of course, withdrawn the day of the burial and a special Memorial Service as held in Convocation Hall.

Black draperies decorated the entrances to University College, Simcoe Hall and the Royal Ontario Museum. A column in The Varsity also made mention of black mourning display at Diana's, which was "looked upon as almost a campus institution".

President Cody addressed the students at the Memorial Service, which was held exactly a week after the death of King George V. The Varsity was not printed on the day of the burial.

Sports events then did not seem to be affected to any great extent; intercollegiate and interfaculty events were being run off as usual. The Varsity basketball Blues lost to Broadview Y two days after the death.

The flag was raised for six hours in honor of the new King, Edward VIII the day after the death, but was lowered, again up to and including the day of the funeral.

C.O.T.C. Commander Major H. H. Madhill cancelled the parade that was to be held on the day of the funeral so that students could attend the Memorial Service at Convocation Hall.

Chancellor of the University, Sir William Mulock was quoted as saying, "Although His Majesty did not manifest the qualities of a great man nevertheless the hold he had acquired on the hearts of his subjects and on the whole world goes to show that today not only a Prince but a great man has fallen in Israel."

SHARE Publicity Called Misleading

Publicity methods of the Student Help for Asian Relief and Education (SHARE) campaign were attacked at the University College Literary Society on Tuesday night.

Branded as "absurd" by Tim Armstrong, SHARE chairman, was a motion which read, "This Society approves the aims and objectives of SHARE, but deplores the means by which the campaign was conducted." A vote of 7 to 6, with eight abstentions, carried the motion proposed by Richard Clee, II UC.

It was stated that only about 1000 of the 6000 dollars raised by Share would definitely go to Asian relief.

Clee charged that although the students were under the impression that all of the donations would be used in Asian relief, $4,300 was contracted to the International Student Service (ISS) and $600 was needed to cover campaign expenses.

SHARE chairman Armstrong stated that a complete budget of the allocation of funds had been given to the twenty-three student governments, the Students' Administrative Council, and had been stressed by the public relations campaigners. The plan was also printed in The Varsity, he added.

Armstrong said that $1,100 of the SHARE funds would be given to the ISS to be used for the seminar, exchange scholarships, and appeals to outside sources (expenses involved in canvassing wealthy philanthropists who donated some $32,000 last year).

"No attempt was made to keep this part of the budget from the students", said Armstrong. "I believe this $1,100 to be the most productive part of the budget because it multiplies itself many times through the ISS outside appeals", he added.

David Rose, IV UC and president of the UC Lit, said yesterday, "In view of the fact that the money was apportioned between ISS administrative expenses and Asian relief on the assumption that $11,000 would be collected, that now, with only $6,000 collected it might be advisable to review this three-way division in an effort to ensure that a worthwhile amount does go directly to Indian relief."

Charles Hanly, IV UC, indicated that a proposal similar to the motion carried at the UC Lit had come before the SAC recently. He stated that although some of the SHARE money did go through the ISS, it still went to Asian relief indirectly. Hanly added, "It should be made clear how these funds are dispersed."

Fee Increase Recommended By Eng. Society Executive

A 100% Engineering Society fee hike was recommended last night at a Society executive meeting.

If a student vote next week upholds the proposed raise, engineering students will next year pay an extra three dollars in incidental fees, boosting the Eng. Soc. share to $6.00 per student.

Doug Sherk, IV and Eng. Soc. president, said that the present $3.00 fee was set in 1942. "Costs of everything have risen since that time," he said, "and the Society has been forced to discontinue some activities and functions."

Treasurer Gene Kurchak, IV, told the executive that the price markup in the engineering stores would be substantially reduced, if Skulemen approve the fee increase.

"We also plan to resume publication of 'Toike Oike' as a newspaper, besides the quarterly, which alone would cost $750." he continued.

With the additional funds, the Society would also publish an Engineering Handbook, describing its functions, and general engineering information. Sherk said that other Canadian campi have handbooks, including the University of British Columbia and McGill University. "Proposed handbook expenditure is $750," he added.

A general meeting of Skulemen is planned for next week Sherk announced "Explanatory literature regarding proposed expenditures and purpose will be distributed before and during the meeting," he added, after which the students will vote on the increase

"It is hoped to re-establish a number of the activities and functions the Society was created to operate and perform," Lois DeGroot, IV, said.

The additional funds would permit a twenty-five cent hike in grants to engineering clubs, Sherk continued.

Two dissenters in the fee raise vote stated that a $3.00 raise was unnecessary. One, president of the Eng. Business Club, said that their club had been able to operate satisfactorily on their present $1.00 per student grant.

Second-year president Doug Christie reported that Skule's freshmen reception "was fine as far as it went," however, as soon as it was over, "condition slipped back into their apathetic rut." He recommended to the Society a general and partial return to the classical initiation idea.

"Specifically, I suggest that on the Monday and Tuesday after registration the freshmen be put to work by the Eng. Soc., and several be required to report for fatigue duty each day for at least the following month," he explained.

The executive also passed a motion requesting that Victoria College return the three Skule band uniforms stolen from Skule, charging that Vic "did not win the recent Convocation Hall band concert in an honest and fair manner".

Jim Drummond, IV, said that two cheques totalling $325, "collected" at the concert, have been withdrawn by Vic to be donated through the regular channel. Vic had previously promised to return the uniforms if Skule won the concert, he said; since Vic employed "their typical underhanded means" to win the concert," the uniforms should be returned as per agreement, he said.

Here we see King George VI, accompanied by the Hon. Wm. Lyon MacKenzie King, then Prime Minister of Canada, as they appeared on the front walk of Hart House on their visit in 1939. At that time, three years after he had been crowned King, the students at Varsity turned out en masse to give their now mourned regent a welcome every bit an equal to the one witnessed last fall when Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh visited Hart House and the University of Toronto Campus. The whole campus is re-adjusting itself to a new daily routine for the next week, as the caput has asked for cancellation of all social events.

Bookstore Looted

Montreal (CUP)—A lone burglar broke into the McGill Bookstore last Sunday during a heavy snowstorm and made off with about $200 worth of pens and pencils, but no cash. Mr. Ray Verry, manager of the book store found footprints half-covered with snow outside a broken window when he came to open up next morning.

Desk drawers and papers were scattered all over the office of the store and the cash register had been forced open.

This was the fourth robbery on the McGill campus during the past year. Last fall a large sum of money was stolen from Sir Arthur Currie gym, in one of two thefts there. The third was in the McGill Union.

SCIENCE NOTES

Big Brown Eyes

By JIM ANDERSON

9.00 a.m. — Science editor greets new day with customary vigor. Remembers that today article on sound recording for column is due. Massive loss of vigor.

9.30 a.m. — Learns many happy things about the use of drugs in the relief of pain in childbirth. Being a male did not feel immediate need for information. Decided this would be a good topic for future writing. But dull.

10.00 a.m. — Slightly more interested. Find that drug hyoscine used in twilight sleep technique comes from Belladonna type plants. Although slight arts background, realize that Bella Donna means "beautiful woman" in Lower Slobovian tongue. Find that term first used by members of the seductive sex who used drug to make pupils of eye dilate. Males then remark on female's big brown eyes. Decide it is all a plot.

10.30 a.m. — Much impressed to note that the lowly jimson weed of cowboy fame contains also alkaloids of this series. Learn that fair amounts of belladonna drugs kill human beings deader than door nails. Rabbits, however unimpressed by this mortality, are able to guzzle the stuff in large quantities without benefit of undertakers. See record of an entire human family rubbed out by consuming a bunny who had indulged. Resolved on no more dining at the chicken castle.

11.30 a.m. — Find that another drug of the series, known as atropine is used by ophthalmologists to dilate pupils for more accurate eye examinations. Remembered once kissing an unknown girl after an eye refraction accompanied by very dim vision. One eye closed without the help of drugs. Never did see if it was worth it or not.

12.00 noon — Consumed lunch. Peanut butter, not rabbit sandwiches. Great state of well being. Looking forward to afternoon lab in pharmacology.

2.00 p.m. — Arrived in lab. Noticed with slight discomfort that we are to inject belladonna drugs into each other. Tried to get away. Tripped by colleague. Resigned to fate.

2.00 p.m. — All hands issued flame tablets made of hexamine to be burned for the sterilization of injection. Due to trembling fingers, spilled water on tablets. End of fire. Beginning of profanity. Tender sensibilities shocked.

2.00 p.m. — Injection prepared. Fiendish expression on lab partner's face. Pulse rate: 160. Large syringe prepared. Alcohol applied liberally. Externally. Approximately two gallons of Hyoscine solution injected into left arm. Should have reminded partner of abscence of flesh on said member. Part of injection enters bone.

2.30 p.m. — Pulse rate down to 60. Life not worth living.

2.50 p.m. — Saliva which had been copious before, now practically absent. Pulse still low. Moderate blurring of vision.

3.00 p.m. — Very dizzy. Wish I were married.

3.00 p.m. — Almost comatose. Have not swallowed for ten minutes. Couldn't. Glad I am not married.

3.30 p.m. — Lab partner titters when I stood on hand. My hand. Am not going to the Meds At Home.

3.45 p.m. — Notified by friends (?) that pupils are widely dilated. Beginning to appreciate the dangers of maternity.

4.00 p.m. — Reach Varsity office to type out column. Smiled at Rich Clee. Thought it was the editor. Typing with one hand not as difficult as it sounds.

4.45 p.m. — Finished article. Still have not swallowed. Decide to seek drinking fountain or other source of fluids.

5.00 p.m. — Have resolved against pregnancy.

Former Czech Minister Slams Soviet Control

"A government against the people, by the police force, for the Kremlin," is Dr. L. Feierabend's opinion of the peoples' democracies in the Soviet-controlled Eastern European states. Dr. Feierabend addressed the International Relations Club yesterday on "Communist Industrialization of Eastern Europe.

Formerly Minister of Justice and later of Agriculture in Czechoslovakia, the speaker is now working for the radio program Voice of America.

"The driving force in these countries is fear and blind obedience," Dr. Feierabend said. Tito was a good communist, as was Stalin, but he was not willing to obey blindly, so he was characterized as a deviationist. Husbands do not trust their wives, he continued, and parents are afraid of their children. Many parents have been put in jail because their words were repeated by their children, he said.

Thousands of people have disappeared and no one knows where . . . "I have known the feeling of going to bed at night not knowing whether I would wake up in the morning a free man or not," Dr. Feierabend said.

"Profiting from the benevolent attitude of western statesmen and misusing their trust," Russia moved into the Eastern states and began to develop heavy industry, the speaker said. Steel and coal are being produced at a rapidly increasing rate, he said, and now Russia looks to Czechoslovakia and Eastern Germany to produce her supply of precision tools, arms, ammunition, etc.

This kind of heavy production is detrimental to the free world and also to the countries themselves as it produces not consumer goods, but capital goods, Dr. Feierabend said. To achieve their targets the government must put more and more people to work . . . "but this they do gladly because it is a remedy for over-population". In a recent issuance of rationing cards, no cards were given to those who were not willing to work for the communists, he said.

The communists know that a communist regime has never been overthrown by a force from within; the people are waiting for a force from without, Dr. Feierabend said.

5 Skulemen Will Present Stud't Papers

The Engineering Institute of Canada (EIC) is holding its annual Students' night in Hart House at 8:00 pm tonight. Third and fourth year students in Engineering will present papers on varied topics to an audience of graduate and student engineers.

There were originally 15 entrants, but a series of elimination contests was held to determine the 5 finalists that wil speak. The subjects range all the way from Electronic Computor Memories', to be presented by Mike Harrison, IV Eng. Phys., to 'Explosives', by R.T.F. Sherk, IV Chemical, and 'Solar Energy', by Ray Nash of IV Mechanical. The list of topics is sufficiently extensive for everyone to find something of interest.

Student's Night is an annual event, but this year it is being run in conjunction with a campaign to recruit Student Members of EIC from the Toronto Campus.

Reverend Davies Debate Speaker

Merthyr Tydfil is the name of a valley town which has been the industrial centre of Wales since the seventeenth century. It was in this town that the Reverend Emlyn Dacies had his first ministerial position. Reverend Davies, of Yorkminster Baptist Church, will be the speaker at the next Hart House Debate, Tuesday, Feb. 19, when the motion will be "Resolved that the State should be responsible for the morals of its citizens."

Rev. Davies has been interested in debating for many years. In his student days he was secretary of the debating committee and represented his university at an International debate at Geneva and in many inter-varsity debates in Britain. While at University he also played centre half on the Wales "Varsity Blues" soccer team.

During the depression years Rev. Davies made a study of Communism to see if the Communist Party was following its doctrinaire of assuming that unhappy social and economic conditions would make the people of Merthyr Tydfil sponsor to the party.

Born in a small Welsh village almost on Offa's Dyke, Rev. Davies received most of his education there, and after graduating from the University of Cardiff he received a degree of B. Litt. from Oxford for research in Ecclesiastical history. His first ministerial position was in Merthyr Tydfil and from there he went to London where he was a Baptist minister throughout the London blitz.

From London Rev. Davies returned to Wales as the National Secretary of the Student Christian Movement and two years later was appointed Professor of Ecclesiastical History at his old College in Cardiff. Six years later, in 1950, he visited the United States and Canada as an exchange preacher and addressed the Baptist World Congress at Cleveland, Ohio.

Rev. Davies has a keen interest in the youth of today and commented on his concern with Dr. Smith's Report. "Few people realize the wide gulf separating the University students from the average citizen and this problem is not confined to the U of T," he believes. He expressed surprise when he learned that women were not allowed in Hart House, especially for the debates. "This debate will decide whether morals are like the fruit growing on the tree or like the fruit of a Christmas tree", commented Davies.

Baque's Out Of AVR Job

Jim Guthro, producer of this year's All Varsity Revue announced last night that Terry Lawson will take over the job of Publicity Director for the revue.

Guthro stated that he had reached a "mutual agreement" with former Publicity Director Jim Bacque, III Trinity, in regard to the job of producing publicity for this show. Bacque felt that his other activities interefered with his duties and relinquished the job to Lawson.

Marguerite Gignac (above) plays the title role in the Conservatory Opera Company's forthcoming production of Massenet's "Manon", to be performed at the Royal Alexandra Theatre on Feb. 25, 27, and 28, as well as on the afternoon of Mar. 1. "Manon" is a romantic opera telling the story of a young girl who loves too well, and who is sentenced to deportation to America for cheating at cards.

The Prop Mistress

The Prop Mistress of any theatrical production is usually a much misunderstood and maligned person, especially by people who do not know theatre from the inside. It must be admitted though that there is still a good deal of outmoded puritan type people who can think nothing but evil of all stage people, and unfortunately the Prop Mistress is the first to get the cold glassy stare. This circumstance is of course due to the suggestive quality of the title.

Those who think evil usually try to make the worst of something that is pure and honest. The idea that this particular occupation is one of immoral support to the more excitable artists in the company is completely erroneous. But on the other hand some of these same excitable artists often make the same mistake, and since the behaviour of a Prop Mistress is always above reproach, she usually suffers abuse from within as well as from without.

The job of the Prop Mitress, the real job, is one of great importance. She is responsible for small accessories that do not come under the authority of the stage-manager. Such things can run the gamut from anachronistic boxes to dreft to cocktail shakers, from radios to television sets, and from sword-sticks to licorice-sticks. These props must be kept track of during the run of a show in order to fulfill their function of propping up the actors when they run out of other things to do.

These are only a few cardinal rule to be followed: (1) Never forget to put props on stage, otherwise the actors will go to pieces. Without props they have nothing to hold them up. (2) Do not at any time play games such as putting embarrassing unmentionable props on stage to confuse the actors — it is not fair.

Glenn Gould Plays

This Sunday's concert in the Hart House Sunday Evening Series will be given by the well-known young Toronto pianist, Glenn Gould. Gould was heard in recital in Hart House two years ago, and also the year before that, in the Wednesday series.

Since his last appearance on the campus, Glenn Gould has further enlarged a reputation that was already considerable at that time. He has made a tour to the west coast, where he performed the Beethoven G major concerto with the Vancouver Symphony, and he also played in Calgary. Last spring he played the Beethoven C major concerto with the Toronto Symphony.

Although only 20 years old, Gould has won great praise, not only for his fine technique, but also for his interpretations, particularly of the works of Beethoven and of modern composers.

Toronto is his birthplace and home, and he has been studying at the Royal Conservatory of Music since an early age. Alberto Guerrero is his piano teacher, and he has also studied organ for some years under Frederick Silvester.

Glenn Gould's program next Sunday will consist of two works by the Renaissance composers, Gibbons and Sweelinck, and the Partita No. 5 in G by J. S. Bach. As on most of his programs, he will also include a modern work, the piano sonata by Alban Berg.

Tickets for this concert may be obtained free of charge at the hall porter's desk in Hart House, or though faculty representatives. Ladies may be brought as guests on double tickets. The concert starts at 9:00 p.m. in the Great Hall.

Modern Musicians Recover Eighteenth-Century Forms

"Modern musicians are trying to recover the spirit of the music of the 18th century," said the young composer Paul McIntyre at a recent Hart House Wednesday concert. He was, of course, referring to himself, and to "long-hair" musicians in general; there is little of Bach or Mozart in jazz, bebop or other primitivist music. McIntyre's own Sonatina for piano which he played at the same concert is an excellent example of the neo-classical trend in modern music, not so much in its content as in its design. The composer admitted, in answer to a question, that his object was to give aesthetic satisfaction directly through sound, without the appeal to the other arts, or even to the emotions that the romanticists considered necessary.

Mr. McIntyre will, I hope, forgive me for talking about his Sonatina, though I have not seen the music, and have heard it only once. For me, the immediate appeal of this (on one hearing) delightful work lies in the amazing success with which the composer has managed to construct a symmetrical pattern in pure sound.

He has recovered the ancient art of making such a pattern a thing of beauty in itself. In short, his music has (forgive the ill-omened word) form.

Now the essential characteristic of all musical form is repetiton. No one, no matter how musically sensitive and alert, can possibly recognize any form until the point where he hears over again what went before — a theme, a phrase, a rhythm, or anything else the composer can repeat.

The deep satisfaction that comes from recognizing a musical repetition is, I think very similar to the satisfaction derived from rhyme and alliteration. It is also analogous to a primitive love of reiteration of words, as in fairy-tales.

In any case, it is in preparing the listener for his repetitions that McIntyre makes his composition as successful as it is. In the first place, he revives the long-past-ed custom of repeating the first section of his first movement.

It may be true that the "repeat of the exposition" becomes tedious in Mozart or Haydn if it is performed every time. I personally got the thrill of a lifetime the first time I heard this repeat performed last year in Brahms' C minor symphony (by Goldschmidt in Vancouver).

Whatever one's opinions on the subject in general, one can hardly deny that in a new and perfectly unfamiliar work, the composer did well to state his material twice. The audience was the better prepared to recognize the recapitulation when it came.

Paul McIntyre made this focal point of the form more conspicuous yet by creating a feeling of apprehension just before it — the sort of thing that makes Beethoven's sonata movements the thrilling things they are. And the neat coda with which the movement was rounded out helped to tie up the little package and leave it self-contained.

The other movements also showed the composer's desire to tuck in the ends and leave a neatly-finished whole. I hope the McIntyre style will develop along these lines. (I admit that the Trio-Serenade, which I heard twice, failed to give the same impression of terseness to me as did the Sonatina.)

I would be happy to see more of this formal sort of music come from the Conservatory. Why not a Canadian Mozart? Isn't that just as desirable as a Canadian Schumann or Ravel — or more so?

Christopher Hellejnes.

4 Choirs To Sing Sun. Eve

The fourth annual Intervarsity Choral Festival will be held in Convocation Hall this coming Sunday at 9:00 p.m. The public is cordially invited to attend; there will be no admission charge, but a silver collection will be taken to help defray travelling expenses for the out-of-town choirs.

Toronto will be represented by the Victoria College Glee Club, under the direction of Charles Wilson, III Music. This choir has represented the University at Intervarsity festivals in the past.

The three other choirs at the festival come from McMaster (directed by Dr. Roy McKeen Wiles), University of Western Ontario (directed by Alfred E. Rose), and Ontario Agricultural College (directed by Ralph Kidd).

Each of the four choirs will sing a group of selections. There will be some quite well-known music on the program: "The Children's Prayer", sung by the Western choir; and "The Glory Of The Lord" from the Messiah, sung by the OAC choir; and "Dear Harp Of My Country", sung by the Victoria Glee Club.

At the end of the program, the massed choirs (260 voices) will be heard in several numbers. These will include "The King Of Love" arranged by Edward Bairstow, "Jesu Joy Of Man's Desiring" by Bach, and "King of Glory, King of Peace" by Eric Thiman.

This year's choral festival is the first to be held in Toronto. These festivals originated in 1949, with the same four choirs which are meeting this year met at McMaster University. There has been a festival every year since that time, in 1950 at McMaster, and the following year at Guelph.

These Intervarsity Choral Festivals are non-competitive in nature. The participants are not there to out-sing each other, but to make music and friendships.

The idea for such choral festivals came out of a proposal at a meeting of the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS) some five or six years ago. The idea of competitive nation-wide festivals was felt to lead to too many complications, but the basic thought was recognized to be a good one.

Dr. McKeen Wiles of McMaster by his enthusiasm for the idea succeeded in having the first such festival held in Hamilton.

Hart House Shows "City"

Today's movie showing in the East Common Room of Hart House at 12:30 and 1:30 p.m. will be "The City". This film is a survey of the problem of planning community living in America, embodying the views of the US Institute of Planners.

The turmoil of the planless city and the color and spaciousness of the small planned community are contrasted dramatically and humorously. All members are invited to drop in and see this film today.

UC Win 36-17 Drop Sr. Meds

Senior UC moved into a second place tie with the Senior Meds team as they upset the Docs 36-17 in yesterday's game. The Redmen, playing a tight zone defence, stopped the Doctors almost completely after the opening quarter. Sparked by Johnny Kuznochky they battered the Med-men and piled on point after point in the closing minutes.

The opening quarter, although rather slowly played, gave no indication of the runaway that would folow. Kuznochky hooped six to give the Redmen a 12-9 edge by the break. It was foul shooting that gave them their lead for they traded basket for basket until the end of the period.

After a quick exchange at the start of the second the Docs sat back and watched the UCers demonstrate a zone defence. The winners were ahead 20-11 before Meds scored again and there was no doubt that they were due to win by this time.

The third period saw a sustained stalling stratagy started by UC. The guards passed the ball back and forth until the Meds forwards chased them. Then they quickly rushed the ball in and scored. In their anxiety to get on the offensive the Docs left defensive gaps and UC added several point on fast breaks.

Coopersmith finally broke Med's duck when he swished one with UC up 33-13. The Redmen stalled for the rest of the game and didn't try to pile up the score on their opponents.

Big gun was Johnny Kuznochky who totalled fourteen. He was trailed by Ron Nefsky who contributed eight more for the winners cause. Harvey Coopersmith scored the high total for Meds as he flipped in three points in the losing cause.

Trinity Cagers Lose to E. York

East York Collegiate shaded out Trinity's Senior interfaculty entry in a tight game yesterday. The High School team edged the Buttery Boys 42-37. Despite the loss Corbett of Trinity was the top scorer in the game.

Pitching Sportshoes

There was only one game in intramural hockey yesterday, a 1-1 tie between Dents B and SPS VII. Meek scored for the Dentists and Roberts for Skule. Five penalties were handed out, 3 to the engineers and a pair to Dents. Toby got two of the SPS sentences and Branson the other. Sutterington and Kidd did time for the dentists.

In minor league basketball second year Eng Bus downed Arch C, 37-27. Brown hooped 14 points for the engineers helped by Cohen with 8, Muirhead 6 and Vanloon 5. Caldoff netted 10 for the architects while Easton, Gerskup and Howard had 4 each.

In the major loop, St. Mike's B dropped Pharmacy A's, 43-36. The Irish spread their point total evenly around the squad but O'Hearn scored a dozen and Fuhrman followed with eight. The big scorers for the druggists were McAuley who hooped 14 and Gleason and Francey who got 8 each.

SPS IV took Arch A, 36-24. Scoring was evenly divided again here, but McCann for the Skulemen and Scott on the Architects threw in eight each.

UC IV came on fast in the last quarter to edge out Vic III's 34-30. Fullerton and Zaretsky were 10-point men for the Red and White and Frame wasn't far behind with 8. Henson got 8 for the Vicsters.

In a late game, Trinity B and St. Mike's C played to a 31-all tie. It was very much in dispute but the draw will stand.

There weret wo water polo games on tap. Trinity B whitewashed Forestry B, 5-0. Ashcroft scored a trio of goals for the Buttery and Vernon and Wishart had singles. In another match, SPS II came back with 3 in the second half but it wasn't enough to catch up with Meds II who had piled up 5 in the first. Rosen got the hat trick for the Medsmen while McMillin and Edmunds popped in one apiece. Shipley had a brace of goals for Skule and Freeman one.

Events Postponed Till Funeral Interfaculty Sports Carry On

All intercollegiate athletics have been cancelled or postponed till after the funeral of the late King George VI. The decision was reached by the presidents of the universities in a series of phone calls yesterday afternoon. This will mean cancellation of the hockey game Friday night with Laval, the athletic night Saturday night, and possibly of some of next week's events as well. Last night's games between the Senior and Junior Varsity Basketball teams and Buffalo University were cancelled..

Most of the games will be rescheduled. Certainly the Intercollegiate contests will be played, and the league directors will meet to decide on dates for the games and meets as soon as the date of the King's funeral is announced. Exhibition contests, such as the basketball game with Buffalo, and the swim meet with Rochester dated for the Athletic night Saturday, will be wiped out completely, since it will be all the teams can do to have finished their league games by the middle of March.

The basketball game with McMaster scheduled for next Wednesday at Mutual Street Arena will be another likely casualty. If the funeral is held on Friday, a week tomorrow, as rumors have it, it will involve postponement of the hockey game for that date as well, also with Laval.

There will be no actual financial loss involved in the postponement or cancellation of the games, Athletic Director Warren Stevens said last night. The only important outright cancellation was the Mutual Street doubleheader last night. No guarantees were given Buffalo, since the games were part of a home and home series, each team taking the profit or loss on its home game alone.

The only other Junior Varsity basketball game likely to be affected is the game with McMaster Buccaneers, scheduled as the preliminary to the Senior game next Wednesday night. The JV's, in their capacity as Orphuns in City League ball, have waived play-off action because of the time involved. Entry to the play-offs would have bound them to continue in them as long as they kept winning, which might have laster for a month or so.

The hockey Jayvees will go on their trip to Potsdam and Clinton, New York, where they play St. Lawrence and Clarkson Colleges this Friday and Saturday. Arrangements having already been made by these American Colleges which of course are not affected by the King's death.

The wrestling team had its exhibition meet with Western at the Athletic night cancelled with the rest of the night's events.

All Interfaculty sports and Intercollegiate practices and trials carry on as usual.

SPORTS PROFILE

Jack Wheldrake

By JIM PROUDFOOT

One of the most colourful players on the Varsity Blues, the pride of Victoria College, Jack Wheldrake is really hitting his stride about now as the intercollegiate league heads into the home stretch. Playing right wing on the first line that has Don Rope at centre and Johnny Adams at left wing, blonde Jack got four points on two goals and two assists in last Friday's game against the University of Montreal Carabins. These four points equalled his total in the previous games although he did everything but score the Friday before against McGill.

Wheldrake brings lots of hockey experience to the Blues. Last season he starred with the St. Michael's College Majors in the junior division of the OHA. Playing on a line for the Irish with Willie Marshall, who is now making a niche for himself in the minor-pro Maritimes loop, and Tommy Files, Jack had a record of 20 goals and 30 assists in the 48-game season. His mentor there was the well-known Peanuts O'Flaherty. The two seasons before that were spent with the Marlboros Jr. B squad. The first year, it was the Marlboro B's, the next year the Weston Dukes. Both teams were group champions. Going back a long, long way Jack remembers four years in the ranks of the THL, all of which adds up to a lot of hockey. Last year he was on the Maple Leaf list, but is uncertain of his present status with them.

The East York native measures 5' 8" to the top of his crew cut and tips the scales at 150 right after a shower. He graduated from East York Collegiate in 1950 and enrolled at Varsity that fall. He is now in second year at Victoria in the pass arts course. After that what? "I hope to get into Osgoode Hall but failing that I'll enter OCE." In the summers, Jack keeps himself and his bank account in condition working on a railway section gang. He also plays a solid first base for Brown Motors in the Toronto Junior Softball League. This squad didn't go very far last year but Jack, though short for a first baseman was hitting that "long ball."

Being on the same line as Don Rope has profited him, Jack says. The veteran Rope, with two years of senior hockey and several of junior under his belt, has plenty of moxie and has been able to give his team-mates tips on play and tricks. Furthermore, Rope coined the name "Pogo" for Wheldrake and while it seems to have no real connection, it has caught on among the players so "Pogo" it is.

With his speedy, dipsy-doodle style, Jack goes with the shifty Rope like ham goes with eggs and Johnny Adams is no misfit. Together they make an electrifying combination when they roll and they have been rolling these days. Wheldrake's specialty is cutting in on goal from the right wing after crossing the blue line. The second of his goals last week was a typical effort. He sped in from the blue line, rounded the nest and poked it in before the Carabin goalie realized it. Another pretty play was one when he laid a perfect pass to Ernie Frey who was camped on the edge of the crease. Charley McCarthy could have scored on that set-up. Three of his four points were scored, by the way, on the Blues power play where coach Bill Wade sends out Frey at left wing, string bean Jack McKenzie at centre and Wheldrake on right wing. Rope lines up on the point with one of the defencemen.

As for the rest of the semester, Jack feels that if the Blues can play up to last Friday's form they can take the crown for the second year in a row. The big worry, says Jack, is Laval who are very strong this season. They are as fast as the Carabins and bigger.

Regarding next year, Jack hopes to be back in a blue and white uniform.

Female Basketeers Win Second, 42-39

The Varsity Intermediate basketball team — female variety, — won their second game of the season last night when they defeated St. Clements Girls School, 42 to 39, at the OCE gym.

Both teams played fast but close games. The visitors were led by the sparkling performance of forward Joan Mitchell, who scored repeated baskets on break-plays. Ann Leitch also turned in a good performance for St. Clements.

Donna Howson, who played Senior Intercollegiate ball last year, was high scorer for the Varsity team, with Claire McMullen running a close second, while the guarding performances of Ira Karila and Joan Elliot were strictly from inspiration.

Although all of the men's Intercollegiate sports have been cancelled in connection with the death of King George VI, there has been no official word regarding the women's Intercollegiate events. Unless there is later news to the contrary, the basketball games slated for next Monday and Tuesday will be played as scheduled.

St. Hilda's I defeated their biggest challenge to the intramural volleyball championship last night when they downed PHE I by a decisive 34-to-22 score.

Nancy Allen, the spiking centre of the St. Hilda's net line, was the outstanding player on the floor. Elaine Hunt, Janet Jeffrey and Barb Watts gave her able support. For PHE, Joan Creary and Nina Lancaster did some terrific spiking, while Audrey Milne played a steady game.

In the second game, Vic I trounced UC I, 44 to 26. Barb Johnson turned in a solid performance from all positions for Vic, while Joyce Bingleman showed good spiking form. Di Waddington was outstanding at the UC net, with Jane Abbott supporting her.

HOCKEY

PHE II held St. Hilda's II to a 2-to-0 score in a hockey tile at the arena yesterday. The Physeds sank their first counter in the first period, when Nancy Kercher slipped one into the Trinity net.

The second frame saw repeated scrambles in front of the Trinity goal, but the PHE girls were unable to score. Both teams fought hard in the third period, but the stickhandling seemed unusually ineffective, and the game slowed down to a crawl. The Trinity girls came alive in the last part of the frame with Kay Grier leading the attack, but the Physeders checked the rushes to the boards. PHE added their second counter when Mary McLellan caught a pass from Jean Naylor and shot the puck past the Saints' goalie.

Abbie Mulholland, Mary McLellan and Nancy Kercher played well for Physed while Kay Grier, Natalie Hooke and Sheila Amys fought hard in a losing cause.

Boxer Burgled

Pete Petcoff, III SPS, veteran Varsity boxer, returned from the trip to West Point last week to find that someone had broken into his locker in Hart House and stolen his wallet, which contained a considerable sum of money. How the thief managed to open the lock is a mystery; it is possible he may have hit upon the combination by accident, or have seen Petcoff open the locker at some time. The wallet also contained car ownership papers and other documents.

Pete has been on the boxing team for three years, in the 155 pounds class.

It seemed difficult to conceive of this carrot-topped, puckish rascal being transformed into the tragic figure of a man in Le Jeune Homme et la Mort, but Babilee is capable of it.

The final number, Interplay, is completely contemporary American. The dancers move through a series of classical ballet steps and children's games, which the audience finds almost as much fun in watching as the dancers must find in dancing. Ballet Theatre has a bright future if the ability of these younger members of the cast is any criterion.

Dancing, programming, decor, all combine in making this week of Ballet Theatre an exciting event. And no poodle cuts.

Queen's U. May Probe Student Fee

Kingston, (CUP)—The Alma Mater Society, Queen's University students' council, last week unanimously approved a referendum asking student approval of an investigation of the student interest fee.

The $37.50 fee finances the non-academic student activities at Queen's; it includes health insurance, student's union, athletics and other charges.

The referendum, proposed by Queen's Journal editor, D. R. Gordon, said at the AMS meeting that a surprising number of "substantial citizens of Queen's, not malcontents" had approached him and that he considered this interest sufficient proof of majority support.

Gordon Ainsley, senior AMS rep, replied that "No student or group of students have ever come to the Budget and Finance Committee to complain of the present fund handling."

Vic To Debate On Character Development

The motion before the Victoria College Debating Parliament which meets in the Alumni Hall at Vic at 4.00 p.m. today is, "Resolved that this University develops intellect but not character."

Jim Addy, III Vic, first speaker for the government, stated that the university, as an institution, is not concerned with the character of its students, but is interested only in the mass production of prefabricated intellects. It makes no attempt to infuse into the student ay individuality, any morality, or any distinctive character.

Charles Marsh, who is opposing the resolution, feels that if the resolution to come before the house were true, it would be quite depressing, in fact, quite horrifying, for it would testify that the purpose and way of university life—the product of seven centuries of refinement, would be in vain and that the long continuity of our cherished traditions would shortly be shattered.

The two other debaters will be Ron Price I Vic and Bill Harding, II Vic, who is the second speaker for the Affarmative. Price, who is opposing the resolution said, "in view of the tremendous achievements shown by graduates of this university in all fields of endeavor, we feel that this motion is absurd. We cannot accept this position and will fight it to the end."

Quest For Reality Is Chapel Subject

The fourth in a series of Sunday evening services will be held in Wycliffe College Chapel on Feb. 10. The speaker is to be Mr. C. Stacey Woods, general secretary of Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship.

Born in Australia, Mr. Woods graduated from the University of Sydney and took his theology at the Dallas Seminary on this continent. In the autumn of 1933 Mr. Woods became general secretary of IVCF in Canada and when an IVCF for the US was formed in 1939 he was asked to assume the same post there

In this capacity Mr. Woods has travelled in Europe, spending many months with students from England, France, Scandinavia, and Italy. He has become an authority on student conditions and aspirations in modern Europe. This coming summer he will head a camp for some 200 German students in Switzerland. In the midst of these duties Mr. Woods finds time to edit His the student publication of IVCF on this continent.

Mr. Woods' address on Feb. 10 will concern the human quest for ...isfaction and its realization. Basing his talk on the meeting of Jesus with the Samaritan woman at Jacob's well, Mr. Woods will use this woman's experiences as analogous to those of every human being who seeks and finds.

ENTERTAINMENT SQUIB

The Warden's Office of Hart House announced last night that the coming evening concert will go on as scheduled. No change in plans will be made in spite of the period of mourning.

The Loss

This is the inbetween period. The shock of the king's death has been too much for us to absorb in a few short hours. Even his failing health did not really prepare us, for there is a wide gap between expectation and realization. He was sick and we were sorry; he is dead and we are stunned. "We won't sing 'God Save The King' any more," someone observed — and we were stopped short. Our generation has known no other words.

In a scant fifteen years on the throne, King George VI made the monarchy more popular and revered than it has been since the golden days of Queen Victoria. For the throne passed into the shadows under Edward VII, it lived in semi-retirement with George V and received an ill-timed blow from the abdication of Edward VIII.

The widespread disillusion of 1937 was transformed into warm sympathy towards the gentle young man who succeeded his popular and polished brother. The new king had not been "trained" for his position.

Perhaps it was the stutter which lent the necessary touch of humanity to the monarchy, made him more "real" to us. Not that King George VI was more of "a common man" nor even "one of the family", though he came more closely into the family circle. In his person, the human symbol of the crown regained a new warmth and new meaning.

The British King has long been the ruler of many countries — at least, all the parliaments and legal documents proclaimed so. Yet it was the late King who transformed these legal facts into living actuality. The old "Royal Progresses" were extended to include many nations of the Commonwealth. And the sceptics who laughted at the anachronism of a monarchy in scattered democracies were proved wrong. The fleeting glimpses of the royal family strengthened the old, undefined loyalties immeasurably in the public mind.

But the gentle king with the hint of a stutter is dead. He leaves behind him a new meaning of the importance of the British kingship. We feel a deep sense of loss.

Gloriana

"In palace, in a garden" lived the young Victoria before she ascended the English throne. How different, how remote does that seem to us now! And how unlike the new Queen Elizabeth!

Like her famous namesake, she lives in troubled times, with prospective wars and revolts seething about her, with the power of Britain once again threatened, with the Cassandras once more crying doom.

And yet she is a very young woman, shy and reserved like her father, impressing all of us who saw her last fall with these very qualities. We sympathized with her then, when she was so very tired and overburdened with public appearances. How much more do our hearts go out to her now in her present grief!

But it is with full confidence that we look forward to a new Gloriana, a queen who will not just be a comfort to her country in its old age, but a monarch who will lead, as the first Elizabeth did, her many nations, to new triumphs and a regeneration of the old glories

Television

Dreamland Terror

Not quite forgotten in the flurry of excitement over man's latest technological gadget — television — are its social implications. Ralph Wintrob, CUP Editor, gives his analysis and suggests that it is another development on the road to standardization of ideas.

A race of men with two huge eyes in their faces supporting a pinheaded brain: Fred Allen's caustic comment about television makes a lot of sense. What is most frightening about television is that it is another medium to reduce man's will and capacity to think.

There is no shilly-shallying about this latest technological nightmare. Either it arouses a purple passion of wrath or else apologetics. But more often one just looks and listens, completely absorbed by the new toy.

Television seems to be one more step in a general progress towards an insidious, self-willed, social evil — production of a race of men who think the same way about the same things.

At one time a small group of people gathered in the living room for a party or just a little get-together with small talk passing back and forth. Now these same people sit before a little screen watching figures dance in front of them. Not a word passes between them. What little communication there once was, exists no longer. It may be characters who pass themselves off as comedians, making funny faces, a couple of brawny, grunting wresters, a play where the actors have about as much stage presence as gangling schoolboys or a discussion that claims to be a public service but is about as profound as mud.

And this bile pours out in a never-ending stream. Where one could have one's mind dulled by a soap opera or a recipe and gossip hour program while fiddling about with other work, one now has to concentrate on it in one spot or lose all the flavor. And instead of conversation at a bar after a fight or a play, one just keeps on watching.

In the New Yorker recently was a cartoon depicting a store selling television sets. Pasted on the door was a sign that read something to this effect: Liberal trade in on your old library.

It is easy to laugh ourselves into mediocrity. We have become a civilization that wants its ideas shovelled up on a platter of pictures. Television has come along to help aid and abet this shovelling.

Perhaps television may not be any worse than the other forms of mass communication and entertainment. But that is just the point. As television follows the primrose path to the triviality of radio and movies, a whole new process towards mass standardization of ideas ensues.

To sell a product a businessman wants to make the inter-commercials period as easy to take as possible. That's what people want, anyway, he says. It's an outworn formula, but all the people who envision great things for television are barking up the wrong tree. Television is no experiment. The same people who are mixed up with radio and the movies are the people using their well-learned lessons of mass-standardization in television. They will certainly not change their tune. True, they may not have reached the handful of formulae that other better-established media have developed. But they are on the way.

One of the more insidious events on television is the Sunday morning church broadcast. Where the late sleeper could feel halfway righteous by listening to a service on the radio, they can now sit in completely and watch a church service from their most comfortable easy chair. I wonder whether it makes them feel twice as righteous.

A survey, recently conducted by two professors of all television programs offered in the New York area during one week came up with facts that are no surprise. They show just how warped television has already become. Three percent of the programs were termed educational, 2 percent public issues, 3 percent discussion and 1 percent religious. Commented the professors: "A clear majority of the time was devoted to entertainment programs with relatively low or perhaps negative survival value for the individual".

A great hue and cry is being raised in the United States to make educational programs on television mandatory. These are, of course, particularly to be directed towards children, the unknowing victims of a fate worse than death. After all, says one commentator, children spend more time watching television on the average than they spend at school. Play outdoors or among themselves has almost but disappeared while the fascination continues.

But there is little hope even for educational programs to live up to what parents and educators hope for. The necessity of setting standards must be established. And what price stimulation of thought when indoctrination is so much easier and successful!

Television has its good points for the discriminating. To watch Toscanini conducting is more than rewarding. A good play or reissued movie also adds some lustre to an otherwise sterile schedule. But they are all too rare.

One might ask why single television out for attack, when it is no worse than the others? But television has a more compulsive effect. Such a medium in the living room of a home not only demands concentration but makes entertainment too easy to get. You just tend to stick to it.

Though I can hope for a rise in the level and quality of the programs the chances seem slight. The only possibility could be from the competition between radio, films and television that will lead to a re-evaluation and evolution of entertainment media. It is pleasant to envision a fight for survival of the fittest.

But I am just a pessimist. All that I can envision are "feelies" that Aldous Huxley proposed with such terrifying forcefulness in Brave New World. "Feelies" are an effortless escape-mechanism like movies that the people in his book must indulge in. It carries them off into a dream world that they cannot only see and hear but feel at the same time. That is the next step we seem bound for.

OUR READERS WRITE

Build-A-Fire

Editor, The Varsity:

I wish to compliment Brown and Elliot for their concrete proposals for overhauling the lecture system. However, I do not think that their proposals would have much effect. Such discussion-question groups are to be found in many of the courses. They are the dullest classes of all because once the professor stops talking who else is there? Certainly not the students.

Elliot and Brown failed to realize that by merely changing the relationship of professor and student in the classroom does not guarantee anything except awkward silences. The essential problem of a Canadian university is the student. He is an amiable sort who tackles university just like he did the senior matric with no enthusiasm for what he is learning but with a wholehearted belief in the degree that rewards his spade-work.

To expect him to actually think about his course, and discuss his course, is absurd. Thinking and discussing are extra-curricular activities: the university has no rights here.

The proof of this can be found in the various literary contests around the University. The students of English never win these contests for obvious reasons that writing English is on the course. You cannot decently expect an English student to continue his English outside the classroom; that requires enthusiasm beyond the degree.

In many articles I have read on education in The Varsity the universal cry has been "change the system" as if by throwing together the old parts in a new fashion the student shall be changed from a donut into a wedding cake. I disagree. Too many people regard students as marionettes, created by their environment, and requiring the environment to change if they are to change. But surely the students have their own will, without requiring first that the framework be changed radically.

I suggest that a nucleus of people within, say an English class, take it on themselves to create discussion in the classroom, and inspire a bit of intellectual fire. I suggest that the students of English first year meet the students of English fourth year. I suggest that within a class or between classes, competition of one kind or another should be fostered. I suggest that this competition be extended until the students of Vic are pitted against students of Trinity. This need for competitive intellectual fire is especially needed in the Arts colleges.

If all these suggestions fail I suggest that all those who are interested come to my class on Avenue Road, north of Bloor. Before entering the classroom the inhibited are given two bottles of beer so that they may relax. The uninhibited receive only a bottle so that their tongues shall wag all day. The progressors are given six bottles so that whatever they speak, they shall speak of that which is worth hearing. There are no desks but a circle instead. At one end there is a large fire to attract the flies and the vacant-minded. Discussion is limited to the worthwhile and knowledge must be shared. Progressors are better than the original ones and given very generously. Smoking permitted. Do come.

CAPUT CANCELS REVUE

Cut All Shows Till Funeral

Cast Carries On Its Practice

The All-Varsity Revue will continue with rehearsals as usual, according to Jim Guthro, producer of the show.

In spite of its cancellation by the Caput until after the day of the funeral, the cast will keep up practices in the hope of producing it week after next at some theatre off the campus.

A regular rehearsal of the cast was held last night, and the feeling of those present seemed to be expressed by Bud Priestman, AVR Assistant Director when he said, "I feel that this is a big disappointment to the cast but I appreciate the validity of the judgment. It will be an anticlimax to the cast who have worked themselves up to go through with seven performances."

Guthro stated that they were working on procuring an outside outlet but that none had yet been found. He said the show would only be produced Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of the next week but that we would definitely not be any longer. If this outside theatre is found the Saturday matinee and evening show would go on, probably at Hart House.

Cynthia Barrett, ballet instructor for the All-Varsity Revue, thought the show should not have been cancelled due to the large number of people involved. "Naturally, I want to emphasize the sincerity of my sympathy over the death of the king," she said. "But the show must carry on; if the audience does not wish to come they can stay away."

Student opinion of the cancellation of the show varied. Some felt that the show should be stopped permanently for this year because any show now would just be an anticlimax. One student remarked, "In my opinion the show should not have been cancelled except for the funeral on Friday. Too much time, money and work have been put into it to be done away with now."

Tough Luck, Boys . . .

Chester Smith is getting his stray tears wiped away by the producer of the All-Varsity Revue, Jim Guthro. Smith has just heard that the AVR had been cancelled for next week. Disconsolate orchestra members sit in the background wondering what to do with new arrangements.

The All Varsity Revue has been cancelled.

A brief letter yesterday from Registrar Evans to E. A. Macdonald, SAC Secretary-Treasurer, read as follows, "I am now directed to instruct the Students' Administrative Council that no performance of the Revue shall be given at least until after the date of the funeral."

Hart House Theatre Manager Jim Hoziak announced that there will be no more dates available at the theatre until April 6. There are a few one day openings after March 27 but there is no possibility of a large scale production until April, he said.

When Jim Guthro, director of the AVR read the letter he said, "In effect this means the end of the All Varsity Revue."

The decision to cancel the AVR was made after a telephone conference of the Caput yesterday morning. Warden Ignatieff commented that the decision was ananimous. It had been omitted by accident from specific treatment in the previous Caput meeting Wednesday night, he said.

At four o'clock yesterday afternoon Students' Council and AVR officials held a hurried conference. They immediately called a noon hour meeting of the SAC to be held to-day. At this meeting they will discuss possible alternatives such as holding the two scheduled performances on Saturday or holding the AVR away from the university, Director Jim Guthro said.

In a statement that expressed the feelings of the AVR officials, director Jim Guthro said, "I see no necessity for cancelling the show except on the day of the funeral: first because of the large financial loss to the students which may total $3400; second, because of the tremendous amount of work that has gone into this production."

The question of cost will probably be discussed by the Caput. There is some possibility that the University will bear the brunt of the cost, admitted J. C. Evans, Caput Secretary, in a telephone conversation. If Hart House theatre demands full payment for the cancelled nights the Students' Council may suffer a heavy loss.

At the time of the Caput's decision the day of the funeral had not been officially announced. However when the Friday date was announced, Registrar Evans said there is no possibility that the Caput will reconsider. Any attempt to hold the show off the campus in the next week would be very bad taste and would be discouraged by the Caput, added Warden Ignatieff.

In spite of the cancellation the All Varsity Revue will continue its rehearsals. Above, Dance Masters Anne Brown and Herb Wedderburn compare notes, on a new routine. All practices will be conducted until definite word has been given about the possibility of having it the week after the King's funeral. Wedderburn and Miss Brown have worked out some new routines to be included in the show, if and when it is produced.

Masculine Monopoly Threatened

Women See Hart House Show

The masculine monopoly of Hart House has received another blow. Warden Ignatieff agreed last night to allow the women of the University to see the parts of the New Canadian Artists' Show which are on display in the Map Room, the Reading Room and the East Common Room, as well as the exhibit in the Art Gallery, which is automatically open to women from 4 to 5 Wednesday afternoons.

Women will be allowed in these rooms Wednesday from 4 p.m. to 5 p.m. only, but they will be admitted to the Art Gallery until 6 p.m. Clare Bice, Curator of the London Art Gallery, which is automatically open to e show, will be speaking in the Art Gallery at five o'clock.

Last Wednesday women were allowed only in the Art Gallery. However, it was announced last week that the whole show would be open to the general public from 2 to 5 on Saturday and Sunday afternoons.

This is the first Hart House show to be thrown open to the general public at any time.

Hart House concerts will continue as usual this and next week with the exception of next Friday, when all special activities will be cancelled in the House because of the funeral of His late Majesty, King George VI.

Speakers Needed For Round Table

The Varsity Radio Round Table is looking for some speakers with the strength of their convictions.

"What we need is a strong man who can stand up against W. E. Blatz", said C. M. Godfrey, III Meds., Chairman of the Radio Round Table Committee. "Next Tuesday's discussion on 'Of Minds and Men' is on "Are we Overschooled?" and the child psychology is one of our speakers."

Dr. Blatz is at present Director of the Institute of Child Study, which has just finished its 25th year of operation. He is also Professor of Psychology and author of the book "Understanding the Young Child."

The Professor has been the centre of a lot of controversy in his career. I'm always very stimulated by his lectures and I only hope someone who isn't a 'yes-man' will contact me and agree to appear on the broadcast", said Godfrey.

SAC Meet

All members of the Students Administrative Council are requested to attend a special Council meeting at 12 noon in Room 62 in the basement of University College today.

Campus Profile

E. S. Carpenter

By PEARL PARNES

There is a young man on the University of Toronto campus who has become almost a legend, for his radical views, his entertaining and highly stimulating lectures, and his jaunts to places like the Arctic.

Dr. Ted Carpenter saw the Aleutians where he was serving in the U.S. Marine Corps during the war. He was intrigued by the land, by the life of the people there, and conceived the notion that he would like to study them some day.

A year and a half ago, the Canadian Defence Research Board outfitted him for an expedition, and he spent 4½ months in the Central Arctic.

"There's a cold clean beauty about the land", he reminisces. "The philosophy there is to grasp life right now. They don't worry about the past and are indifferent to the future. 'Is life so good on earth?', they ask. Ay-or-na-mutt (it can't be helped) is a common expression."

The Eskimos, says Dr. Carpenter, believe in immortality "as we seldom do. They believe in reincarnation. A child is born and they check his identity, and tell fantastic stories about their other lives. When you wake up in the morning in an igloo, everyone tells their dreams. They're completely open in confessing their sins. I felt still too much a product of civilization."

Ancient tradition prescribes their ideas, and so Dr. Carpenter found them intellectually limited, but fascinating to him as an outsider. The Eskimos called him "The One Who Asks the Foolish Questions", but liked him and told him a great deal.

"Religion is a wonderful thing to them, tied in with the rebirth of the earth. Man and the deity established a covenant and man must show respect in return for food. Man and the deity can punish each other if either does not fulfill his side of the bargain. They think the deities must mate and therefore ape them, exchanging wives. Each man must always have a wife, for things like making waterproof boots, without which the Eskimo would freeze to death."

Women apparently have a good deal there. "They are slaves when they are young, but become bosses. There are no more henpecked men in the world, except maybe the Americans."

Dr. Carpenter, who was born in the United States, has carried on research in the south as well as the Arctic. He has done field work in the South Seas and in Latin America. While in the Marines, he acted as judge advocate at the War Crimes Trials in the Pacific, and has a collection of records from trials of murder and cannibalism. He restored ruins which had been destroyed during the bombardment of the islands and investigated ancient ruins, often unknown, which were uncovered by bombs or the building of airstrips.

"The jungle is not spectacular", he remembers. "They are just splitting headaches. You can go on for hours, and then suddenly find a clearing and a pre-historic city." In one such discovery, he could see his reflection in the pink-white marble columns.

In his office in the museum, surrounded by masks, odd-shaped pieces of sculpture, and a trophy, inscribed "To our iconoclastic professor", which was dedicated, along with a quart of whiskey, by a former class, Dr. Carpenter constantly writes and publishes his findings. At present engaged in linguistic work for the Canadian Defence Research Board, he is working on a new book, "Time and Space in a Primitive Society." His writings include records of his South Sea and Arctic expeditions, and of his work among American Indians. He describes the latter group as possessing a gentle sympathy and serenity, and contrasts it with the Eskimo's contempt for weakness and pity and their constant emphasis on "I-nuk" (I am a man).

Dr. Carpenter has lectured on the University of Toronto staff since 1948, commuting, until this year, between Toronto and his home (wife and two sons) in Philadelphia. Before joining the Anthropology staff here, he taught anthropology at the University of Pennsylvania and Temple University, at the same time working for the Lilly Foundation as a research anthropologist. His future plans include doing research work at Oxford.

Goal of Reporter To Be Objective MacTaggart Says

A sincere attempt at objectivity and a sensible balance in selection of news are essential to good newswriting said Ken MacTaggart, National Newspaper Award winner for 1950, at yesterday's Varsity news lecture.

Some eighty students, including Varsity staffers, heard MacTaggart's noon-hour discussion of reporting. This is the first of a series of lectures on journalism in which students will hear prominent Canadian writers.

"Winchells are dangerous," said MacTaggart, speaking of columnists like Washington reporter Walter Winchell. They have a tendency to rely on unnamed sources, and made-up opinions from recorded information, he added.

Columnists are often given too much freedom, MacTaggart indicated. When the editors disclaim responsibility for these opinions, the position of the paper as a servant of the public and as a free institution is weakened, he stated.

The freedom of the press suggests the responsibility of the newspaper to the people it represents, MacTaggart pointed out. The popular opinion that news is tainted by the influence of publishers and advertisers may be true in some cases, he said, but MacTaggart, a senior reporter for the Toronto Globe and Mail, stated that he had never experienced any such influence in his work.

Because of the vast amount of available news, careful selection is essential, the speaker indicated. The selection must be based on the significance which the public places on the news, not on what the editors think important, he added.

Since the tastes of the readers vary, an attempt must be made to maintain a favorable balance between the numerous likes, MacTaggart said.

"Which is of more interest—sex? or monetary policy?" he asked. There are readers who like each, he said, but a newspaper could never print all sex, any more than it could print all monetary news.

Discussing objectivity, MacTaggart warned against the irresponsible use of words which might tend to slant the story towards one opinion.

"Objectivity is an inherent quality in reporters," said MacTaggart. He used the illustration of several young men who have begun newswriting only to fail because they were unable to eliminate their own impressions on a story.

MacTaggart doubted whether anyone may be wholly objective, but, he added, much may be done by carefully selecting straightforward phrases which will present the facts without the danger of suggesting a personal view.

"The Ivory Tower Page is designed to provide an outlet for opinions", said MacTaggart referring to the editorial columns.

A newspaper is not a social service and should not act as crusader, he said. The editors may report worthy causes to the proper corrective agencies and report their efforts, MacTaggart added. Overemphasis of one theme is not following the policy of catering to the public's interest, he said.

The next Varsity sponsored lecture on journalism for the students will be given by Ted Reeve, Sports Editor of the Toronto Telegram. Reeve speaks to the students on Monday at 1:00 p.m. in Room 8, University College.

Law Briefs

The University of Toronto School of Law Club continues with this issue of The Varsity, the second in the publication of a weekly series of "Law Briefs." These are designed to bring to other students some aspects of the law, and to dispel from their minds notions of mustiness, insipidity and uncompromising rigidity with which the study is allegedly (and so erroneously!) associated.

What's Your Verdict?

A Mrs. Smith was standing on a railway platform before a wicket buying a railway ticket to Chicago. In the meantime a train headed for Boston began pulling out. A Mr. Jones, carrying an ordinary-looking parcel, ran to catch the train, and as he had difficulty getting on, two porters, one on the moving train and the other on the platform, tried to help him get aboard.

In so doing, the porter on the platform knocked the parcel out of Mr. Jones' arms. The parcel in fact contained explosive fireworks, and on striking the ground, exploded. As a result of the explosion and the reverberation a scale about a hundred feet away fell, landed on Mrs. Smith, and seriously injured her.

(The law holds a master responsible for the negligent acts of his servant committed in the course of his employment.)

Mrs. Smith sued the railway company.

Would you hold the company liable?

French Club Makes Movie For Schools

The French Cine-Club of University College has just made an experiment in film-making. It is designed to teach French orally to beginners in the language. A textbook written by Principal F. A. C. Wanneret of University College and H. B. St.-John of the Ontario College of Education served as script.

In order that the pupils would not have to study a special text, two lessons were taken from the "Cours Primaire de Francais, the book used by Grades 9 and 10 in the high schools of five provinces.

"The text was not written for motion pictures," commented Dr. M. Sanouillet, director of the film, "and therefore was very difficult to use for that purpose."

The actors speak very slowly in good French. The stories are simple, and deal largely with conversations during meals, on an elementary stage. Prints of the film will be sold to the Audio-Visual Department of the Board of Education for distribution in the high schools.

"The film is a serious experiment", said Roy Little, IV UC, producer and director of photography. "It is the first amateur sound film made in Canada, using a camera with synchronized sound recently made in the United States and never before used for a completed film."

Dr. Sanouillet has great hopes for the success of the venture. If the pupils appreciate it, and if the teachers like it, it will be the first of a series of language films", he explained. In the 700 hundred films listed in the catalogue of the Film Library, there is not one language film designed for teaching purposes. "We hope to expand the experiment for French teaching on higher levels, perhaps for universities eventually", said Dr. Sanouillet.

The film will be entered in the Canadian Film Awards, Dr. Sanouillet added. He won an honourable Mention Award in the competitions last year with his film "Parking on This Side", made under the auspices of the University of Toronto Film Society.

The actors are all members of the French Department of University College, and many have been active in French Club plays. Hubert Fielden-Briggs, who designed the sets, costumes and make-up for the recent French Club production of Racine's comedy Les Plaideurs, is both actor and designer of the film. Mr. C. R. Parsons is narrator, and Prof. J. Melese portrays the father in the film. Both are members of the UC French Department. Irene Pregechtch, a first year student recently arrived from Paris, Valerie Fielden-Briggs, Dr. R. D. C. Finch, and Madame Joliat are also participants.

Shooting of the film was completed in three days, with the cast present on the set as early as 7:00 a.m. "It has been a wonderful example of co-operation between fifteen people working together," said Dr. Sanouillet. "We have seen that it is possible to make a good, professional film."

Trinity Tartuffe Continues Finishes Hart House Run

At an emergency meeting yesterday morning, the Executive of the Trinity College Dramatic Society decided definitely to present all the remaining performances of "Tartuffe" which has been running all this week at Hart House Theatre. The Society is acting on the advice of Provost Seeley, who had been in contact with officials of the Caput, and the office of the Lieutenant Governor. Although many members of the cast felt that some performances should be cancelled due to the national mourning, they were advised by the officials to carry on.

Last night's performance was heightened by the presence of the French Consul to Canada and Mrs. Paul Martin.

At the end of the play, both cast and audience joined in the singing of "God Save The Queen". As soon as it was known definitely that the show would go on, yesterday, two students, dressed in colourful costumes from the play about Louis Fourteenth's France, patrolled the campus announcing that the remaining performances would be held.

The cast will resume the practice of curtain calls, which was dropped last night, "God Save The Queen" will be sung after all the remaining performances.

Caput's Procedure "Entirely Correct" Is Student Verdict

Two-thirds of the students interviewed in a survey yesterday morning agreed completely with the procedure of the Caput and of the Intercollegiate Athletic Association in cancelling all events. The students were asked, "Do you agree with the cancellation of intercollegiate sports and all social events until after the late King George's funeral?"

The disagreeing third felt that although cancellation of all events on the day of the King's funeral should certainly take place, and that the university should show their respect for him, there was need "to go this far". Several of them suggested that the actions are slightly hypocritical. A total of 50 students were interviewed.

Although this was a good sign of respect, perhaps because the funeral is so far off we may have gone a bit farther than necessary, said Marilyn Wallace, II UC.

Peter Smith, III UC, felt that all the cancellations seemed slightly artificial. He continued that he felt that on the day of the funeral all classes should be cancelled but such drastic events were not required. Smith was wearing a black tie as his sign of respect.

Martin Hunter, I Trinity, felt that procedure of the Caput was quite correct and he was in complete agreement. Hunter, who is playing the leading role in Tartuffe, (which is being continued) added that the cast were willing to postpone the play but they had been advised by the officials at Trinity to carry on.

The only person violently against the procedure refused to allow his name to be used. "On the day of the funeral, all right, but cancelling all sports events for a week or longer is ridiculous. I regard social events in the same light. The whole business is rather artificial," said this speaker.

Osgoode Hall Vs. Varsity

Two Varsity debating teams will be working for a chance at the Inter-University Debating League (IUDL) finals when they meet Osgoode Hall debaters this afternoon.

Robert J. Collins, III St. Mike's, and Mike Callahan, II St. Mike's, meet Osgoode men in Brennan Hall, St. Michael's College, and simultaneously Wally Emon, IV SPS, and John Regan, II St. Mike's, will be meeting a second Osgoode team at Osgoode Hall.

Both groups will argue the same resolution: "That in English-speaking countries the struggle for individual liberty is being lost at home". Collins and Callahan are taking the negative here; Emon and Regan argue the affirmative at Osgoode.

Points awarded at both debates will be combined. The winning school qualifies for the finals of the Eastern Division of the IUDL.

Said Collins: "Our debate will be a re-examination of the ideal of individual liberty in view of the changes in our modern world."

U of T Develops Character Debate Parliament Decides

The University of Toronto develops character as well as intellect, the Victoria College Debating Parliament decided yesterday. It defeated the motion "that this University develops intellect but not character" by a vote of nine to three.

"The student is primarily active in his own character development," said Jim Addy, III Vic, speaking for the motion. The University is a state in which a professor pours out his own knowledge, to which, however, the individual student must react himself, Addy said. "It is the University's mission to provide the tools to develop the intellect, but the student develops his own character in using these tools."

"The various aspects of University life taken together form a way of life so different from that which the student formerly knew that he is forced to change," said Charles Mark, I Vic, first speaker for the opposition. The university aids in defining his purpose, and gives him a sense of the past and the future. Being a relatively small body it has a stranglehold on each of its members, he added.

Bill Harding, II Vic, said that people come to university with many different purposes, and that the conflict of these various purposes is confusing. Many students are lost and helpless because they cannot cope with the pace and furthermore, the short university year does not offer sufficient time for all the extra-curricular activities, as well as studying, he said.

"As intellect is a part of character, in developing the intellect the university develops the character," said Ron Price, I Vic. "Moreover, the university develops character through its many aspects, which permit every student to find something in which he can specialize, and develop his own characteristics."

Plan Tete-a-tete For Skule Debate

The Engineering Debate Club has received an invitation from the girls from Breschia Hall, London, Ont., to participate in a debate at London, on February 24, Club officials said yesterday. The Engineering Debate Club is anxious to get the team organized. All persons interested in participating are requested to contact Frank Endean, IV Engineering.

The chairman of the Debate Club, Geoff Hyde, said, "We are looking forward to having a very interesting tete-a-tete with the girls from Breschia." When questioned, he said he did not yet know what the subject of the debate would be.

The Breschia Debating Society was only formed last fall, after it had received an invitation to meet the St. Joseph's College Debating Congress. The Engineers had met St. Joseph's earlier this year on the abstinence topic, and Hyde said he thought that St. Joseph's may have suggested the Skule debaters to Breschia as a result of this debate.

TSO Fits Occasion With Eroica

On account of the national mourning, the Toronto Symphony Orchestra's subscription program was changed last Wednesday. The works performed were Sir Ernest MacMillan's transcription of Bach's chorale prelude "In Thee, O Lord, Have I Put My Trust", Beethoven's symphony no. 3 (Eroica) and his piano concerto no. 5 (Emperor).

Many listeners must have felt disappointed that the modern work scheduled, Hindemith's "Matthias the Painter", was no performed. However, the splendid performance of the Eroica, without applause at the end, was an experience no one wil regret.

The symphony was performed, according to Sir Ernest's custom in the works of Beethoven, with additional wind instruments. An extra piece for each of the woodwinds, and an extra horn were added, and three trombones to reinforce the horns in some passages.

The object of this strengthening is to restore Beethoven's proportion of winds to strings in the orchestra without reducing its size. The result in practice is a more tangy, shrill sound — and in the passages with trombones, it must be admitted, a rather unpleasant brassiness.

The Eroica is a fitting work to perfor mon such a solemn occasion, and the performance was appropriately imposing. The first movement with its fierce dissonances, the deep gloom of the second, and the glorious building-up of the finale: all are parts of a heroic, dramatic whole on a scale which Beethoven tried only once again.

Clifford Curzon was soloist in the concerto. He showed himself better able to dominate the orchestra than any piano soloist yet this season, but more by the force of his wonderfully alive soft passages than in the thundering octave runs.

In bringing the more lyrical parts of the work to the fore, the artist tended to give them more rubato than some pianists would. His interpretation was more romantic than heroic; it is to the orchestra's credit that they stayed with the soloist perfectly when he stretched the tempo.

This concert proved conclusively that the TSO can rise to very great heights on occasion. It just seems to be a matter of caring.

Dull-Toned Piano Spoils Finch, Bodle And Mozart

Any discussion of the recital of piano duets given by Prof. Finch and Douglas Bodle in Hart House last Wednesday afternoon would almost have to be made in the light of the instrument on which the recital was played.

The music room piano has a dull wooden tone in the lower registers and a brittle tone in the higher registers. Add to this that the touch is both heavy and uneven and we see how difficult it is to attain the light, delicate touch so necessary for such composers as Mozart. Therefore, it is almost impossible for any but the best of artists to play Mozart on this piano with anything like good results. Since the recital was an all-Mozart program and the performers, I believe, make no pretense to the rank of great artists, the effect of the recital was disappointing.

The performance seemed to lack airiness: the more spacious numbers, especially the Sonata in D seemed cramped. At times, the more powerful passages degenerated to wooden banging. These faults, I suppose, are largely due to the piano itself. But, one noticed also a general lack of contrast, not so much in dynamics as in tone and mood, although this improved in the later numbers, and a general lack of breadth in the phrasing which made it difficult to see each work from an overall viewpoint.

In spite of these remarks, though the recital was most enjoyable because of the unusual program and the obvious enthusiasm of the performers; it pointed out a little-exploited field which deserves to be pursued. The recital would have been even more enjoyable if Hart House had seen fit to replace the piano in the music room with some other fine instrument already in the building.

Hart House

Athletic Hub

In a gray building, of Gothic architecture, situated close to the middle of the campus, is centered the hub of university sports life.

From the north wing of Hart House, intercollegiate athletics, interfaculty sports and recreational activities are all controlled by an Athletic Directorate. This Directorate is composed of Warren Stevens, Director of Athletics and Physical Education, two graduate members, two faculty members and five elected undergraduate members.

One of the most important functions of the Directorate is the control of intramural activities. Of this department it has been said, "It is unrivalled on the continent". A lot of credit for the develpment of this section is due to John "Mac" McCutcheon, Supervisor of Intramural Activities.

"Mac" is a rather short man, usually very nattily dressed in blue blazer and greys, and gives the impression of boundles energy. From his work offices in the north-west corner of the Athletic Wing over 20 competitive sports are arranged for, referees appointed and results generally ordinated.

Condensed into a small area are found some of the most varied types of sports. Fencing and weight-lifting are found in a special room, boxing and wrestling are each situated in their own rooms. Basketball, gymnastics, harrier, swimming, squash are just a few of the activities that are also carried on.

But lack of space and facilities is still a worry; last year approximately 3,353 students participated in intramural activities. Warren Stevens in the anuual report stated, "I feel that it is necessary to report that indoor facilities available . . . are most inadequate, providing an opportunity for only one-quarter of the present enrollment to participate in some form of wholesome recreation."

By FRANK MORITSUGU

Richard Wright is an angry young man. His anger has burst out in his books, Native Son, Black Boy, and Uncle Tom's Children. His testimony of his frustrated affair with the Communist party in The God That Failed is a sensitive, pathetic protest. Turning to the Communist faith because of his dissatisfaction with that America which makes Black lesser to White, Wright found that he did not fit in with the machine. He is a lost figure, an idealistic Communist whom professional Communists have spurned.

His major novel, Native Son, is the one that hurtled him into best-selling prominence. In his story of Bigger Thomas' fatal defeat at the hands of a cruel society, Wright is bitter and hotly accusing. Native Son is not the type of book that Hollywood casts in celluloid.

This is probably why Richard Wright made the film NATIVE SON himself, reportedly in Argentina. It is the current showing at the Astor Theatre, that showcase of forgotten film items. NATIVE SON is a curious and novel film. It is so deplorably amateurish in its first several reels that you may feel like walked out of the theatre. If you do, you will miss some exciting movie, exciting despite awkward handling and inept technique.

The film opens with a view of the Chicago skyline while a narrator quotes from Carl Sandburg: "Hog butcher of the world . . . etc." Then to the Black Belt in the Windy City and we are in the atmosphere of the Thomases and the story of elder son Bigger, who never had a chance. The author himself enacts the role of Bigger, and it is a little sad that Wright is no actor. He also looks much too intelligent for the trapped dumb animal Bigger Thomas was.

Wright shared the script-writing, and so the film is quite faithful to the novel. A judicious editor would have worked wonders with the script and improved NATIVE SON'S impact. The actors on the whole are unconvincing, reading their lines like high school players, with even a "reading" intonation at times. At matter of fact, a collegiate performance of "The Pirates of Penzance" last week had better acting than in this film.

But when the unfortunate and unwilling Bigger Thomas helps the drunken Mary Dalton up to her bedroom, the film suddenly jumps into high. Despite a tendency to overdo, Bigger's crime, his awkward attempts to pin the deed on someone else, his flight and his capture, all telescope into gripping excitement.

In one innovation for the film, Bigger Thomas' murder of his girl Bessie Mears is explained more sympathetically. He kills her when driven mad by a nightmare full of symbolism. And the part played by the Communist lawyer, Mr. Max, is considerably cut.

It was interesting to note that at the film's end, the afternoon audience at the Astor seemed to be on Bigger Thomas' side. The argument is, of course, presented in stark black-and-white terms, and this gains sympathy and impact.

Mary Dalton, the stupid well-meaning instrument that starts the tragic ending of Bigger Thomas is played by attractive blonde Jean Wallace. Miss Wallace, like most others in the cast, is not noted for acting. But for the black and white thesis, her blondeness provides an excellent symbol.

• • • •

The second feature at the Astor is an oldie, NIGHT BOAT TO DUBLIN, which has that competent and likeable ham, Robert Newton, as a British Intelligence officer after enemy spies in England and the neutral Irish Free State in World War II. NIGHT BOAT has its moments too, but it is in no hurry to get anywhere, letting its melodrama accumulate like soot in a corner.

Desire To Be Popular Producing Orwell's 1984 —Sociology Professor

'We don't wet our pants, do we?" said the 50-year-old teacher to the kindergarten pupil.

This was given as an example of how "we" strive to get along with one another by Professor J. R. Seeley when he spoke at the University health service mental discussion last night at the Toronto Psychiatric Hospital. Prof. Seeley said that the modern child goes out into the world with a generalized knowledge to do his best, and must orient himself in society by acquiring the minimal clues to proper behavior.

Parents are faced with a one-sided bargaining in a child-centered community, Prof. Seeley said. Since every parent wants his child to be "adjusted" he gives into questions such as "Jeanie was wearing lipstick at 16, why can't I?" The whole emphasis is on getting along with others and the initiative does not lie with the individual parent to act.

Prof. Seeley contrasted this uncertainty with the Puritans who told their children what to do and left them with their conscience.

"We" are living in a mass society which is dominated by the mass media, according to Prof. Seeley. He said that it is only from the mass media that "we" can know what to believe and that there is a constant process involved in knowing how "one is doing." As an example he said that he was not sure whether to say that Frank Sinatra is "keen" or whether he would be a "square" for saying this as Sinatra is perhaps out of fashion.

Under these circumstances, Seeley suggested, the self becomes a mere instrument for telling a person how he can remake himself. He said that this was a complete contrast to the Freudian personality as this person is apathetic while the Freudian type is always faced with conflict.

In this desire to be popular, Prof Seeley saw the emergence of the kind of social organization portrayed by George Orwell in 1984. When "we" manage to get along with everyone else, he said, "we" will need to get along with only one—Big Brother, Stalin, whatever "we" want to call him.

Anatomy is becoming a diminishing factor of ever-increasing value, Prof. Seeley said. He concluded that while it was not necessary to be offensive towards other people, one should not aim at being inoffensive.

The Verdict

The Court held the railway company not liable. One owes a duty of care to those who, it may reasonably be expected may be injured by one's negligence. The act of the porter was negligent toward Mr. Jones, who could have recovered for the damage for his parcel, but it was not toward Mrs. Smith who, at a distance of one hundred feet, could not reasonably be expected to be injured by the fall of a perfectly ordinary-looking parcel.

Varsity Debating Team Meets Harvard Monday

Varsity's debating team, the same that won three out of four debates at Maritime universities a year ago, will leave on Sunday night for Boston where they meet Harvard debaters.

John Morden, Wycliffe, and Dwight Fulford, III Trinity, were chosen by the University of Toronto Debating Union to represent Varsity in debates at five eastern U.S. universities.

A second team of debaters, chosen from the competitors for the U.S. trips, will go to the Chicago area at a later date.

Fulford and Morden will meet debaters at Wellesley College, Boston, on Monday, and on Tuesday debate at Harvard. In Washington they compete with Georgetown and Howard universities, finishing the tour at Princeton on Friday.

The Varsity team will argue resolutions dealing with price and wage controls, modern education, the Iranian nationalization of oil, and US leadership in world affairs.

Said Morden on the planned tour, "We hope to interest them (US debaters) in the parliamentary system of debating with audience participation." The US debates will follow the academic system (a constructive speech and rebuttal by each debater).

The tour is financed by the Students' Council.

Speaking Of Sport

Interfaculty basketball is beginning to shape up now since the first rounds have been completed in all ten groups.

In group I, St. Michael's College look like a sure finisher. The Mikemen coached by Jud Gibbs, a former Varsity player from Larchmont New York, are using a fast breaking attack and beating their opposition to the punch. Jack Iwanicki and Dick Trainor, two Sudbury boys, are the tall men on the team, and Don Warren, one of the Americans, has proven a valuable asset.

Although its a long way to the end of the playoffs, the St. Mike's boys look like the top contender in the majors. Sr. Meds and Sr. UC are tied for second place after yesterday's upset by the Redmen and it will probably cause a runner up sudden death tilt between these two.

Group II action is also quite tight and its doubtful whether Dents can hold onto their lead. Jr. UC and Jr. Skule are both strong contenders with the teams evenly enough matched for a three-way tie. Fedder and Gilbert are the big point getters for the Dentistry crew but unless they can keep up their present pace this league will see some upsets.

The Redmen shaded Skule 40-39 in a very tight tilt in the first round; action of this kind indicates upsets in the near future.

Senior Vic are setting the pace in Group III action. The Vicsters, demoted from Group I, are determined to fight their way back up. Jimmy Goodfellow has been playing sensational basketball for the team and they look like a strong fighting unit.

No one can dismiss either Trinity or Pre-Meds from the race. Sparked by Gord Montazambert, Neil Proverbs, and Frank Sutton the Buttery Boys are well balanced and have enough stamina to go a long way. Ed Tile and Hugh McNeil are the stalwarts on the Pre-Meds outfit but, with their tall players Meds present a very strong threat. There should be a tight scramble in this league. Probably Vic and one other team will make the playoffs.

In the last of the dual playoff groups, Forestry are ahead. Despite 6'4" Rob Keen and 5'5" Jim Harris the Woodcutters are ahead because of rather poor opposition. These major leaguers are not quite up to the standard in the upper groups. Second playoff spot is another tossup, however. There isn't much to choose between St. Mike's and SPS III.

Below these groups only the leaders hit the post-season schedule. UC IV are undefeated and are very well balanced. They are three points up on the pack making them probable Group V winners.

The other lower teams are fighting out tight schedules but none of them except the surprising SPS VI are strong playoff material. This aggregate, obviously far underneath their calibre in group IX are running away with this section.

Boasting two Queen's intermediates from last year's team, one player cut from the St. Blues, and star East York graduate Dukert, the Skulemen are swamping their opponents. Three of their players are above 6'4" and this might help them go a long way in the playoffs. Don Ottaway down from the Blues is a fugitive from one of the St. Skule teams. Outside of this bunch there don't seem to be any powerhouses below Group V.

By BEAUREGARD YUMPF

With the cancellation of all Intercolegiate activities for another week, the sports spotlight has shifted to the Intramural front where all games are being played as scheduled.

In a basketball thriller yesterday afternoon, Senior Vic came from behind to edge Trinity A, 42-39. The contest was close throughout, but a 20 point spurt in the final frame gave the Viesters the win, and kept their undefeated streak in tact.

The tilt started slowly, with both sides managing only nine points in the initial stanza. The Buttery Boys forged ahead in the second, and held a 26-22 lead at its end. But the Trinity team couldn't hold on as the Scarlet and Gold crew caught up and went ahead in the final frame.

Rogers was high scorer in the game, as he hooped 15 points for the winners. Colbert accounted for eleven more, and Goodfellow netted six. For the losers, Proverbs scored 13, while Montizambert and Sutton threw in eight each.

In a minor league tilt played at lunch time, III Mechanical took III Forestry by a 29-17 score. The Skulemen went into the lead at the opening whistle and were never headed.

Murchie and Acton were the stars for the Engineers as each hooped eight points. Tomkins played well in a losing cause, netting six.

Two hockey games were scheduled for the Arena yesterday afternoon. In the opener, Forestry B came from behind to beat Meds IV 4-2. The Medsmen took a 2-1 lead in the initial stanza, on the strength of a pair of goals by Venis, but the Woodsmen came back strong in the final frame. Waddell turned in the hat trick for the Foresters, while Gray accounted for the other marker.

There were four water polo games in the pool yesterday. Led by the four goal effort of Jimmy Bell, Forestry A defeated Architecture 6-3, Scott and Havvis added singles for the Woodsmen, while Lindgren with two and Mutrie with one, accounted for the Architects showing on the scoresheet.

Meds I took the Vic I entry in another pool encounter by a 5-3 tally. The score was tied 2-2 at the end of the first half, but the Doctors broke loose in the second. Mortimer threw in two for the winners, as did teammate Preston. Colbert, Wilson and Tucker divided the losers points.

SPS III dunked Dents A 5-1 scoring two goals in the first half and adding three more in the second. Irwin and Brown scored two apiece, while Thompson threw in the lone Dentists marker.

Dents B fared slightly better than their big brothers, as they swam to a 3-3 tie with St. Mike's B. Sheppard scored twice for the tooth-pullers, and Engel got the other. O'Hara, Price and Lorch tallied once each for the Irish.

Wortman Wins Interfaculty Mile
Kofmel Takes 300, Ties Record

Charlie Wortman, III Vic, won the Interfaculty mile yesterday with a final lap sprint that put him four or five yards clear of George Webster, III SPS, who finshed second. The lead fluctuated amongst George McMullen, Wortman, and Webster, before Wortman went ahead with 150 yards to go, to clock in at 4:35.8. Mal Crawford, III UC, placed third about 15 yards behind Webster, after trailing the other three by a pace or two all the race. McMullen placed fourth.

Charlie Wortman clips in at slightly under fifteen miles an hour as he crosses the finsh line in the Interfaculty mile yesterday. He finishes just about five yards ahead of George Webster. Mal Crawford, third, and George McMullen, fourth, are not shown.

The mile having been remeasured this year somewhat closer to the inside of the track, it is about 100 yards longer than it was in the past, which make the times about 15 seconds more than last year's. Wortman's, then, rates about the same as his 4:21.8 last year.

Eric Kofmel scored his second win of the Interfaculty track season when he took first place in the 300 yard dash in 34.8 seconds, which ties the record he set last year. The powerful engineer beat Jack Warga, OCE, by three or four yards. Warga's second place time was 34.95.

Clint Husband, III SPS, placed third in 35.3, running in another heat. Murray Gaziuk, III PHE, running a little under his distance, placed fourth in 35.8.

Howard Greenley, light heavyweight on the Blue boxing team, came up to do some roadwork and won the novice mile. Gord Banks was second.

Results:—

300—Kofmel, SPS; 2, Warga, OCE; 3, Husband, SPS; 4, Gaziuk, UC/PHE. 34.8 seconds.

Senior mile—Wortman, Vic; 2, Webster, SPS; 3, Crawford, UC; 4, McMullen, Grad. 4 minutes, 35.8 sec

Novice Mile—Greenley, SPS; Banks, Vic. 5 minutes, 3.3 seconds.

Irish B-Ballers Upset By SPS

The Sr. SPS entry in the Major Basketball league yesterday pulled the biggest upset of the year so far when they forged ahead midway in the last period to take a 36-32 win over previously unbeaten St. Mike's. It was the first victory of the season for the Skulemen, who took full advantage of ragged play on the part of the Mikemen.

Fran O'Connor, who played a good game for the Double Blue throughout, paced them to a 9-6 first period margin, but Hank Tamowski's hook shot and free throw pulled SPS into a 9-all tie with one minute gone in the second. O'Connor and Warne came back for SMC to put them out in front 17-9 but the Engineers fought back to make the score 23-20 ending the second session.

The last period was a thriller all the way. After Pierce's set brought Skule into a 24-all tie ,the Engineers swept into a commanding 32-27 lead with less than three minutes left. Iwanicki put together a string of five straight points to tie it up, and with just seconds remaining, Pierce of SPS connected with a one-hander to make the score 34-32. SPS broke up a last second SMC drive to score its last basket.

Best for the winners, who now have a 1-3 record, was Tamowski with 11 markers. Brown and Pierce split 20 evenly to take care of almost al the rest of the SPS scoring. Jack Iwanicki topped the Mikemen with 14 points while O'Connor racked up 12. Bob Warne of the losers was taken off in the second period with an injured ankle.

Blues Propose To Reschedule 2 Laval Tilts

Due to the date of the late King's funeral, next Friday's hockey game with Laval wil also be postponed. Just when the game will be played is no known at this time. This week's Laval game also has to be rescheduled.

Varsity suggested playing a 4 point game later on but Laval refused this proposal. Their counter proposal was to play two games next weekend on Friday and Saturday. However this is impossible because a game on Friday would not be allowed.

The Varsity Athletic office has since wired Laval proposing a single game on Saturday afternoon and a further game on Friday, March 14 if the outcome of the game has any effect on either team's championship's chances.

HOCKEY

The unbeaten Saints from Trinity College found their stiffest competition in their last scheruled game yesterday, against POT. Often it seemed that the Saints' record would be shattered, but when the last buzzer had gone, and the spray had settled, the score was found to be 2-0 for the Trinigals. Their goalie, Elsie Bongard, is largely responsible for her team's success, with a record of only one goal scored against her during the whole season.

Yesterday's game saw little action in the first period. Stickhandling was at a low, and the puck was merely whacked from one end to the other. Tension mounted in the second, as both teams tried to score. Ann Morrow scored the first goal for St. Hildas on a surface shot, straight on goal, which the POT goalie failed to time accurately. Molly Bark led the POT squad into the Saints' zone, time after time, but failed to score.

In the third period, St. Hildas tried to match speed with the winged Physots, which resulted in another goal, a high one into the corner, by Scottie Matthews.

Breta Fredrickson shone for POT, with Margo Findley helping on the defence end. Stars of the day for St. Hildas were Scottie Matthews, Joan Stirling and Jane Rogers.

VOLLEYBALL

In girls' volleyball, a much-improved Institutional Management squad were downed by St. Mike's 38-32 last night in the Lillian Massey gym.

St. Mike's got off to a quick 11-0 lead, but I. M. soon gained on them, and kept at their heels for the remainder of the game. The half-time score was 24-15.

Mary Mathews was outstanding for I. M., both at spiking and all-round playing skill. Joan Linder and Dorothy McRobb also played excellent games.

For I. M., Mary Malon was the spiking star, backed up by Lu Fraser, who played well throughout. In the second game St. Hildas II nosed out Meds II by a 43-42 count. Meds fought hard in the last half but the Saints were able to keep their lead.

The Saints established their superiority in the non-rotation first half which ended 19-12 for the Saints. In the rotation second half, the Meds fought an uphill battle but were not quite able to catch up to the more organized Saints.

For St. Hildas, Daphne Crossley, Joan Henber and Joan Locksley played well in all positions. For Meds, the outstanding players were B. Russell and Joyce Crookland.

Phys-Ed II's defaulted to U.C. II's, the score being 2-0 for U.C.

GENERAL POLICY

We Like Ike, But . . .

Reprinted from The Ubyssey

General Eisenhower has answered the $64 question by confirming that he will stand as presidential candidate if drafted by the Republican convention to be held in Philadelphia.

The General has certainly kept pundits across the continent in copy letting them speculate on the obvious for such a long time. Now they will be able to place their bets on the outcome of the race.

Ike's greatest asset seems to be his charming unsoldierly smile. The Big Smile has an edge on Surface Bob.

However great this personal charm may be, it is slightly incongruous that a country which prides itself on the civilian character of its armed forces should consider a professional soldier for its chief civilian executive post. Democracy does not thrive under the rule of generals however well-intentioned they may be.

The candidacy of the general in 1951 is not just a delayed sympton of post-war hero worship. It is a militant blare of defiance to hide growing American uncertainty.

If the world situation today is as perilous as the Americans seem to fear, Eisenhower could best serve his country by staying in Europe and continuing the work which he has been preforming with such success and to which he is eminently suited.

Ike's status as a soldier, diplomat and statesman is assured. Risking his reputation and the welfare of the country to the yet untried hazards of politics is uneconomical.

Having this summarily disposed to Eisenhower, we must admit we seem slightly kindlier inclined towards him on viewing the other horses in the Republican stables.

The rest of the candidates for the Republican candidature are embittered repeaters. They are at it again but have nothing new to offer. Ike at least has a progressive attitude on forgeign policy and the experience to back it. He has no political experience but his administrative capabilities are proven. The Republicans of today are men whose sole experience stems from their "eternal" role of oppositionism.

A five-star general in the White House would probably imbue Americans with a false sense of security. It certainly will not fool or intimidate the Russians.

40 Carabiners Continue Plan For Weekend

Plans for the Carabin Weekend will continue as scheduled, Dorothy Lieberman, II Pre-Meds, chairman of the Toronto Carabin Committee received confirmation from Montreal last night that the forty Toronto students participating in the exchance program are expected to arrive in Montreal on February 15th as planned.

Miss Lieberman did not know to what extent the activities planned for the weekend will be changed in view of the fact that the funeral of the late King George VI will be held on Friday the 15th.

AVR CAST TO MEET

Jim Guthro asked last night that all members of the All-Varsity Revue cast go to the regular rehearsal at 1:30 p.m. Saturday in spite of the cancellation of the show, as future plans will be discussed at this time.

Nash Wins Top Prize In Engineering Contest

Ray Nash, a fourth year engineering student won first prize in a public speaking contest held last night at Hart House. The contest was sponsored by the Engineering Institute of Canada. Nash gave his twenty-minute talk on "Solar Heating."

There was a tie for second place in the contest as the judges were unable to choose between the first two speakers. M. A. Harrison who spoke on "Electronic Computor Memory" and John Lawrence who spoke on "Nonmetallic Bearings" were the speakers who tied.

Harrison is in fourth year Engineering Physics and Lawrence is in fourth Mechanical Engineering. The two other speakers were Doug Sherk and R. Stevenson. They spoke on explosives and factory maintenance respectively.

Judges for the contest were Professor T. R. Loudon, Miss Elsie MacGill, and Mr. Clare Carruthers.

While the judges were making their decision a movie on steel making was shown to the large crowd of engineering students who came to hear the speakers.

All Varsity Revue

Caput

To show the sympathy of the University of Toronto for the death of King George VI, the Caput has decreed that this year's All Varsity Revue shall not go on. And it is only fitting that the stage of Hart House Theatre should not reverberate under a kick-line the week of the late King's funeral.

Constitutionally, the executive powers of the Caput are vast. It is powerful in directing undergraduate activities. By this decree, it has shown an admirable sense of decorum.

But if the curtailment of undergraduate activities during the in-between period of mourning had been a voluntary step on the part of the student, the action would have appeared more sincere.

As it is, it looks as if mourning has been forced upon the undergraduate body. It was not given a chance to curtail its own events out of respect for the King's passing, even though it has a governing body, capable of taking just such steps.

Perhaps the fault lies with the undergraduates themselves for not acting quickly enough. Perhaps it is the fault of the Caput for not giving undergraduate opinion a preliminary hearing in this case.

Either way, the cancellation of the All Varsity Revue, coming as it does from the Caput, is faintly reminiscent of disciplinary measures, rather than a spontaneous and sincere expression of the student body's regret at the loss of a beloved king.

Kaput?

And so the show will not go on. Not on the University of Toronto campus, at least. Hart House Theatre has such a full schedule that it could not house the All Varsity Revue before examination time is leering around the corner. A special meeting of the Students' Administrative Council has been called for today to decide what is to be done. There is a possibility that the AVR may be held on a stage outside the campus.

In its short past, the AVR has shown a kinship to the cat in its ability to revive from what looked like a death blow. Last year, the third year of its existence, the scheduled Revue had to be called off because a producer could not be found. This year things looked more hopeful, and the campus looked forward to seeing what the combined cream of its talent could produce.

The idea behind the All Varsity Revue is to put on the best possible entertainment that the undergraduates of this campus can provide. Though practical difficulties have in the past made it an impossibility, the principle of the AVR continues to have student and SAC support.

If, as seems probable, the show does not go on, the financial blow to the SAC, which sponsors the show, will be severe. If the AVR is held, there will still be a considerable loss, because many lecture-goers who have bought tickets for the night performances will not be able to attend matinees. And matinees seem the only way for the AVR to squeeze in the prescribed number of performances so late in the school year.

The cancellation of the AVR for the second consecutive year may mean a drop in student support. Student opinion, hard enough to raise, is bound to suffer from a two year lag in something it was once enthusiastic about.

We hope that the unavoidable cancellation of the AVR this year may not prove a second death blow. It would be regrettable to see that the time, money and enthusiasm which have been poured into it have all been wasted.

In view of the gigantic efforts of the cast and directors and the financial implications, it is almost compulsory that the AVR be staged, somewhere, this year. How many death blows can one institution take?

Science and Society

Irrational All

This is the third in a series of articles by Michael Humphries, IV Psychology, who attempts to show that the obligation of the scientist to society is as great as that of the layman.

To be heard in society the voice of science must be raised above the stentorian tyranny of outmoded habits. Uninformed parents, senile systems of education and the pressure of groups whose primary function has become one of self preservation, these are the forces which produce the cerebral curtain of ignorance against which we have to struggle.

Complicating this struggle is the fact that the scientist is no less a product of this system than is the layman. Long before he has obtained his scientific training a very rigid pattern of emotional and evaluative habits has been acquired. This complex system of prejudices will never be completely dissipated by his subsequent experience. How many of us have been ashamed because we were frightened by spiders and snakes long after we have learned that they were harmless? How often have we caught ourselves slipping back into childhood habits of racial and religious prejudices? All the reasoning and knowledge acquired after the formation of these habits seem powerless to remove completely these dangerously irrational reactions. Because the scientist, too, is a product of the same basic cultural determination, he is afflicted with the same unreasonable impulses that make life what it is for the rest of us.

For this reason we must be no less cautious with the scientist's value judgments than we are with the evaluations of anyone else. In fact the scientist's pronouncements in this area should be given even stricter scrutiny as he has the power, potentially at least, to ensure that his goals are obtained. This does not mean that the scientist would not contribute to the definition of the "good for society". As Max Weber has said, it is his damned duty to do so. However, what he says in this regard should be given the same consideration afforded the expressed views of the layman — no more. Ultimately, as with the expression of all opinion, his statements should be considered on their own merits, regardless of his status in society. If we allow the scientist more power than this we would be granting him the authority we regard as dangerous whenever limited to one select group. There is no guarantee that an oligarchy of scientists would be any less tyrannical than other groups have been in the past.

The scientist as a man has one responsibility he can not afford to ignore. The author has suggested in a previous article that science is the creation of society. As the scientist is a member of society his responsibility is to society at large and not to any one group or overnment within that society. Suppose that while working for a private company or for one national government he should discover some principle that could be used to harm, or to benefit society, depending on how it was used. What should he do? As he is very likely the first and only member of society to appreciate fully the significance of his discovery, he should publicly announce his findings and present his best estimate of the consequences of any action based on them. When the implications have world wide application to humanity scientific discoveries should be public property, not private.

This view will undoubtedly raise dust in otherwise static regions, but it is the author's opinion that only by developing a professional ethic of this magnitude can otherwise selfish use of science be checked. The physician seldom places partisan boundaries between the acceptable and the non-acceptable patient, not even during a war when these distinctions are most frequently applied. Why not develop in all scientists an international responsibility of the same order? Like the doctor, the scientists of the world should have as their basic interest the well-being of all men, and not the selfish partisan desires of any one group of men.

Possibly the international identification which sems so necessary today will obtain its early development at the hands of the group most accustomed to it—the scientists. If society as a whole could emulate the basic humility of the scientist and his determination to make changes in his theories if they don't seem to fit the facts, then we may be able to solve some of the problems that make international co-operation so difficult at the moment.

Cat was sloshing his way across the front campus, feeling very dejected. This has been a poor day. To begin with, the cafeteria in Hot House has burnt only one side of his toast this morning, and if that weren't enough, someone had actually put sugar in his coffee. These two events in themselves would have floored a lesser cat than Cat, but the final straw had come when he learned that President Sad-Eyes Snitch had gone on record as saying, "Cat disappointed me. I knew that he wasn't going to stand in the top 35%, but I certainly didn't expect him to end up in the bottom 65%."

This perplexed Cat no end. After all, there are only so many percentages, and he had to stand somewhere. Maybe the President wanted him to take Remedial French instead of Remedial English. So with drooping whiskers, Cat dragged himself into the Book Store, and stationing himself he proceeded to drown his sorrows. Aimlessly his eyes fixed themselves on an article in The Farcity, which was on sale on the magazine rack. After staggering over and reinserting his eyes, Cat perused the article carefully.

"Dr. Wallace states that students are reading only half as many books as they did twelve years ago." Cat being quick-witted, this immediately rang a bell. (Cat is noted for his successes with Bell singers.)

"Well", he chortled, "I'll show old Sad-Eyes what percentage I stand in. This miceastrophe isn't as bad as it seems. All I do is read twice as many books and I'm a lead pipe cinch to get an A in that Remedial English course." After which admirable bit of logic, Cat, with his whiskers now as stiff as pokers, and a fanatical gleam in his left eye, trotted unsuspectingly over to the Main Library.

With a flourish, Cat dashed up to that monstrous stack of file cards known as the Micealogue, and immediately encountered his first difficulty. Did "S" come after "R" and before "T" or vice versa? Being a resourceful soul, Cat persevered and found his difficulty completely resolved when one of the more able librarians explained the intricacies of the alphabet to him.

The first hurdle over, Cat approached the front desk, proudly clutching the application form in his hot little paw. He realize of course, that this was the first application he had made in his three years in first year Pass Bird watching. One hour and three minutes later Cat by now suffering from an inferiority complex brought on by the hostile stares passing librarians, tip-toed quietly up one of the eighteen girls who were busily tearing cards out of a left-hand and inserting them in a right-hand file, and poked her timidly with a claw. Whereupon she emitted a ghastly shriek.

"Sorry", stammered Cat, "one of these days I'm gonna learn to pull in claws."

There ensued an exchange of pleasantries in which Cat got second honours. (This was good for Cat, usually got BL's.) Snatching the application from his paw, the girl disappeared through a door into the stacks. Cat waited. The girl reappeared and disappeared through another door. Cat waited. Six thirty-four minutes later, she popped up again, directly behind him. (These girls are always popping up in the most unexpected places; usually just when you and your girl-friend are having an intellectual conversation in the stacks on the bottom floor.) Anyway, up she popped and snarled at him in a voice dripping with venom, "Would you mind telling me just what this scribbling is? I can't seem to read your writing."

Cat was extremely hurt by her tone of voice, but little did he realize that the Library Staff was holding its annual Bridge Tournament in the English stacks and her partner had trumped her ace. (Which is enough to make anyone's voice drip with venom.)

"W-W-Why", he gasped, "it's called The Sexual Life of The Bengal Tiger by Mukerjee."

"Oh, that book," she snickered, "it's in the School of Nursing Library, and besides, it's restricted to medical students."

All of which explains why, if one happens to be in the Main Library at 2 a.m. any week-day morning, one is likely to see Cat, whiskers on end and fire at mouth, madly stapling cigarettes to the floor and babbling to himself, "I'll fix this library. They'll never get me up in a million years." — Notsinec.

Dr. Smith Says –

VARSITY NOT TOO BIG

By HAROLD NELSON

A story in the Toronto Daily Star on Saturday carrying a head reading "VARSITY JUST TOO BIG—REASON FAILURES HIGH —RIVAL UNIVERSITY SAYS", brought a comment from President Sidney Smith that he is not alarmed at the size of the University because it is broken up into such small units by the federated system.

The story in the Star did not say which university thought that Varsity "was too big." The story was only two paragraphs long and was supposed to have been continued on page 15. Apparently the Star composing room carried a story from Cobourg twice and left the main body of the University story out. This made it very hard to figure out what the Star reporter meant about Varsity being "too big."

Dr. Smith said last night that the University of Toronto is not too large and is not the largest university in the British Commonwealth, as many people believe. During his recent trip to India as a representative of the National Federation of Canadian Universities, Dr. Smith saw several Indian universities which have more full-time students than Toronto. He estimated that there were at least four Indian universities larger than Toronto and mentioned Bombay, Madras and Calcutta, as examples.

These universities have federated colleges, like Toronto, and therefore their size did not alarm Dr. Smith. He said that a federated university has the strength which comes from the intimate nature of the smaller groups and the strength that comes from a large teaching staff and the greater economy of the larger unit.

Dr. Smith said that there are only two Canadian universities which have federated colleges, and that no other Canadian university was so broken down into small units as Toronto. President Smith was president of the University of Manitoba before coming to Toronto. He felt that federation had not been carried as far at Manitoba as at Toronto.

The story in the Star said an over-all screening of Varsity applicants may not stop the high failure rate. The Star said McGill, Queen's, and Western have lower failure rates and "markers do little or no 'juggling' of standards—a practice which some Varsity professors have long admitted in some courses."

President Smith said that the University of Toronto has high satndards and that Toronto is not the only Canadian University which is concerned about failures.

Dr. Smith did not wish to comment or make a comparison between Toronto and other Canadian Universities.

However, last November the Students' Executive Council at McGill declared a "No activities Week" as a result of the high failure rate. The McGill Daily did not publish that week and the Student Union was closed. The Dean of Arts and Science at McGill, N. H. Fieldhouse said that one out of every six freshmen had failed the previous year.

At Toronto approximately one-third of the first year in Engineering failed (two mining engineers passed and seven failed). Only 15 per cent of the first years Arts failed, but another 9 per cent was forced to transfer from honor courses.

Check That Coat – In order to prevent coat thefts members of Hart House are requested to check their coats in the checkroom outside the Great Hall. Hats, books and briefcases may also be checked for the convenience of the members. Although the biggest lineups occur at mealtimes, the checkroom attendants are on duty from 11 a.m. until 7:00 p.m. from Monday to Friday.

Cancel McGill Winter Carnival Student Council Stands Loss

Montreal (Special) — The McGill Winter Carnival has been cancelled, as a result of the King's funeral next Friday.

McGill's biggest annual event was called off after a special meeting of the Athletic Committee of the Students' Executive Council. The SEC stands to lose the major part of the $13,000 allocated for the Carnival, it was reported.

The committee decided that it would be impossible to reschedule all the events planned and to postpone the Carnival.

Scheduled to start this Thursday night with fireworks and sleighriding under floodlights on the top of Mount Royal, the Athletic Night has been substituted on Saturday night. It will be the only event to make up for the Carnival.

Established four years ago, the Carnival has become on of the biggest annual events at McGill and in the city.

A large number of University of Toronto students had planned to go to Montreal to take part in the festivities. It is one of the last big Inter-Collegiate events among the eastern colleges before exam-fever sets in.

Skiing competitions between teams from American and Canadian universities are scheduled to take place at St. Sauveur. Also planned were a Grand Carnival Ball to climax the Carnival Saturday night as well as a performance of several neighbouring college variety shows.

Arrangements had been made for University of Toronto students to be accommodated for the event as well as escorts provided by the Winter Carnival Committee to see that all students visiting would not miss any of the events.

Inside On Sports By Tely's Reeve

Ted "Moaner" Reeve "the Dean of Canadian Sportswriters" will give a second of a series of talks on journalism sponsored by The Varsity at one o'clock in Room 8 UC today. Reeve, a columnist of the Toronto Telegram will talk on "Setting up a Sports Page." He will be accompanied by George Daimidge, also of the Telegram staff, who will help him answer any questions that may arise.

Reeve was a coach at Queen's University in the thirties and coached Balmy Beach in 1948. This gives him a great background in the football world. In his column he often makes classical allusions which are rather unusual for a sports page.

Each year Reeve picks the All-Canadian football team for Maclean's magazine. He is usually found at Toronto Argonauts games to give comments when the Argos are playing.

Reeve's talk is the second in a series designed to acquaint staff members and others with different aspects of journalism. The first talk was given by Ken MacTaggart of the Globe and Mail. The next talk to be held this Thursday will be given by Wesley Hicks, a news feature writer on the Telegram.

Plan New Schedule For Staging AVR At Special Meeting

The All-Varsity Revue will give five performances beginning with three shows next Saturday.

At a special noon-hour meeting of the Students' Council on Friday, it was decided that five performances would be given in place of the original plan for seven shows. Ordered by the Caput to cancel all performances until after the funeral of the late King, the AVR was faced with the failure of the show.

The decision came after it was announced at the SAC meeting that Hart House agreed to give up Monday and Tuesday following the King's funeral to the AVR. These nights were originally scheduled for rehearsals for the next Hart House play, Shakespeare's Richard II. As a result of the changes, it was announced that there would be one less performance of the play.

Al Politi, chairman of the AVR committee, announced at the SAC meeting that even two Saturday shows would be worthwhile. Politi gave a financial statement of the money already spent which would be "a complete loss to the students if AVR were cancelled." Total loss in expenses for tickets, music, costumes, make-up, programs, publicity, etc., was quoted at over $2,000.

Additional expenses, now that the AVR is being performed, amount to only $485 plus $195 per show, Politi announced. Even if ticket revenue from the five performances does not meet the expenses, the deficit will be negligible compared to the loss if the AVR were cancelled outright, he said.

All attempts to find a suitable auditorium outside the university where the AVR could be shown failed last Thursday, Politi announced. After E. A. MacDonald, SAC Secretary-Treasurer, indicated that Monday and Tuesday were available to the AVR, Politi commented: "This solves the problem of finding a suitable alternative."

It was suggested that two additional shows be held as matinees on Monday and Tuesday. Jim Guthro, AVR director, asked that the cast be considered before any decisions were made. "Most of the cast have classes on Monday and Tuesday afternoons, and it is unfair to ask them to give up lectures," he added.

The AVR committee met after special SAC session to decide when performances would be given. A matinee at 2:00 p.m. and evening performances at 7:00 and 9:15 p.m. will be held this Saturday. There will be evening shows at 8:30 on the following Monday and Tuesday nights.

New AVR Ticket Sale Announced

The All Varsity Revue will go on although for only five performances. There will be three shows next Saturday, and shows on the following Monday and Tuesday nights. This change in plans necessitates students holding tickets for any of the cancelled nights to turn them in for new ones.

"We expect all of the five rescheduled shows of the All Varsity Revue to be sold out," stated Marv Goodman, ticket manager. Arrangements for redistributing tickets for the AVR due to the change in dates were announced over the weekend by Goodman.

Tickets for tonight (Monday) and Tuesday night will be honored next Monday (February 18) and Tuesday (February 19) respectively, at the regular times.

The Saturday matinee will run as usual but there will be two Saturday evening shows. Ticket holders for the regular Saturday evening show should come at 9:15. The earlier show at 7:15 will be for ticket holders affected by the cancellation.

Those holding tickets for any of the nights of Wednesday through Friday should take their reserved seat tickets to the Hart House Box Office. There the original exchange tickets will be returned. Take these exchange tickets to the Students' Administrative Council office in Hart House. New exchange tickets will be issued for any of the nights that the AVR has been rescheduled for. These new exchange tickets then should be taken to the Hart House Box Office where new reserved seat tickets will be issued.

Tickets will be available for the early Saturday evening show at 7:00 p.m., the Saturday matinee and for the following Monday and Tuesday. The late Saturday evening show is already sold out.

Goodman added that for the convenience of those holding tickets for any of the cancelled shows no new tickets will be sold until Thursday to allow them to get their new reserved seats.

FOUR PAGES

As a result of the King's death, all sports events were cancelled over the weekend, forcing The Varsity to reduce its size to four pages.

THE VARSITY

VOL. LXXI NO. 80 THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO Monday, February 11, 1952

balcony viewpoint

By DAVE PEDDIE

The Jupiter Theatre last Saturday finished a two week run with their BIGGEST THIEF IN TOWN. And they were playing to full houses to the end, if one can judge from last Friday, when I saw it for the second time. It still seems impossible that a show produced and acted by Toronto actors should be able to get the support of narrow-minded, staid and stuffy old Toronto, but the fact remains that people were going to see it.

What is even more unbelieveable is that the show really merited all the attention that it got. There is almost always something amateur and provincial about a local production; everyone is always too ready with excuses, and there is no professional polish. In fact some dilettantes sneer at polish and call it very commercial and unartistic. But THE BIGGEST THIEF IN TOWN to my mind showed us all that a truly professional show is possible here, and that it is far more satisfying to a local audience. No matter how sincere the amateur production may be, it lacks the better sincerity of a job well-done.

Another very encouraging thing I noted last Friday night was that most of the actors had improved over their original shows. Budd Knapp who seemed almost perfect two weeks ago broadened his characterization of the little undertaker without losing any of the subtlety, and quiet dignity. Gerry Sarracini in what looks like a very thankless part made his presence felt, so much so that he became for the audience what he was for undertaker, Bert, someone to look up to and listen to. Ed McNamara didn't ring very true when I first saw him and I think he improved more than any, but he has difficulties in forgetting that he is an actor. Of course some of the others have become somewhat stale and uninteresting; just haven't the staying power I guess, but we'll leave them unnamed, now that the show is over.

What does seem particularly sad is that Jupiter should have started in the accustomed home-town manner with GALILEO which was neither a good play nor an interesting play from the audience's point of view. There was no really first-rate acting except from one person in a small part and there was a very meager attempt at a finished production. GALILEO seemed to be a concerted, if perverse, attempt to keep audiences away from the theatre and then blame the failure of the play on them.

Jupiter have now arrived at a draw position. They have neither won nor lost. No one will be able to say the last word until their season is over, but right now they have just balanced the books. And their next play is more than a challenge. Another historical play, SOCRATES, by Lister Sinclair is to my mind far superior to GALILEO, but it will have to be done superlatively well to convince an audience. It can be successful. Jupiter can get in the black on the artistic books, if it wants. But . . .

Wax Will Report On Trips Thursday

Syd Wax, President of the Students' Council will report on his trips to Edinburgh and Rio de Janeiro Thursday afternoon in Room 13, U.C. at 4 p.m. This special open meeting will be mainly a question and answer period, he said. If anyone wishes to question Wax at the start of the meeting on the Edinburgh conference they may do so. The main part of the meeting will be devoted to a discussion of conference of Pan-American student unions in Rio de Janeiro, from which he returned last week.

Wax is chairman of the International Activities Commission of the National Federation of Canadian University Students. He represented NFCUS at both conferences.

Students of 25 nations gathered at Edinburgh in January representing about two million students throughout the world. As a result of the conference an international secretariat was organized to co-ordinate the activities of the unions.

Wax attended both conferences with Jean De Margerie, NFCUS President.

At the Pan-American conference the Canadian delegation hoped to get the Brazilians to accept a seat on the six-man secretariat.

The Edinburgh conference was a follow up to the conference held in December 1950 in Stockholm. This conference was held as an attempt to equalize educational facilities and plan a program of mutual aid and assistance to student unions throughout the world.

While in Europe, Wax and de Margerie made an attempt to visit Prague to see Joseph Grohman, president of the Communist-dominated International Union of Students. Their plane was forced to turn back because of bad weather, however.

Joan Presant, III U.C., chairman of NFCUS on this campus, will be chairman of the meeting.

SAC Sends Cable To Royal Family

A cable of sympathy on the death of King George VI was sent to the Royal Family on behalf of the University of Toronto undergrads by the Students' Administrative Council last week.

President of the SAC Syd Wax said that he had forwarded the cable on behalf of the students and with the consent of the SAC executive, in his name. Wax made the announcement at a special SAC meeting, Friday.

The cable, which also contained congratulations to the new Queen Elizabeth, was sent to the Honorable Thibadeau Rinfret. Administrator of Canada, at Ottawa. Mr. Rinfret, Canadian Supreme Court Justice, is acting as administrator since Vis-count Alexander of Tunis finished his extended term as Governor-General and until Vincent Massey is installed as the new representative of the Crown in Canada.

The cable read: "May I request Your Excellency to convey to Her Gracious Majesty, The Queen and to the members of the Royal Family the sympathy and the affection of the undergraduates of the University of Toronto on the sad occasion of the passing of our beloved monarch, King George VI.

"Would Your Excellency convey as well to Her Majesty on her ascension to the throne, the loyalty and devotion of the undergraduates of the University of Toronto. Our feelings are the more personal because of the recent visit of Her Gracious Majesty to our University."

Lawyers Lose In Debate

The University of Toronto is now in the western finals of the Inter-University Debating League. Two Varsity debating teams defeated their Osgoode Hall opponents on Friday, to give them a possible chance to meet the Quebec winners for the IUDL championship.

Michael Callahan, II St. Mike's, and Robert Collins, III St. Mike's, defeated Osgoode debaters, Clayton Fee and Stanton Hogg, in a debate at Brennan Hall, while Walter Esmon, IV SPS, and John Regan, II St. Mike's, defeated Norman Balfour and Cy Gould in a corresponding debate at Osgoode Hall.

Both groups debated the same resolution: "That in English-speaking countries the struggle for individual liberty is being lost at home". Collins and Callahan took the negative at Brennan Hall, while Eamon and Regan took the affirmative at Osgoode Hall.

"It is our power to do as we please that distinguishes us from our semi-barbaric ancestors," said Fee, speaking for the motion. Today there are a number of factors working against this power, he pointed out, such as the growth of big business, of trade unions, and of the welfare state. "We are sacrificing our individual liberty to the concept of the common good," said Fee.

"There is a difference between liberty and licence," said Callahan, first speaker for the negative. "For freedom, we must not infringe on the rights of others. The welfare state represents a new concept of the individual and an attempt to enlarge individual freedom, which depends so largely on economic security."

This is the first time in some some years that Toronto has belonged to the IUDL, which was established in 1941-42 under NFCUS. It now has its own constitution, and most of the major universities in Quebec and Ontario are members. Toronto will now meet the other Ontario finalists, and the winner of this will meet the Quebec winner.

SCIENCE NOTES

In the Groove

And nearer, nearer still, the tide
Of music seems to come,
There's something like a human voice
And something like a drum;
You sit in speechless agony,
Until your ear is numb.

This prophetic verse was written even before the age of Spike Jones recordings. Which is the topic of conversation today, dear children.

It must have been ages ago that man first yearned to preserve his utterances, vocal or musical, for the edification of posterity. The first successful attempt was made by a chap called Leon Scott about a century ago. The result, although only a wavy line on a smoked drum, paved the way for more adequate methods. In 1877, Edison first reproduced sound on a cylinder covered with tin foil. Later, his method of etching sound into a series of hills and valleys on a soft medium was refine on a wax disc. The source of sound was directed into a megaphone terminating in a flexible diaphragm. Movements of this membrane caused by sound waves were transfered to an attached stylus which cut a record on a revolving disc.

Since the nineteen twenties, this same technique has been adapted to the use of electrical methods. Sound reaching the diaphragm of a microphone produces an electric current which fluctuates in proportion to the strength and frequency of the sound at any moment.

This current is fed to an amplifier which increases the power of the impulses. They are then directed to an electro magnet which moves the recording stylus in the waxing and waning of the electrical current.

Recordings as we know them are made upon Vinylite. Pressings are made from dies that are the negative copies of the original master matter. The pickup needle runs in a continuous circular groove on the record, and sound modulations are produced by the laterial variations in this groove.

The most recent development in the field of sound recording is the use of magnetized wires or tapes. A fine strip of metal runs past the poles of an electro magnet which is called the recording head. Through a coil around this magnet flows a current which varies in intensity with the amplitude of the sound waves being recorded. The coil thus sets up a magnetic field at the poles of the recording head and the tape becomes magnetized in varying degrees. The result is a long tape consisting of a series of small magnets of different power, each of which is proportional to the sound recorded at any moment.

This same idea is utilized in recording a sound track for the movies. In this case, however, a beam of light passes through an area on the film varying density. This allows different degrees of light to get through the film. This fluctuating stream of light falls upon a photo-electric cell which then sends on a current to the first tube of an amplifier which supplies the loud speakers.

Thus triumphs modern science; for the music you want is at your fingertips when you want it. Even if it is the City Slickers.

Fraternity Value, Use Challenged

Vancouver (CUP) — Controversy over the fraternity question stirred recently on the campi of British Columbia University and the American ivy-league's Williams College.

The Garfield Club at Williams College last week carried out its threat to disband unless all Williams students are given an opportunity to join fraternities. The college took over the duty of feeding the 200 students who had belonged to the club, which is the residence for incoming freshmen who are not fortunate enough to be bid into the fraternities.

Striking out against "a social stratification which regulates twenty per cent of the undergraduates to a position of second class citizenship", the club criticized the Williams Administration for "in no way evidencing a strong desire to ameliorate the intolerable social conditions on the Williams Campus".

In its statement on disbanding last week it argued that a majority of the student body favored insuring the admittance of all students, but that a dispute over methods of enforcement had resulted in an adverse popular vote on the question last month. Due to this vote college trustees decided not to force the fraternities to accept all undergraduates, and preferred to search out other methods for improving social conditions on the campus.

On the U.B.C. campus a similar move to condemn the discriminatory nature of fraternities was defeated by the Students' Council. The resolution condemned fraternities as bigotted, restricting social contacts, and setting up a financial barrier to full participation in AMS (U.B.C. Student Council) activities.

The suggestion was also that fraternity and sorority social events conflict with those of the Student Council, and should be made responsible to the latter. Another speaker claimed that withdrawal of fraternity recognition by the Senate would solve very little and might make them more difficult to deal with.

Atlas Ambition

Remedial English is beginning to take on dangerous aspects of permanency. Having pitched the curative tents for a year, the university seems eager to brick them into the curriculum of the ailing student.

Like God, the university moves in mysterious ways. A new library has been needed for thirty years; we are still waiting. University residences, particularly for those displaced from Holwood Hall, are immediately necessary; they, too, have been promised. University professors, despite recent salary raises, are still notoriously underpaid.

And yet, on the basis of a single English test, President Smith is going to recommend the expenditure of thousands of dollars to set up a remedical English program. What a conclusive test this must have been! How unlike the senior matriculation examinations which President Smith has questioned!

In spite of the fact that there are no previous English tests to compare results with, that the very nature of the test has been questioned by various educators, this unique examination has been chosen to represent the Higher Truth — many university students are a bit illiterate.

The ambition of the university has become truly Atlas-like. Previously, it modestly assumed the task of producing the future leaders of society—or so the story goes. Now, it is willing to fight the evils of the comic book era, and the inadequacies of home and school in counteracting the so-called illiteracy of the age.

Yet, how much can one institution, given four years of student time, accomplish? How can the university provide the basic tools of learning as well as food for thought?

Surely the whole nature of the university is alien to the preliminary investigation of sentence structure. If the duties and disciplines of the high school are to be undertaken by the university, then the latter should forego its title. For the spirit of free inquiry, the importance of advancing the boundaries of knowledge, will be lost—and these are the unique characteristics of the university.

It is difficult to equate the results of an English test with the expenditure of thousands of dollars. It is even more difficult to believe that remedial English classes will be able to produce a breed of graduates who "are able to express themselves with facility."

If the high schools cannot instill the basic skills of the English language into their graduates, then it is doubtful whether the university, using the same techniques, will be any more successful. The university could, however, encourage the high schools to try a little harder.

With all the loose cash about to go down the remedial English drain, the university might better increase the number of bursaries so that able students can come to university. Again, the number of fellowships might be increased so that promising students could afford to stay at university.

And instead of calling in a remedial English staff, the university might better concentrate on attracting and keeping the most brilliant men available as professors.

OUR READERS WRITE

Ties That Bind

Editor, The Varsity:

We hear a great deal now about Canadian Nationalism. This movement towards things Canadian, towards a national self-awareness is inevitable and very necessary for healthy development. Of course any good thing can be carried too far, and lately there have been many aspects of this nationalism that have seemed to many Canadians unwise and sometimes absurd.

Certainly the most controversial move towards things Canadian was the recent appointment of a Canadian governor-general. Most people agree that if a Canadian had to be chosen Vincent Massey was the best, if not the only choice for the office. Mr. St. Laurent astutely remarked at the time that no one would like to think that a Canadian could not represent His Majesty in Canada. But has Mr. St. Laurent considered some of the other native-born governors-general in the British Commonwealth now?

In Australia the King's representative was formerly a member of the Labour party. When the government changed there was apparently no trouble, but his former colleagues were not so happy. We heard rumours from their direction that he had sold out to the new administration for an all-expense trip to England and the like!

The rest of the British Commonwealth abhors the racial policy of the present government of the Union of South Africa. Yet there, the Governor-General, also a former member of the ruling party openly supports and approves this selfish and degrading policy and all it entails.

We believe the Crown should be above politics. We hold this to be the first requisite of our Constitutional Monarchy and it is perhaps the main cause of our much-envied political stability. Yet here are two vivid instances of this ideal flouted. Inevitably in Canada as in the other Dominions, a native governor-general will become a political appointment and as a result the Crown will become tainted to say the very least with the politics of the day.

The suggestion was made that our next governor-general come from another dominion if not Great Britain. An excellent idea apart from heightening friendships between the several Dominions! It would be difficult, of course, to find many prominent men not allied with some party or another. But what we must have if the Crown is to be kept aloof is a governor-general personally removed from the country's politics. Accordingly a man drawn from another part of the British Commonwealth is the best solution.

We should try to profit, in future, from the mistakes of other Dominions in this respect; and at all times secure the Crown from party politics. A governor-general appointed from another part of the British Commonwealth can bring to that high office a non-partisan and personally disinterested approach, that is practically, if not quite, impossible to find at home.

The Federal Government's policy of omitting "Dominion" on official documents, and "Royal" on mails, etc., has received much criticism, too. These are petty acts done no doubt to please the French M.P.'s. We all know how small at times governments are, as witness the childish decree of the French after Marshal Petain's death. This policy of our government is petty and tyrannical! But since our present parliament is apparently little more than a rubber stamp in the hands of the cabinet what can we do?

It is true that a great many Canadians, who find real and valid expression through traditions, like to see the "Royal" used officially and to any reasoning person, "Dominion" as we use it, implies no insubordination to another power. If some are small enough to take unfair advantage by removing these names let them have their childish triumphs. Names mean nothing! It is the ideas and actions behind them that count. If all our ties with Great Britain depend on a few adjectives and nouns then those ties are nebulous and not worth having. But our true and lasting ties with her, apart from our link through the common Crown, are the ideals and values we share together. Our system of justice, of Parliamentary government, we have from and share with Great Britain; our respect for the rights and dignity of the individual. If we were losing these, as it would appear the Union of South Africa is, then we would indeed have cause to fear that our ties with the Motherland were weakening.

David Stanley-Porter,
III Trinity.

To Whom

It May Concern

Professor G——,
Department of English,
University College.

Dear Sir:

The enclosed essay may surprise you a little, but the topic got out of control, and I was faced with the alternative of handing it in late, or trying to explain the circumstances to your satisfaction. I decided that this might be the safer course of action.

You see, none of the books you recommended for my essay on Lord Chesterfield's letters were in any of the campus libraries. However, I found, after only a half-hour's search, one possible critic who should have been useful, and I duly filled out all the relevant data (Remedial English, please note) on one of those little white slips so kindly provided by the main library. And I still maintain that I filled it out correctly!

As you may know from experience, the line-up for week-end books is inclined to be somewhat lengthy on Friday afternoons, but I amused myself by making a snowman until I finally worked my way indoors again, and the half hour of slow shuffling inside the building I spent in admiration of the studious young man in front of me in the line. (I was quite disillusioned when I saw what he was reading—Mr. Moritsugu's review of Mr. Spillane left no doubt that one's time could be more profitably employed.)

But eventually a young woman checked my A.T.L. and assured me me that the book in question was not reserved. The little white slip was placed at the remote end of a long row of others, and I almost enjoyed the suspense of wondering if one of the busy girls behind the counter mightn't take it before its turn by mistake. But no one did.

However, in about 10 minutes, another young lady collected my slip and disappeared with it. Four minutes later, she reappeared and asked me if I had ever had the book out before. I said no, but she checked a number of cards anyway, although this may not have indicated disbelief.

Then she wandered off in another direction. I was just about to shift to my left foot for the third time, when she came back and said that, while there was no record of the book being out, there was equally no record of it being in.

We looked at each other speechlessly for a few minutes.

"Perhaps it's lost?" I ventured.

She looked relieved that I was taking it so calmly—"Yes, it must be. Would you like anything else?"

I glanced piteously at the long line behind me.

"I'll get something for you," she said with a confidential and knowing air, and strode off briskly. It took only three minutes this time, but her expression as she handed me the book indicated that enough was enough, and no questions were to be asked.

In fact, her expression got me out of the library rather more quickly than was wise, for when I held up the book as I passed under the Hart House tower (the days are getting shorter) the light revealed that it was a treatise on G. K. Chesterton, who must enjoy the proximity to the famous lord in the stacks.

And that, sir, is the reason my essay, although in on time, bears little reference to eighteenth century literature.

But sir, if I pass this year, and the decision may rest in your hands, I'll be able to get into the stacks next year, and then I'll write you that essay on Chesterfield. You see, I'm pretty sure that the book is filed under Modern Humour, but all the Librarians are too busy unstapling cigarette buts from the floor to find out.

Yours sincerely and hopefully,
Denise Richards.

Possible Extension Of Remedial English

The possibilities of extending the remedial English program outside University College to the professional faculties and of implementing screening tests for the guidance of freshmen were envisaged by President Sidney Smith yesterday.

Dr. Smith, who has just returned from a 22,000 mile round-trip to India, said that if money could be found the remedial English courses would be offered to students in the first year of the professional faculties. The program would also be offered to Victoria, St. Mike's and Trinity if these federated colleges desired to use it.

The inability of university students to use the English language fluently is not something new to Toronto, Dr. Smith said. He had noticed the same failing in students at the Universities of Dalhousie and Manitoba. Dr. Smith felt that the Ontario secondary schools do a better job in teaching English than is done in the west or in the maritimes.

He explained that his remarks in the President's Report were not to be taken as an attack on the secondary schools. Dr. Smith said that it is easy for the university to blame the high school, the high school to blame the elementary school and the elementary school to blame the home for the common problem of poor English.

The remedial English courses are just in the "spirit of help", Dr. Smith said.

On the subject of screening tests for freshmen, Dr. Smith said that he would be extremely wary about keeping a student out of university because of the results of these tests. Dr. Smith said that it would be a long time until reports on pupils are received from secondary school teachers and that he had no absolute faith in psychology tests, although they can be helpful.

The screening tests would be used to advise students entering university and would be like the vocational guidance tests in high schools, he said.

Dr. Smith said that he had seen scores of boys and girls come from high school showing great promise and full of ambition. After failing a year they sometimes lose their sense of confidence and are frustrated to the sense of being scared. Dr. Smith said that they should realize that their are many more ways to heaven than by the universities.

A story carried in a Toronto paper on Saturday accused the University of Toronto of notoriously "juggling standards". Dr. Smith said that some university staff members, particularly in American colleges, felt that once they had set their standards it was up to the students to "sink or swim." This is not good enough, Dr. Smith felt, and at Toronto the staff thinks that they can help the students.

In the "post-war bulge" there was no sense in raising the question of whether students should be helped, Dr. Smith said, but now that the University is back to normal it can be considered.

The president said that he had been in three Canadian universities and that he felt the academic integrity of the professors at Toronto was second to none. Dr. Smith said that in his position as President of the University, he sat in on over 30 faculty and college councils, and that he had never seen any pulling of punches.

India A Lab Of Democracy But Needs Leaders — Smith

President Sidney Smith is back on the campus again after a 22,000-mile trip to India as a representative of the National Federation of Canadian Universities (not to be confused with the National Federation of Canadian University Students—NFCUS).

Sun-burned Dr. Smith said yesterday that there is no country in the world which is such a laboratory of democracy as India, but to make democracy work India needs trained leaders. He said that India has 30 main universities with an enrollment of 250,000 students to serve a population of nearly 300,000,000. (Canada has 70,000 university students for a population of 14,000,000.) Dr. Smith said India needs assistance from the western and commonwealth countries in training men, particularly in the field of post-graduate studies.

Dr. Smith left Toronto on Dec. 6th with Dr. G. P. Gilmour, chancellor of McMaster University. They travelled to England by boat and from there flew to India by way of Istanbul, Beirut, and Karachi. An Air India Dakota plane was placed at the disposal of the 2 Canadians and the delegates from 14 other Commonwealth universities while on a four-week tour of Indian universities.

Dr. Smith said that while India has expressed concern about the materialistic side of western influence, they feel compelled to develop scientific training and research. He explained that India wants to retain an ancient culture but also feels compelled to develop scientific research because of welfare, trade and defence needs.

There is nothing in Canada or the United States to match the development and building program in India, Dr. Smith said. Faced with the problem of training men for the professions, the Indians have built medical schools like the one at Magpur, he said. The $9,000,000 school there, Dr. Smith said, was recently built where open fields had been and includes classrooms, labs, hostels and a hospital.

He said it is not without significance that despite the travail of the present moment, they are providing money for new universities. Dr. Smith said that the federal government is financing four universities while joining with local governments in supporting numerous others. Dr. Smith was told that a first-class honors man at Madras is as well grounded as a first-class man at Oxford.

NOTICE

Out of respect for his late Majesty, King George VI, all lectures and laboratory classes will be withdrawn throughout the day and evening of Friday, February 15th, 1952. All University buildings will be closed.

A Memorial Service will be held in Convocation Hall at 5 p.m. on Thursday, February 14th, 1952.

Sidney Smith

PRESIDENT

Many westerners left Indian universities when Indian independence was declared in 1947, Dr. Smith said, and it has been a real task to find enough well trained Indians to staff the universities. However, Dr. Smith said that Indian universities have made astounding progress since 1947.

Dr. Smith found that the University of Toronto was exceptionally well-known and was amazed at the readiness and eagerness of the Indian students to come here for further studies. The contributions of the Massey Fellowships to the Indian Universities is all out of proportion to the number given to Indian students, Dr. Smith said, and he felt that these fellowships were one of the reasons why Toronto was so well-known.

Dr. Smith hopes that the number of Indian students coming to Toronto for post-graduate work can be increased, and feels that Toronto has a real responsibility to help train Indian students.

One of the questions Dr. Smith was asked while in India was if the University of Toronto has many student strikes. Dr. Smith explained that in India the students sometimes off the university when not happy.

Dr. Smith was amazed at the number of hostels for Indian students. He estimates that over 50 per cent of all India students live in these hostels which serve student residences.

He was also surprised by the number of women both studying and on the staffs of the universities as it was not many years ago that they were kept in purdah. Dr. Smith found Indian women on every faculty he visited.

The Indians have a sense of indebtedness to the "British Raj", and Dr. Simth felt that the British h: never been so popular. Dr. Smith said the Indians were grateful to the British for giving them the university pattern the structure and spirit of the civil service, and the system of administering justice.

After four weeks, traveling in "16 hops" about India, Drs. Gilmour and Smith headed back to Canada on a Quantas (Queensland, Australia and Northern Territories Air Services) plane. They arrived at Claro on the day after a fierce battle at Ishmaili between Egyptian and British forces, and were placed under armed guard while waiting at the airport for their plane to be re-fueled.

Dr. Smith arrived back on the campus Friday to face the problems of remedial English, college and faculty council meetings . . . but so far . . . no student strikes.

Call Vic's SHARE Plan Loose-jointed

Vice-president of the Victoria College Union John Devereux last night condemned the SHARE campaign held on the campus this winter as a poor and "horribly loose jointed effort." The VCU meeting discussed the campaign in general and Vic's contribution in particular.

Next year VCU vice-president will take charge of Vic's role in any future ISS campaign on the campus. This motion was proposed by SAC rep Graeme Ferguson and passed.

The Vic per capita contribution was second to the bottom, according to the interim SHARE report published last week. This is shameful, Ferguson said, especially as Vic usually takes the lead. He said that few of those concerned exerted the necessary effort. The campaign would be more successful, he pointed out, if a person were elected to an executive position of the Assembly on the understanding that he would be in charge of the campaign enabling advance planning. John Lewis, I Vic, elected at the December meeting, took charge of the Vic sector of the SHARE campaign this year.

Ferguson added that the idea of a student aid campaign for foreign students is worthwhile and will probably be continued.

A motion that the personal canvass in the men's residences be reopened was defeated by the Assembly. Lewis reported three men's residences have not turned in reports yet. The total contribution of Victoria College was $302 ($60 from men's residences).

Ferguson blamed the failure of the residence campaign on the flippant approach and lack of information about the campaign as given by the canvassers. He suggested canvassers be unified on the purpose and methods of the campaign.

The faculty has yet to be canvassed and we should make every effort, said Ferguson.

Reporting on the sale of Victoria College Christmas cards Ken Cork said that a deficit of $151 had been incurred. 500 dozen cards have not been sold as yet.

The VCU had budgeted for a 48 cent profit on the sale of each dozen cards. On the basis of this Cork moved that the profits which would have been made on the sale of Vic Christmas ards, be given to SHARE.

The motion was defeated because it seemed poor policy to donate the profits from a loss to a charity. Treasurer Bill Andrews suggested that the VCU wait until next year and give any profits from the Christmas cards to next year's charitable campaign.

Complicated Compounds Chemical Prof's Topic

A noted Dutch chemist—Professor A. E. van Arkel—will speak to the Chemical Institute of Canada (CIC) tonight on "The Stability and Structure of Complex Halides." The lecture will be at 8 p.m. in Room 1035 of the Wallberg Building.

Halides are compounds of the halogens, a group of elements which include Chlorine, Fluorine, bromine and iodine.

Prof. van Arkel is Professor of Inorganic Chemistry at the University of Leyden, Holland. His main fields of interest are the structures of inorganic compounds and the preparation of raw materials. According to one CIC official, a process which bears his name is now being used for the commercial production of titanium metal.

Three campus organizations hold student membership in the Chemical Institute of Canada. These are the Industrial Chemistry Club (Arts), and Food Chemistry Club.

At the lecture, Prof. van Arkel will discuss the different classes of binding in the complex halides.

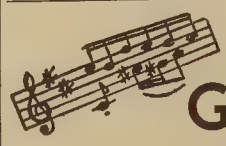
Tely's Ted Reeve Warns Columnists Need Thick Skin

Sports writers have to be opinionated, and they need thick skins, but it's still better than swinging a pick and shovel, according to Ted Reeves, Toronto Telegram. Yesterday Reeve gave the second in the series of talks on journalism sponsored by The Varsity. He was speaking on the inside view of sportswriting, particularly as the sports columnists looks at it.

Columnists are allowed more liberty than other newspaper writers, Reeve said, and particularly sports columnists, as long as they aren't "completely off their rocker." Personal opinions are a necessary part of all sports writing, he added later when questioned.

George Dulmage, assistant sports writer of the Telegram, who accompanied Reeve to give the fill-in with the technical angles, said that no one would bother reading sports stories if they were written with the same objectivity demanded of news coverage. Sports stories are necessarily coloured by opinion, Dulmage said.

Asked about the present trend to smaller gates in Toronto, Reeve said that this was partly caused by TV, and partly by the traffic situation. He said that he got discouraged bucking the evening traffic to go downtown to a game, even though he liked the game, and had free passes.



Reeve said that he felt that the lack of interest in basketball in Toronto was due to the fact that the game was "too much score, and not enough body contact", and lacks the crowd appeal of hockey.

Reeve said that he was seldom stuck for material to fill his column, because there were so many people from the old country in Toronto who are interested in the British soccer and rugby games. He added that a lot of the local interest in out-of-town game scores was due to the influence of the office pool.

People want to read about something they've seen, Reeve said, but he has found that radio and television have stimulated a lot of interest in American sports, baseball and boxing in particular.

Reeve was a coach at Queen's University in the thirties, and coached Balmy Beach in 1948. Each year he picks the All-Canadian football team for Maclean's Magazine.

Reeve's talk was the second in a series designed to acquaint staff members and others with different aspects of journalism. The first talk was given by Ken MacTaggart of the Globe and Mail. The next talk, to be held this Thursday, at one o'clock in Room 8 of University College, will be given by Wesley Hicks, a news feature writer on the Telegram.

Pianist Glenn Gould

What makes a musician "great"? Whatever it is, Glenn Gould, one of the youngest performers to attain the honor of a Hart House recital, certainly had that quality last Sunday. The concert was one of the most memorable in my four years of listening to Sunday Evening Concerts.

The performance of the Bach Partita no. 5 in G was a delight. This partita, like the rest, is a suite for piano consisting of a prelude followed by a number of formal dances, all in the same key or a very closely related one. Each of the dances is in two parts, each of which is intended to be repeated.

It's a small thing, but the fact that Gould played all the repeats gave the performance a special charm for me. The repeats recall the dance-like nature of the movements, and also represent something of the spirit of an age less hurried than ours.

Even in the most rapid of the dances, Gould's playing never degenerated into a hailstorm of notes. He lives and feels the shape of the phrases, and the distinctness of the parts. He also conveyed to the audience some of the humor of one of Bach's most joyous works—for instance the quiet little coda on the end of each section of the Allemande.

In his playing, he managed to imitate on the piano some of the characteristics of the older keyboard instruments for which the work was written. Each dance was given its "registration" in terms of tone and dynamics, and within this narrower frame, Gould achieved variety by slight and subtle gradations.

The transfer of the older virginal music of Gibbons and Swelinck to the piano was less successful. In spite of Gould's very discreet pedalling, the flamboyant ornaments and brilliant figuration of these pieces had a murky, rumbling sound on the piano. Actually these are bravura pieces for an altogether different class of instrument, and suffer considerably in transcription.

After playing two Brahms intermezzi Gould plunged into modern music—Alban Berg's Sonata in one movement, and as an encore, part of an even more drastic sonata by Krenek. Again, his feeling for phrasing and musical contour made some rather difficult music into listening pleasure.

Gould's masterly self-control make his performances the subtle things he evidently wants them to be. He gives evidence that his fingers and his mind keep pace with each other, and in the case of a musician like Gould, that means great playing. Let's be sure we have him again next year.

VIC'S CORNER

HELLO VIC: Last Friday the Social Committee respectfully withdrew their At-Home. Meetings are underway to arrange a new evening. Many awkward situations have developed in the social schedule but we hope you will give it your best support. The programs will probably have the wrong date on them, but the committee reassures us that the flowers for the ladies will be new and fresh. Handsome Duggun the SAC-kid reminds us that election time is rolling around. Keep your eyes open for keen executive types. Let's see a real race for these offices. We remind you that Thursday is Valentine's Day, so don't forget your sweetheart. Any awkward situations that the men of the college have gotten themselves into over the At-Home cancelation, will be dealt with by the Lovelorn Committee of the Social Directorate.

Congrats to the Glee Club on a tremendous festival. We were down in Convocation Hall Sunday and things really went off smoothly. The choral work of all four groups was very enjoyable. The Music Club reminds all its members once again of its At-Home in Wymilwood on Saturday, Feb. 23.

The bloody campaign is still under way and if any of you students feel that you have a bit of superfluous blood — blood donor cards are available in the V.C.U. Office. The need is really urgent. Incidentally Giggy says to remind everyone on these cold wet mornings not to forget their package of Vic's Vaporized Cough Drops.

GATHLETICS: Vic I's hockey practically assured themselves of a play-off spot by defeating St. Mike's 3-2 Friday. They play this Thursday at 12:30. The II's beat UC I's 2-1 in a sterling effort.

MATHLETICS: Sr. Vic hockey has clinched a play-off berth. Jr. Vic sparked by Jack Burnett's goaltending, 2 goals by Dunford and a single by Bond took the last playoff spot in Group 2 from Pre-Meds. The III's lost their play-off chance in a close game with Dents A's, 2 to 1. Vic Sr. Basketball continued their unbeaten streak after edging the Buttery Boys 42-39 last week.

See you in the Library.

Thursday at Three Book Pickup Time

Week-end books may be taken from the University of Toronto Library at 3 p.m. Thursday instead of Friday afternoon announced the Chief Librarian, W. S. Wallace yesterday.

Wallace made this announcement in view of the fact that all University buildings, including the library, will be closed on Friday day of mourning for the late King. Books taken out over the long week-end will be due as usual at 10 p.m. Monday morning.

"I am afraid it will be necessary to maintain a skeleton staff on Thursday evening," said Wallace. Last Friday people were coming into the library for weekend books as late as 6:30 p.m. he added. Classes and labs will be withdrawn on the day of the funeral and there will be a suspension of all activities on the campus out of respect for his late Majesty. The Varsity will not publish on that day.

Peace Aid Of Friends Talk Topic

Mr. Fred Haslem, General Secretary of the Canadian Friends (Quakers) Service Committee will speak on "The Contribution of the Society of Friends to Peace" today at 4:10 p.m. in West Hall UC. He will conclude the series sponsored by the Political Commission of the Student's Christian Movement on the "Nature and Attainment of World Peace".

An Englishman, Haslem first made contact with the Society of Friends during the World War, and served as a member of the Friends' Relief Mission in Vienna after the war. He came to Canada in 1921 where he has been active in business for twenty years. Haslem acted as Secretary of the Service Committee of Canadian Quakers since its organization in 1931.

Ticket Exchange Travel Riles Revue Enthusiasts

"Whew, it had better be a good show after all this trouble." This was the general opinion of a number of students who were affected by the All-Varsity Revue (AVR) ticket exchanges yesterday morning. Cancellation of the Wednesday, Thursday and Friday shows of the AVR has meant a rearrangement of seats to three shows on Saturday and shows on Monday and Tuesday of next week.

Between 9:50 and 10:00 a.m. yesterday morning about 14 students had lined up in front of the Hart House Theatre box office to exchange their tickets. When the box office opened at 10:00 a.m. and after they had changed their reserved tickets for the original exchange tickets, these students had to go up to the Student Administration Council (SAC) office to get new exchange tickets.

Since the SAC office did not open until 11:00 a.m. the students had to form a line in the hall of Hart House in front of the office. By the time the office opened this line stretched along the hall and down on to the inside front steps of Hart House.

But that wasn't all. After the new exchange tickets and been received these AVR "faithfuls" had to go down to the theatre box office again and get reserved tickets. Lectures were missed during these three exchanges but it seems the tickets were valued more than the lecture.

Many of the students in the line felt a better system of exchanging the tickets could have been devised. They said one exchange at the box office should have been sufficient.

Educational Shop Talk Air Theme

School won't be out until 10.05 tonight. At least the Varsity Radio Round Table will start discussing "Are We Overschooled?" on CKEY at that time. Just when the discussion will end neither Dr. W. R. Blatz, Professor of Psychology, nor any other members of the radio panel know.

"No one can get too much schooling," said Pete Turner, III Eng., one of the panel, today. "That applies particularly for those in the classics. Professional faculties may be getting too much schooling in the sense that they cover too much ground in the allotted time. Because of the place of the specialist in our present day society, this wider than necessary scope may not be a good thing."

Another speaker, Fred Walden, Grad Studies felt the question of overschooling could be settled only on an individual basis. He said there was too much formal lecturing and not enough seminars in some subjects.

John Finlay, IV Vic, the fourth participant in the Radio discussion group quoted Professor Frye's aphorism on schooling — it's too bad the age of the normal University undergraduate is also the normal age for the mating season.

Finlay is editor of Acta Victoriana and has in the past few summers worked with the Department of Fisheries. Walden is a married OVA student, graduate of UBC, who is currently working on his MA in history. Dr. Blatz is the director of the Institute of Child Studies. Turner is six feet tall.

Photo Show

More entries are needed for the Photography Exhibition in Hart House, the Camera Committee announced today. All entries must be given to the Hall Porter not later than 6 p.m. Friday, February 15. Mounted prints should be 16 by 20 inches and must be packed flat with an entry form included. The exhibition is open for all, it said.

Exhibitors will compete for the Senior A. F. Coventry Award, the Junior K. B. Jackson Cup and the Colour Award. The judges will be Professor A. F. Coventry, Mr. John L. Lawson and Mr. F. E. Moffat.

There will be a private showing of the Exhibit on Monday, February 18, at 7:45 pm for those who entered the competition, members of the club and guests, the Committee said.

Fender Folly

The Parking Plot

By RUTH RAYSON

"Parking on this side," "No Parking on this side," say signs all over the campus with the intention of discouraging motorists from parking on both sides of the roadway.

Well, mishaps will occur and some cars do park on each side of the street. So, what's the result?

A famous speaker is scheduled to speak on something or other and one of the students decides to bring his car down. It's dark out and our students is driving along at his customary clip of 40 miles per hour (in the city) safe in the knowledge that the sign says "No Parking on This Side."

He catches a fleeting glimpse of a dark shadow where there shouldn't be one, but he doesn't worry about it until he discovers that he's minus his left front fender.

Then there's the motorist who tries to squeeze past two parked cars around one of the "islands" in the front campus or in the SAC parking lot. A substantial increase in vocabulary can be made by standing and listening to the driver, especially when he finds that he can't get through the space.

The same result plus can be obtained when one driver makes a sharp left-hand turn up between two parked cars while another car is coming straight down to meet the car coming up. If both drivers have their wits about them the results should be no more serious than a few gray hairs and a stomach ulcer.

Then there are the students who come unexpectedly from both sides of the street going to and from their English lectures, darting in and out between the same parked cars, as another car comes rolling merrily up the road or around a corner. The poor driver hasn't a chance then. He'd better give up driving or get an additional pair of eyes.

All of which goes to prove that there's one hell of a parking problem on the University of Toronto Campus.

Hart House roof might solve the problem beautifully. Long twisting driveways stretching every which way from Hoskin and the front campus up to the roof might give the University the appearance of being something out of the future but with a little bit of ice on them they'd make enticing slides during the winter.

Dodging cars going up and down might be a little nerve-wracking to the drivers at first, but after the first hundred or so accidents, it should become second nature to the student drivers.

And who knows, when the University isn't being used by the students during the summer, it might become a second Indianapolis speedway!

Thomas

Thomas L. Thomas is a singer whose frank purpose is to delight the audience with his attractive personality. To this end, he selected last Thursday and Saturday for performance in Eaton Auditorium a program consisting entirely of pieces suited to his easy-going manner.

The fact that some of the music he performed was also musically worthwhile troubled neither him nor his audience. His program included some very fine music by little-known composers, but not, apparently as a result of Mr. Thomas' musical erudition, but simply because his search for pleasant, melodious songs has carried him far afield.

In his Italian group, Mr. Thomas included a beautiful song by Salvatore Rosa. In the French group, there was a song by the little-known operatic composer, Mehul, and also a seldom-heard one from Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust". But side by side with some things of real musical merit was a good deal of rather over-ripe trash.

Mr. Thomas' voice is a well-cultivated baritone. He has none of the unpleasant boom nor any of the excessive vibrato sometimes heard in Italian-trained singers. On the other hand, he has as agile a tongue as any Italian. With this equipment he is able to make a very personal appeal to the listener.

Musically the best group was a set of four Welsh folk-songs, sung in the original tongue. Mr. Thomas sang them with warmth and proper simplicity, and without undue sentiment. His clear enunciation of the strange language gave these songs an added interest.

For encores, Mr. Thomas sang a number of admittedly silly songs, in which he displayed to an astonishing degree the rapidity and clarity of his enunciation. One should not censure him, either for the program or for the encores. This sort of thing has its place, and Mr. Thomas seems to know enough to keep it there.

There are two things that Hollywood can do extremely well. These are musicals and westerns. We haven't had a good musical in quite a while, with the exception of the ambitious AN AMERICAN IN PARIS. Westerns have been much more frequent and some have been rewarding, but they have tended to follow a new cycle of "different" westerns.

This week, however, a real slam-bang old-fashioned western is playing in town. It is BEND OF THE RIVER (Loew's Uptown) and it is a real treat. You should get right into the spirit of things, and find it exciting stuff.

Unlike most old-fashioned westerns though, BEND OF THE RIVER has a solid story and a script brightened with nice bits of humor. Jimmy Stewart is his western self here. Laconic and tough ("fastest man on the draw ever saw"), a former Missouri border raider, Stewart is trying to go straight by helping a group of settlers make a new home in the Columbia River valley in the Pacific Northwest. The muted Technicolor makes the most of the beauty of the Oregon scenery.

Indians are a little trouble, but they are disposed of in hand-to-hand nightfighting. It is the greed for gold that brings villainy into full flower and turns the little Portland, Oregon into a den of evil. Trying to get overdue supplies for the mountainbound settlement, Stewart and Co. run into all kinds of trouble in Portland and on the flight back.

Another ex-badman, Arthur Kennedy, who was rescued earlier by Stewart, is first friend then later enemy of the hero. But before Stewart disposes of him, there are various miscellaneous villains, second class, you understand, who clutter up the way. The elimination of all the bad fellows, while trying to get the supplies to the camp the hard way over the mountains before the snows, make up an exciting movie. Imaginative camera work contributes handsomely to the beauty and excitement.

The womenfolk; there is one for Stewart eventually, and another for handsome young gambler (but good guy) Rock Hudson, are more or less kept in their place and watch the goings-on. It is Stewart and Kennedy who bear the burden of the film, and both are very satisfying.

Arthur Kennedy is the competent actor whose work in BRIGHT VICTORY has netted him new recognition. As chief villain, Kennedy hams his way with nasty laughs and dangerous snarls. Jimmy Stewart forgets most of the time that he is Mr. Smith in Washington and convinces everyone he is a tough guy, lank and lean and deadly.

A short, THE ROARING GAME, is included in the Loew's Uptown program. Made in Canada by Gordon Sparling, it is a non-National Film Board deal. The Roaring Game is curling, and the short does an effective and interesting bit of explaining how and why the game is so popular in Canada, especially in the prairies. This short is definite proof that the National Film Board hasn't a monoply on good Canadian-made films.

This is a profitable movie week. QUO VADIS, the colossus of film epics, opens tomorrow at Loew's. DEATH OF A SALESMAN has started its run at the Eglinton, Famous Players entry in the art house field. And Robert Rossen's THE BRAVE BULLS which closed hurriedly at the Towne Cinema after violent protests from animal-lovers is billed with a fair European import, FOUR IN A JEEP, at the Midtown, Circle, etc., theatres.

A showing of prints is not movie fare, but the present print selection in the Hart House Art Gallery is worth a mention. Starting with Cezanne and ending up with Picasso's terrifying Guernica, the show tells of the development of "modern" art and tries to explain in detailed text why moderrr painters take life apart and put it together again differently. Some of the Paul Klees and Bracques are great fun. The text is by Assistant Warden Dave Gardner and he deserves a very big hand.

Great Cartoon Collection In "Bill Mauldin's Army" Sketches Irony Of War

BILL MAULDIN'S ARMY, by Bill Mauldin, George J. McLeod Ltd., 1951, pp 384, (439 cartoons), $6.75.

Beside your favorite easy chair, or, an end table or something as handy, you should keep Bill Mauldin's Army, to delve into when the mood strikes. This is a magnificent collection of the war cartoons which have left a vital imprint on the thinking of our generation. The only difficulty in keeping this book in a strategic place is that your mother, sister, wife or mistress, whoever does the housecleaning, will probably spirit it away somewhere. Not in the interests of neatness, as may happen to your pipe or newest magazine, but to pore over herself.

Bill Mauldin's skill as a cartoonist is commonplace today. As the greatest World War II cartoonist, his influence has been as great on his contemporaries as was the effect of World War I cartoonists like Bruce Bairnsfather on their generation. And as the mood of the wars differed, Mauldin's realistic bite differs from Bairnsfather's "Better 'Ole" humor.

Since Up Front surged into the best-seller class in 1945, Mauldin's often blunt and sometimes subtle comments on men in war are familiar parts of the American culture. Bill Mauldin's Army is a compilation of 439 published and unpublished (in book form) cartoons which deal with army life. Beginning with training camp comments (some of which illustrated the book, News of the 45th, about the service paper in which his cartoons first appeared), the core of the book is made of the tremendous overseas cartoons (the meat of which were in Up Front). A few of the opening cartoons about discharge from Back Home complete Bill Mauldin's Army.

Unlike previous Mauldin works, there is not text, beyond the cartoon captions. In some ways, I feel this is a weakness, since Up Front's pungency was enhanced by the simple Mauldin etching-in of the context of the cartoons, and Back Home's strength lay in its angry prose than its hastily-done cartoons. But then today, nearly seven years after the war's end, Mauldin's cartoons have become WW2 cliches, so perhaps the lack of prose is not a serious handicap.

It has been said that Mauldin's cartoons would not find the same popularity among the dogfaces in the Korean peninsula. (This has been said by someone in the United States, not by dogfaces in Korea.) This argument may be based on the fact that Korean war is fought on a different ideological framework. Or it may even be based on a fallacious belief that the new war has brought about a different relationship in the army and a washing-out of the reasons for gripes among the lowly frontline men. Even if these facts were true, they would not diminish the meaningfulness of what Mauldin has to say in his cartoons even today.

Bill Mauldin's cartoons are not anachronisms; it is still the same war. Or rather, war is the same thing so far as human values are concerned. And, that is what Bill Mauldin tried to say in these hard-hitting often bitter but never disillusioned cartoons. (It is true, of course, that men fighting in Korea have an additional difficulty. Unlike the battle against the Fascist states, the new war does not have clearly-defined purposes that men can understand. But in the front-lines, to most soldiers, survival is the password, not a fight for the Four Freedoms or against Soviet dictatorship.)

Because war is damaging to human values and standards, whether in 1915, in 1943 or in 1952, a persual of Mauldin's cartoons seems vital today in a world of disunited nations. We are not hopelessly lost in an abyss of atomic chaos yet. But if we come to the day when protest against what war does to the saner human ideals is outworn, then that abyss will be our own crowded universal hell.

Single Woman Typed

THE STEREOTYPE OF THE SINGLE WOMAN IN AMERICAN NOVELS by Dorothy Yost Deegan, Columbia University, 1951.

Although the Stereotype of the Single Woman in American Novels is interested primarily in bringing attention to the discrepancy between the "actual contribution which single women have made to American society and the composite portrait of them in American fiction," this book also succeeds in bringing to light the problems which face women generally since their belated emancipation in the first two decades of this century. Mrs. Deegan has combined an intense study of the single woman as portrayed in seven American novels of the past hundred years with the results of current surveys on the life and times of the unmarried American female. The stereotype created by Hepzibah Pyncheon (House of Seven Gables) Jennie Gerhardt, Mattie Silver (Ethan Frome) Margot Ferguson of Ruth Suckow's The Folks, Meta Beggs of Hergesheimer's Mountain Blood, the Sawyer girls of Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm and Rachel Innes of Mary Roberts Rinehart's The Circular Staircase has remained with us and we still find shades of her in Kitty Foyle. Mrs. Deegan is looking for a new novel which will depict a successful, happy, unmarried woman—something she failed to encounter in her researches into American Fiction.

A new stereotype of this sort is needed, Mrs. Deegan feels, to provide an antidote to the accepted romantic idea of the marriage relationship and dispell the unfortunate psychological effect that the spinster stereotype has on our attitude toward single women.

Society should educate women to face the possibility of singleness and not promise them all they were married and lived happily ever afterward' ideal when it is not a possibility for everyone. The Stereotype of the Single Woman in American Novels is one book in a series dealing with the problems of women in modern society and takes a step in the right direction in attempting to change the popular attitude owards unmarried women.

Hopalong Satirizes Literature

HOPALONG-FREUD AND OTHER MODERN LITERARY CHARACTERS by Ira Wallach, Thos. Nelson, 1951, $3.25.

The title of this book is inviting and bookophiles who pursue the matter further will not be disappointed. Ira Wallach has managed to create a good hour of entertainment with his short but pungent take-offs on current literature.

Hemingway, Lin Yutang, T. S. Eliot, Truman Capote and Velikovsky are all skilfully satirized in separate chapters.

This reviewer found the take-off on Hemingway, "Out of the Frying Pan and into the Soup" the most sustained of all the contributions. Wallach is merciless when he satirizes popular books which recommend a 'new way of life' whether it be Hubbard's Dianetics, Chinese Philosophy or Merton's retreat to a medieval way of living.

Included too in the repertoire is the all-too-familiar "Case History" entitled 'Relation of Father Image to Persecution Syndrome in Typical Industrial Patient', is complete with foot-notes substantiating the wild psychological interpretations given the case under consideration. English students will get a kick out of Wallach's take-off on the 'New Criticism'. All in all, Hopalong Freud is good fun and recommended for lunch-room reading.

Twiss' "Long, Long Trailer" Tells Of Trip Through States

THE LONG, LONG TRAILER—by Clinton Twiss, Embassador, 1951, $3.75.

The Long, Long Trailer by Clinton Twiss is the net result of one year's travelling (originally intended to be two) through a large part of the United States in a long trailer officially christened Moby Dick, but better known by its nickname The Monster.

A pleasantly garbled mixture of humor, wit and travel, Twiss's book provides four or five hours (depending on how fast you read) of amusement and a refreshing change from city life to the ever-changing scenery of the 48 states and the life of the trailer camps where a new locality always means new neighbours, new experiences.

The whole thing started when the Twisses, Mr. and Mrs., decided to take their first vacation in ten years, a long vacation, "one mad fling" that would make up for all the vacations they hadn't had.

They liquidated most of their belongings, Twiss left his television work and they set up a budget to sort of control things—see that they didn't go overboard in their spending—a budget that began to go up in smoke right from the beginning when they paid twice as much for the trailer as they had expected to.

Loading the trailer was a feat in itself. Things packed away first had a habit of popping out again into the trailer to make place for things yet to come. In short, the trailer was a MESS. They finally managed to get things stowed away and then the fun began.

A farewell cocktail party for their friends took on the resemblance of a night spent in a boat loaded with chinaware in the middle of a storm.

The first stop of The Monster was with Merle Twiss's family where the author had the unpleasant job of backing up the trailer into the driveway beside the house. There's something special about backing up a trailer. Experienced trailerites had only "shaken their heads sadly" when the author had questioned them about this delicate subject. Live and learn was their attitude and the sooner the better.

The casualties of his first attempt were: one lawn, one tree, one house and a variety of tempers. This necessitated a practice session on the Mojave Desert doing manoeuvres with The Monster that turned into a roadside performance for passersby.

Whitebird Hill was another obstacle that had to be traversed by The Monster. A mountain, the author learned after crossing it, that was avoided by trailers like the plague.

The meeting with the Culpeppers and their fuchsia car and trailer came under the heading of "Experiences not to be repeated." The Culpeppers subsisted entirely on anchovies, crackers, sharp cheese, burbon, Scotch and beer. A three day diet of this was enough to make the Twisses swear off everything for life except the last three items, and the only opportunity for the author to get his teeth into a steak was muffed when he spent the whole lunch hour filling 14 parking meters with change to accommodate the two trailers.

Various other amusing incidents marked the Twisses' journey through the States, like going to Mexico just to turn The Monster around in the opposite direction, Merle trying to prepare dinner in a violently lurching trailer, and at a clam bake at one of the trailer camps, the incident of one of the trailerite's son getting himself wedged into the opening of Bendix washer.

The budget finally put an end to these shenanigans and the Twiss family finally had to return home. Result: one book entitled The Long, Trailer, and preparations for another trip.

Anybody know where there's a trailer for sale cheap?

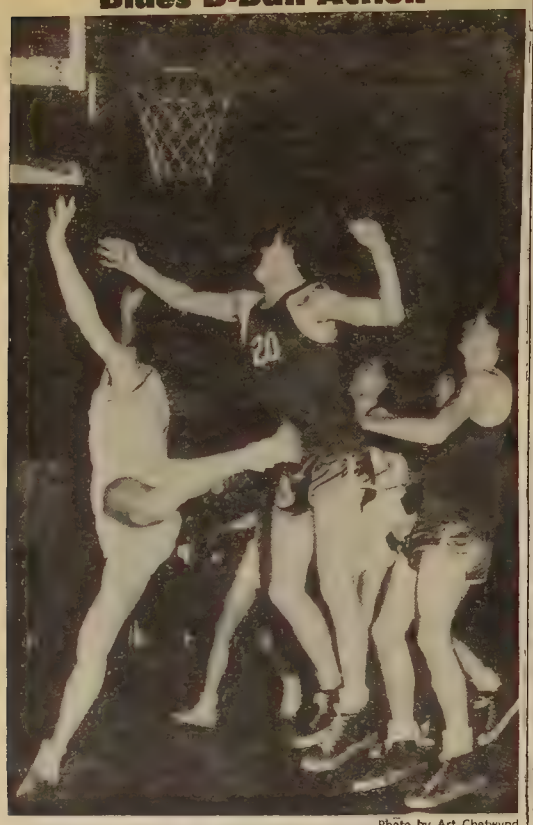
BOOK REVIEW EDITOR

The first issue of the Trinity Review for 1952 is largely devoted to commemorating the Festival Year. Excerpts from Salterrae provide glimpses of College activities during the fall term and the Editorial is taken up with reminding all good Trinity students of their heritage and responsibility to the future. One-fifth of the issue is given over to the usual Births, Marriages, Deaths and Graduates. Finally, two pages provide blank forms for ordering a forthcoming history of the College.

Following fast upon all this data comes an article by Provost Seeley on The Universities and The Free Society and a scholarly piece by F. H. Cosgrave on The Book of Kells (evidently Trinity was presented with the only copy of this work in Canada). A few poems are sprinkled throughout and an unexpected flash of entertainment breaks through in Jean Ferris' Survey of English Literature.

All of which leaves us with very little to say from a literary standpoint except that we thought John Grube's poem one of the best published in any College Magazine during our term of office and we'd like to quote it in full:



DECLINE

Purged!
A portly gentleman in gold-rimmed spectacles trickling blood
stooping, with difficulty, to pick up his morning (paper)

and tucking the napkin in at the neck gently bashes in the skull of his egg and contemplates the buttered toast like baby.

So many doctors, Heidelberg and Berlin.
Neuro-surgeons and Chinese porcelain;
I love my crystal and even these stubby fingers
can pound out a cantata of Mozart.
The headlines dance before my eyes like tangled veins, veins or a calligraphy of spiders.

Blues B-Ball Action

Kofmel Sets New Record Wins Interfac 440 In 53.6

Eric Kofmel, SPS' one-man track team, shaved one-tenth of a second off the record for the Interfaculty 440 yesterday. He followed Jack Warga of OCE for two laps, finally turned it on and passed Warga with about 120 to go with a burst of speed. His time was 53.6 seconds.

Kofmel jointly held the old record of 53.7, which he tied last year. Warga's time was 54.3.

Doug Wilson, also OCE, won the other fast heat, taking the lead from Jim Bassingthwaite at the start, and leaving just enough to finish in 55.6. Doug McEnteer was fourth with 56.3

SPS made it nearly a clean sweep in the standing broad jump taking first, second, and third. Freeman won with a leap of 9' 1¼", followed by Blue diver Hugh Sutherland with 9' ½". Kofmel added to his day's accomplishments to place third in this with 8' 8½". Doug Wilson came fourth with 8' 7½".

SPS is now well ahead of the pack in the race for the team championship, with 42 points. Kofmel has gotten 26 of these himself with four firsts, a second, a third and a fourth.

A three-quarter mile race, run as a trial during the course of events, was won by Chuck Wortman in 3 minutes 21.6 seconds, with Mac Crawford about 12 or 14 yards back to finish in 3:3.4. George Webster was third and George McMullen fourth. It was not an interfaculty event.

Results:

440—1, Kofmel, SPS; 2, Warga, OCE; 3, Wilson, OCE; 4, McEnteer, UC. Time—53.6.

Standing broad jump—1, Freeman, SPS; 2, Sutherland, SPS; 3, Kofmel, SPS; 4, Wilson, OCE. Distance—9' 1¼".

Buffalo Visits Coming A-Nite

After several week's absence, the Athletic Night returns this Saturday. With two sets of intramural finals, Intercollegiate basketball and swimming this A-Nite will be another varied program.

The Basketball Blues take on Buffalo State in one of the intercollegiate events. The Blues are undefeated at home and will be out to maintain their record. However, their opposition is of very good quality and this should make for excitement.

In Hart House pool the swimming team will face Wayne University. The swimmers have a very good record this season winning both of their last two efforts at Buffalo. However, in their first appearance at Hart House they dropped the last event to lose the meet.

In the interfaculty wrestling finals, most of the winners will probably be the intercollegiate competitors. Except for Orie Loucks who is away with his course and Robinson, Hatashita, and Goldenberg who are ineligible the Blues will be out in full force to contest start on Wednesday with the final Friday.

With the intercollegiate championships coming upon February 23 at Hart House the wrestlers will be trying to impress mentor Kirk Wipper for the big event.

Immediately after the intercollegiate swimming and senior interfaculty championships will take place. Probably most of the junior winners will be out to give the old boys some competition.

HOCKEY

UC rolled up a 4-0 score against POT yesterday in a B league game.

Mary McDerment, captain of the UC-ers, netted the first goal. The second period saw the POT girls move into the UC zone on repeated breakaways, but attempts to score were foiled by UC goalie Judy Carew. Daphne Walker slapped the puck into the corner to give her team a 2-0 lead; then cashed in on a POT penalty with two nice tallies. Molly Bark and Breta Fredrickson sparked the POT line-up, and Anne Innis, defenceman, with Daphne Walker, chief goal-getter, spearheaded the UC attack for the afternoon.

VOLLEYBALL

In the first volleyball game last evening, St. Hilda's II's downed Vic II's by the first score of 40-36. St. Hilda's gained an early lead in the non-rotation first half.

For the Saints, Daphne Cross, Joan Loosely and Anne Pepall played well, while Joyce Goudie, Joan Graham and Carolyn Smith shone for Vic.

The second game of the evening showed Vic I lose to St. Hilda's I by a score of 42-20. Vic started off well and even had the Saints worried for a while until St. Hilda's spiking line began to show. Nancy Allen showed good team play throughout and so did Elaine Hunt and Doreen Tolland for the St. Hilda's team.

Trinity Open Playoffs, Win Over Dents B

Trinity B started off the playoffs for the Jennings Trophy, emblematic of intramural hockey supremacy, yesterday when they walloped Dents B to the tune of a 6-3 score. The B team from Trinity was the winner in Group 4 and was matched with Dents B who had finished atop Group 8 in a sudden-death elimination.

Malcolm led the Buttery Boys to their do-or-die victory with a hat trick. Ross garnered a pair and Bell backed this up with a goal and an assist to complete the scoring. Murdock worked hard in a losing cause, netting a couple of goals for the dentists. Hustling Kinoshita got the third.

The only penalty of the contest went to Gilbert of Dents who was assessed two minutes for holding the puck.

Having passed this hurdle, the Trinity seconds will be idle for a week as they are scheduled on the 19th to face Senior Vic who, having finished first in Group 1, receive a bye into the quarter finals.

Sportshoes

Vic Seniors continued their winning ways in major league basketball as they trounced UC III 48-30 yesterday. The Vicsters were never behind as they walked away from the winless Redmen.

Jim Goodfellow hooped 11 points in a very good performance. Goodfellow has been scoring consistently lately. Frank Patterson also scored 11 points in a losing effort as UC tried to register their first win.

In two minor league games Eng Bus walloped Vic Ninths 34-8 and PHE paster Vic Smoothies 36-16. Roberto hooped 16 for the engineers in a good effort.

Minor league basketball was the only interfaculty action that was not covered separately yesterday. With only two major league basketball games and interfaculty hockey playoffs starting, sports are at a low ebb.

Engineering Business III walloped Vic Ninths in one of the minor league games. The Eng-Bis Boys won, 34-8. Roberto hooped 16 and Johnson hooped 11 to spark the engineers to the win.

PHE C also came up with a one-sided win swamping Vic Smoothies 36-16.

Weekend Ice Twin Bill Puck Blues Meet Laval

The latest report from the Athletic Office concerning the hockey situation is that the Blues will play Laval in a doubleheader this week-end. The first game will commence at 2 p.m. on Saturday afternoon and the second will be played Monday night starting at 7 p.m.

These games will be played in place of last Friday's scheduled games here which were both cancelled due to the death of the King. Monday night's contest will be part of a doubleheader, with a prep-school game between U.T.S. and U.C.C. to follow at 9 p.m. Varsity students will be able to see both games for the same price of admission—one A.T.L. card.

Meanwhile the Blues are buckling down to some serious practices. In order to remain in a contending position the locals will have to secure at least three of the four points at stake.

Paul Prendergast is the only casualty at the present time but is expected back in time for Saturday's game. He has been sidelined since last Wednesday with a severe throat infection. Pete Vernon's injured shoulder has responded to treatment with the result that he will take up his regular position alongside of Norm Fox and Al Conboy.

Laval at present holds a four-point advantage over the Blues in the league standing and have played two more games than the Blues. Laval also is the only team that the Blues haven't beaten so far. Varsity has dropped two decisions to the Blues and Gold of Laval, by scores of 4-3 and 6-3, in Quebec City.

Schedules Revised After King's Death

Last Saturday's Athletic Night has been rescheduled for March 1. The events featuring Queen's vs. Toronto in basketball have been all satisfactorily arranged with the opposition.

The boxing tournament to be held at Queen's this weekend has been postponed until February 29, March 1. Toronto University will protest this decision because most of the team being engineers will be writing exams at this time.

on the sideline

By CAROL LOGAN

The Intercollegiate Women's Sports schedule is beginning to find its feet again after the cancellation upsets this week. The doubleheader basketball meet with McMaster, slated originally for tonight, has been re-arranged for Monday, February 18th. The Intermediates' game with Humberside Collegiate, which was to be played last night at OCE gym, has not yet been rescheduled, but meets with local teams are more easily arranged, so this event will probably come off soon.

The Intercollegiate Badminton horizon isn't so bright. The meet scheduled for Thursday and Friday at McGill was washed off the slate along with all other Intercoll. events. But the badminton officials are having quite a time trying to settle on a new date. The McGill courts aren't available until 7th and 8th of March. Queen's, McMaster and OAC have a ruling which forbids Intercollegiate events after March 1st, and the Varsity squad is not very eager to participate at such a late date. The only other possibility would be an off-campus meet.

Which all goes to prove that Robbie Burns was quite cofrect. The best laid plans of mice and badminton players do go astray, and this tournament certainly was well planned. McGill had arranged for a big banquet for the visiting players on Friday night, to be followed by an escorted view of the McGill Winter Carnival. Could have been terrific.

Whenever the meet is held, the Varsity quartet will be in top form. Three of the members have been keeping their wrists limbered up in the T and D tourney at the Badminton and Racquet Club, over the week-end. Anne Greey reached the singles finals, and the U of T team coach, Joan Warren, won the doubles event. Daphne Walker and Liz Russell also played. The fourth player, Daphne Cross did not compete.

"Son, about 90 per cent of all the nickel used in the world comes from Canada. The Inco nickel mines and smelters are the biggest in the world. They are near Sudbury, Ontario. Some of the mines are nearly a mile deep. Altogether there are over 280 miles of underground tunnels."

SHARE: What Now?

Weird and wonderful are many of the statements and accusations that have come from the lips of the University College Literary and Athletic Society, sometimes with a grain of truth in them, sometimes not.

The latest charge is against the committee for Student Help to Asian Relief and Education, for the method in which its campaign was conducted. It seems strange that such criticism should come from the UC Lit, when University College ranked thirteenth out of seventeen contributing faculties and colleges.

In principle, the Lit supports the SHARE campaign. In practice, the College it represents does not lend the financial support which is the life blood of the campaign.

The Lit deplores that only about $1,000 of the $6,000 raised to date for SHARE will go to Asian relief. The rest of the money is swallowed up in commitments to ISS and campaign costs.

The point now is that any money raised from here on in will go almost entirely to Asia, since sufficient has already been raised to pay off the commitments. The stress now should be on what can be done in the future to raise more money. We suggest more events. A jazz concert and swimming meet for SHARE have been scheduled for the near future. But that, we think, is not enough.

Canvassing is now being conducted of outside resources and University staff. Even if this makes up the additional $5,000 needed to reach the objective, which is doubtful, money raised by special events will not be unwelcome. A campaign never suffered by going over the top.

A letter on this page defends the SHARE committee for its campaign methods. In doing so, its writer gets involved in some statements that call for an answer.

It accuses The Varsity of "periodic attacks on campaign mismanagement." Our criticism was at first based on the method which the SHARE committee originally proposed—a personal canvass. This appeared to us vastly inadequate, and the experience of the campaign verifies it. We still believe that special events are the best way to raise money for such a cause, and urge their continuance.

We also criticized the plan of conducting a campaign of only one week duration—especially at a time so soon after the Christmas vacation. At this time, students are not very wealthy. Nor did the proposed date for the one-week collection allow enough time after Christmas for a crescendo of publicity to be built up.

It is charged that the very integrity and honesty of this year's campaign managers were being questioned when we asked the questions, "What happened to AVA's money?" and "Why no SHARE financial report yet?"

The first question was asked because when students have given money to one campaign, it is only natural that they would want to know how it was received before they contribute to a second whose main point of difference was its name.

The second question was asked because, although the campaign had been officially over for two weeks, there had so far been no inkling of its success. One of the best stimuli to interest in a campaign is a gentle reminder of its progress. The Toronto General Hospital drive for funds kept its contributors constantly informed, and that campaign went far over the top.

Although we wonder at criticism of the SHARE campaign methods coming from the UC Lit, we agree with them that there is room for improvement.

But the SHARE campaign is not over yet.

Comment

It is gratifying to see that the All-Varsity Revue has mastered its difficulties, and that the show will go on after all . . . An ad in Friday's Varsity announced an Engineering Society movie entitled "Refreshment Through the Years". Large letters at the bottom of the ad invited "Bring your own lunch." Apparently the sponsors of the movie missed the obvious publicity angle.

Research Ho!

This is the final article in a series by Michael Humphries, IV Psychology, who attempts to show that scientific research is essential to society but is discouraged by poor pay and inadequate stimulus.

To conclude this series the author would like to reiterate the plea that should be voiced through every possible channel of communication. "We want research, we want research, we want research!" Without exaggeration the well-being of society is determined largely by the amount and quality of research it is able to support. Research has become a natural resource we cannot do without. In the future whatever improvement we may obtain in the social conditions of life will be a function of the degree to which society encourages research in the social sciences. Unless we do more work than we are now, in the area of interpersonal relationships, the proposed solutions to social ills will be little more than plaintive pleas, vague promises, and the endless flow of meaningless words, words, words!

Like the development of all natural resources, research costs money, but the original investment has to be made before returns can be expected. Most people recognize the necessity for research, but unless it can be shown that the particular program submitted is of immediate value, the usual response obtained is merely a nice flow of appropriate noises. The benefits accruing from long-term basic research have been appreciated by the larger companies and by certain national organizations, but the amount of money available for the social sciences has never been much more than what is required to train a handful of workers. Unless amounts comparable to those given to the physical sciences are made available to the social scientists, the great gap between the social and the physical development of civilization will continue to grow.

One of the reasons for a lack of research in the social sciences is the salary paid to these workers. Why it is that the research worker must be so poorly paid is beyond me! Perhaps it is considered that he, like the artist, works best on an empty stomach. Both the artist and the scientist disagree with this opinion, but it does not seem to make any difference. If this is how society values the work of the researcher, no wonder students stay away in droves. This attitude on the part of society ensures, however that only those will be attracted who are more devoted to their work than they are to their stomach or to their health. This method of selection, although guaranteeing that we get no chaff, throws out more wheat than we are able to retain.

One element that may compensate for the public apathy is the pleasure and exhilaration which come from direct contact with research. But this is denied the student in most cases. How can he possibly tell whether or not he would enjoy research if he has never tasted the fruits of it. The university system so overloads the student with the dead wisdom of the past that he is totally unable to absorb the wisdom of his own age. He never gets the opportunity to develop the modern skills or to use them in creative research of his own. Those who are demanding that students should develop individual thinking should give the method of research a critical evaluation. It may be that by permitting more research and by decreasing the emphasis on the ability to regurgitate the lifeless material of the past, this quality of mind should be developed.

Another factor working against the production of efficient research workers is the absence of stimulation provided by many university professors. Too many of these instructors are themselves victims of years of fruitless struggle against public apathy. After long periods of trying to stimulate public interest in research, they have been saddled with oppressively large teaching duties and have retreated into the realms of musty rhetoric. They are casualties whose one complaint is that they were wounded before they got into action. How can they possibly convey to students the enthusiasm necessary to offset the forces that make research such a thankless task?

What is the solution? In the first place, we should encourage the powers that be to spend more money on basic research, and on the training of those people who show interest and ability. Secondly, to provide students with the opportunity to show their interest and ability, we should modify the university system to decrease the time needed to learn material that can be obtained from any good reference library, so that considerably more emphasis could be given to individual research. Thirdly, each department should contain several competent individuals whose main function would be to do research and to encourage students to do the same. Many graduate schools in Europe and America use this system. Would it not be possible to encourage the same type of system at the undergraduate level?

Only by this type of intensive investment in the future can we develop, to its full power, the modern natural resources on which our future rests. If we fail to make this investment, the loss will be ours and the damage irrevocable.

OUR READERS WRITE

A Pat on the Back

Editor, The Varsity:

So last Tuesday the UC Lit. decided to "—approve the aims and objectives of SHARE, but deplore the means by which the campaign was conducted." This is not the first slap against SHARE. The Varsity has printed periodic attacks on campaign mismanagement. The very name SHARE has been criticized. Even the personal honesty of the committee has been questioned, not directly, but by implications of "What happened to AVA's money?" and "Why no SHARE financial report yet?" Dishonesty and malpractice should be exposed when they occur, but sincere efforts should be encouraged. In fact, the SHARE campaign was one of the best conducted I have known.

As regards AVA, I have the personal assurance of the National Chairman of ISS, Dr. John Coleman of the Mathematics Department, that all AVA receipts were used honestly and with commendable efficiency. He examined all correspondence and financial statements bearing on this, including the letters of acknowledgment of receipts of our gifts by the Asian Universities.

I am not on the SHARE committee, but know some of the members personally. They are all students. They are honest and capable as any to be found. Like you and me, they were short of time and now some will probably get lower exam marks because of SHARE work. Perhaps they made some mistakes. Who doesn't? But as an interested bystander, I have seen no serious mistakes, and certainly no intentional default of duty. At first no booth was set up in the UC front hall. This was the UC Lit's own responsibility and was soon rectified. The interim report to the EAC published in last Wednesday's Varsity shows that the person to person canvass was as successful as any held on a large Canadian campus. Universities like Acadia, however, still put us to shame by their per capita giving.

Raising money on this campus is difficult. Those who have tried call it "the cut-throat scramble for a dollar." The members of SHARE undertook to collect money merely because the cause was necessary and right. Probably their job was harder because they weren't selling anything; they asked for donations when the donor received nothing but satisfaction. Yet they collected more money from the campus than did AVA, and still have outside businesses, etc., to canvass. This with somewhat reduced enrolment and less enthusiastic publicity than AVA. They have and will continue to work hard and long. This University owes them not the UC Lit's motion, not unfavourable student conversation and adversely, capably, and successfully — of thanks for a job done earnestly, capably, and successfully.

A Co-op Bookstore?

Editor, The Varsity:

There are many instances when centralization offers advantages. There are also many when it does not. The University Book Store is an example of the disadvantages offered to a large group of students, especially those in the professional faculties. A large percentage of the text-books used by them are published by three or four large US publishing houses. Thus, an engineering text book store, say, would deal with few publishers.

Secondly, due to closer intra-faculty liaison, lecturers could be asked to submit a list of prescribed texts during the first week of lectures. The students could decide whether they wanted to buy any and leave a deposit with their order. No overstocking would occur. An order could be placed and presumably the texts would be in the students' hands in four or five weeks. Later orders would be filled with a longer expected delivery period.

Thirdly it would not be possible to offer discounts "directly", as attempts have resulted in publishers banning their publications from sale at the bookstore. But, in order to compensate the student for the period of waiting, it would be possible to establish the rather well-known ruse for overcoming this difficulty, that is, to set up a CO-OPERATIVE BOOKSTORE.

To review the operation of the co-operative enterprise briefly: It is owned by the students who pay the staff, costs, etc., from the profits, and declare dividends at the end of each scholastic year. Dividends are in the form of a percentage of your total purchases. Thus by presenting your purchase tickets the next year you are entitled to purchase, (not cash) to the extent of your dividend.

This elminates the beefs of the publishers, since the full price is charged at the time of purchase.

Since many universities in North America have similar co-operatives, information could easily be obtained from them.

Lastly, an idea of the saving involved can be gathered from the fact that Cole's Bookstore was able to offer a 20% discount on new texts.

I realize fully the implication that the Bookstore would be more than it usually does, but there is no reason for the professional faculties to pay higher prices for books as well as higher fees.

It has been rumored around the campus that Remedial English may be extended to include some of the professional faculties. Projecting into the future, a Varsity staff photographer has pictured an Engineer at work on his basic English. He is using the text "Learning to Write." One of the books in his small library is "Bird-watching for the Beginner."

Committee Set Up, Plan Radio Station To Start By Fall

Yesterday afternoon in UC a group of twenty-five people met to plan for a radio station for U of T by next fall. The group was called together by Jack Tinker, I Law. Tinker said that he wanted to see Toronto University get a radio station and he felt that something concrete could be achieved by the enthusiastic group that had assembled.

The group divided into three committees. These committees will handle separate tasks: technical, programming and administration. The main group of students there (about fifteen) were interested in the program end of the station set-up.

Tinker spoke to the meeting first. He stressed the wide variety of problems and the necessity for separate groups to deal with the varied problems. Under the technical heading came such matters as antennae, equipment, blanket area, fringe area, and cost of technical radio materials.

Programming worries would include such details as length of operation and time, source of listeners, special events, training announcers, and securing writers and producers.

The administrative group would have to find a source for money, get a band on the air, and convince the necessary authorities that a radio station for Toronto is not only good but vital.

Tinker emphasized that all these problems would be interwoven and frequent meetings between the various committees would be necessary. The students planned to meet and give interim reports within two weeks time.

Bruce Dunlop, I Law, who has come to Toronto from Queen's, spoke at the meeting. Dunlop will take charge of the program committee. He mentioned that Queen's has had a non-commercial station for many years. Their station on an AM-band runs as many as three nights a week from 6:30 until midnight. Dunlop said that he saw no reason why Varisty couldn't have a similar station without too much trouble.

After a discussion the group agreed that the only satisfactory station would be an AM station. Space on the radio band could be found near CKEY at the lower end said Tinker. Harry Giles who has helped out at Ryerson commented that some technical equipment could be procured from Ryerson when a definite plan had been laid out.

This is the first concrete attempt to give Toronto University a radio station. For many years students have advocated in letters to the editors and articles the possibilities but not until this year was anything done about it. The action started this year when two students Bill Crichton and Doug Butt wrote to The Varsity and continued to press for a University station.

Wesley Hicks To Speak On Art of Feature

Wesley Hicks, feature writer for The Evening Telegram, will present the third in a series of Varsity-sponsored lectures on journalism this Thursday at 1:00 p.m. in Rm. 8, University College. The lecture is open to the student body.

Hicks will speak on feature writing, a field in which he has had practical experience for several years.

Other lecturers in the series have been Ken MacTaggart of The Globe and Mail, who spoke on newswriting, and Ted Reeve of The Telegram, on sportswriting and the problems of the sports columnist.

Peace Group Stalls Union With UN Club

A proposal last November to have the University of Toronto Peace Council amalgamate with the United Nations Club apparently has been forgotten.

No action toward the union has followed since a meeting of the Peace Council in November passed a motion that whereas the aims of the Peace Council are similar to those of the UN Club, and whereas the Peace Council has a bad name on the campus; be is resolved that the Council's executive is allowed to negotiate an amalgamation between the Council and the UN Club, this amalgamation subject to ratification by the general body."

Council President Dennis Bishop admitted action was moving "very slowly". He said Peace Council members were "very busy" and that no decision could be made without them. Avoiding any definite statement, Bishop only said he "hopes amalgamation will go through this year" and flatly rejected any claim that the Peace Council was dissolving.

Roland de Corneille, president of the campus United Nations Club, stated yesterday that he has had no further word from the Council regarding the amalgamation. No discussion with the UN Club has, as yet, begun. Bud Trivett, UN Club Publicity Director, had made it clear at the time of the Peace Council decision in November that there were constitutional grounds for a union.

De Corneille pointed out that the final business meeting of the year for the UN Club will be held two weeks from tomorrow (Thursday). It is believed that steps toward union will have to begin before that meeting.

Commenting on the indecision of the Peace Council, last year's Council president, Don Anderson said he was "not surprised" by the actions of this year's executive. "They are not interested in peace, but only in disrupting the Peace Council," he declared.

Last spring Anderson and his executive were unseated in an unusual coup when Dennis Bishop was nominated and elected to head the new Peace Council. This happened after about sixty students, mainly engineers, packed a nominations meeting, joined the Peace Council and voted non-confidence in the executive.

Since the old Council would not recognize the new executive the University Caput was called upon to settle the constitutional dispute. The engineer-controlled executive as headed by Bishop was recognized. At that time Bishop stated the "new" Peace Council would continue with good meetings and addresses by non-political speakers genuinely interested in peace.

The Student's Handbook described the new organization as "reformed on non-party lines". This was to distinguish it from the old, supposedly Communist - front Peace Council.

Within the first three months of this school year, the "reformed" Council hit on the plan of joining with the United Nations Club. At a business meeting on November 22 the motion for amalgamation was passed 35-6 after continued opposition from Anderson.

Vic Union Deplores Rowdyism

Monday night's Victoria College Union meeting, besides criticizing the organization of the SHARE campaign, also censured the Engineering Society, deplored the state of the men's common room and decided not to hold their proposed Caledon weekend.

The Vic At-Home will be held on March 7, a Friday evening in Hart House, the VCU decided.

A motion proposed by second year president Alex Langford that the "VCU condemns the arrant presumption of the Engineering Society for sending a letter requesting the return of some missing Lady Godiva Memorial Band Uniforms," was unanimously passed by the assembly.

The Engineering Society charged that "Vic did not win the recent Convocation Hall band concert in an honest and fair manner and that the uniforms should be returned as per agreement".

They suggested that Vic should in future "adopt honest engineering methods".

The band uniforms disappeared from Hart House on Skule Nite, and were found, according to Ken Cork, II Vic, in a room in North House.

President John Devereux of the VCU added that they have "come in handy at various functions." The Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry and Regimental Parade Band wore the uniforms at the installation of the new Vic chancellor last week.

An agreement had been made with the Engineering Society that whoever won the SHARE Band contest held two weeks ago would keep the uniforms. By using a cheque they had previously collected, Vic won the band contest for collecting the most money.

A motion was passed underlining the existing authority of the Common Room Committee. A report was presented by the Chairman of the Committee complaining of rowdyism in the Men's Common Room. He cited regular noon hour wrestling matches, floors littered with waste paper, broken furniture and general rowdyism. "It is a disgrace to the college" he declared.

Alec Gigeroff asked if there were any truth in the rumor that a couch had been badly damaged because a fire had been lit under it. The committee chairman said that he had not heard about this.

Bob Rumball suggested that the committee charge an admission fee for the entertainment, and the proceeds be used to buy new furniture.

State Control Of Morality Debate Topic

Who's to look after the people's morals? Should it be the state? or some other body? or no one? That's the question to be discussed at the next Hart House debate, Tuesday, Feb. 19, at which the resolution will be "That the State Should be Responsible for the Morals of its Citizens".

Moving the motion will be John Carton, IV Trinity. He will be opposed by Neville Taylor, I UC. Second speakers for the affirmative and negative respectively will be Dave Gauthier, II UC, and Maury Hertzer, II Law.

Honorary Visitor will be the Rev. Emlyn Davies, of Yorkminster Baptist Church. Speaker of the House will be John Medcoff, IV UC. The debate will begin at 8 p.m. Tuesday, in the Debates Room.

This will be the last debate before Hart House committee elections, a debates committee official pointed out yesterday. All candidates for the debates committee must have spoken at least twice in Hart House debates.

Born in Wales, Rev. Davies went to Oxford. He has been at Yorkminster for a little over a year. During his university days he represented Oxford in international conferences in Switzerland, and in Old Country debates.

52 PERCENTERS:

Exams Necessary Evil

"If 52% is all a student can get, he should not be in university," said Dr. W. E. Blatz, Director of the Institute of Child Study. "But, if a student is intelligent, he should be able to get between 90 and 100% in subjects in which he is interested, without being forced to spend his time on pass subjects in which he is not interested".

Dr. Blatz made these observations in the light of a statement by Dr. W. A. Mackintosh, principal of Queen's, that the universities were training too many people with a "52% attitude towards life".

"I expect my car engine to be more than 52% effective. Yet many students today think that a 52% mark on an examination is fine. They have passed. They don't worry," said Dr. Mackintosh, as quoted in The Globe and Mail.

Last year Dr. Blatz said that "no university student should strive for more than 51% in an examination in the humanities." The student should leave after he has written this amount, he said, and, in this way, exams, scholarships and degrees would be eliminated, and that knowledge would be acquired solely for the sake of becoming an educated person.

"Examinations are not the best possible standard," Dr. Blatz explained yesterday. "Term work, and the personal opinions of the professors, who get to know individually each member of a small class, are much more important. Under the present system, students who are unable to write examinations are penalized. However, once the marks system is started, it must be carried on throughout our educational system," he said.

Dr. Blatz admitted that this system of personal evaluation by professors is impossible in the existing Pass Arts course, with its large classes. The solution would be smaller courses, but this would, of course, be expensive.

Still, Dr. Blatz maintains that students in honour courses should not be expected to get more than fifty percent in their pass subjects, but should be allowed to devote themselves to their honor subjects. Expecting high standards in courses in which the student is not interested is not mental discipline, but simply the enforcement of a conformity to outmoded ideas.

Campus Profile

T. J. Geiger

By PEARL PARNES

In 1933, Prof. T. J. Geiger lost his job at the University of Brunswick. He was a democrat and a liberal, and in the Germany of that time, he was politically undesirable. He had two choices open to him. He could either leave the country immediately, or lose his passport. In September, he left, and two weeks later the Gestapo came to his father's home to take his passport away.

They were too late then. They had other chances to catch Dr. Geiger, but they never seemed to make it. He went to Denmark, and was appointed to the Institute of Economics and History for five years. Then in 1938 he took over the first Sociology chair in Scandinavia, at the University of Aarhus.

Two years later the Germans came, and "undesirable" people had to leave. Dr. Geiger went to the small town where Hans Anderson (of fairy tale fame) was born,; he stayed there for three years. Practically all Denmark was in the underground movement, and news was carried very quickly. One evening he learned that the Gestapo were trying to find him. The next day he was on his way to Sweden.

"The Gestapo were over-organized. One of the four hierarchies in their bureaucracy never knew what the others did. I had renewed my passport, and the German consulate knew where I was. And yet the Gestapo went to the old place where I had lived—I had moved twice since then. They came strutting in, loud and overbearing. They had no idea how ridiculous they looked." Dr. Geiger sums it up in this way, "I have been lucky all my life."

He stayed in Sweden until the end of the war, giving lectures. Then in 1945 he returned to Denmark. This year he is on a visiting lectureship to the Sociology Department of the University of Toronto.

Born in Munich, Dr. Geiger studied law and economics in Germany, graduating in 1914. Then he became a soldier for four and one-half years. "It was not pleasant," he tersely comments.

He became interested in Sociology, a science which did not exist in Germany then. "Germany was in very bad shape. I left law and went into Adult Education." It was in 1928, after 7 years as Director of Adult Education, that Dr. Geiger became professor at Brunswick in Sociology.

Dr. Geiger rejects "value judgments". "There is no good or bad. I conform—we have to have some standards. But it is as a member of society conforming to set standards rather than moralities. The idea of the good is an abstraction of the primary evalution of those standards approved of in society. There can be no absolutes."

He illustrates this point with many valid arguments. "People fight about the standards by which they're going to live in peace. And the standards of even the same country change constantly." Someone will say "I detest lying because it's bad." But lying isn't "bad". In Sparta children had to learn to lie in a convincing way, as part of the equipment of the politically active man. In the English navy they are told, "If you tell a lie, stick to it."

Values and standards vary as much as politics. As far as the latter field, Dr. Geiger feels that Denmark is perhaps the most democratic country in the world to-day. And one indication of this democracy is the freedom given to children. "I have three small children, and it is impossible to hold a discussion. The children terrorize the adults."

When coffee was rationed in Denmark, there was enough tea available. But rumours held that because coffee, the "lower class drink" was rationed, tea, the "upper class drink" came under the same restrictions as well. "The rumour itself," chuckles Dr. Geiger, "is itself characteristic of the atmosphere of the country."

Dr. Geiger has written over 20 books; he lost track of the number some volumes ago. He used to work fourteen hours a day. "Now I am 60, and eight hours is usually my limit. That's where the rationing hit me hardest—coffee is fuel."

Following the close of the session here, Dr. Geiger will visit social research centres in the United States and Canada through a Rockefeller grant, and will give lectures. Then he will return to his chair in Aarhus, Denmark.

5-Man Committee To Evaluate Vic's Class Executives

A five man committee was set up at the VCU meeti Monday night to evaluate the purposes and functions of t class executives. This is part of a general investigation co sidering the general coordination of activities at Victo College. Formation of such a committee was suggested VCU Treasurer Bill Andrews.

Class executives have failed to submit briefs to the Financial Committee as was requested at the December meeting, he said. The personal canvass for SHARE, handled by the class executives was not satisfactory, he continued.

All the class executives admitted that they were unable to give a financial statement at this time. Both members from 5T2, and 5T3 said that their finances are not yet straightened out from the parties held in the fall term.

Defending the class executives the President of 5T3 said that classes do not have periodical meetings as do clubs. They are spread out all over the campus he said. The executives give a cross section of the college, he continued and are therefore valuable representatives on the VCU.

SOS Gets Response

University of Toronto undergrads cannot be accused of being shy or tongue-tied. More than twenty replies were received in answer to an appeal in The Varsity last week for undergrads to speak in discussion with Dr. W. R. Blatz on "Are We Overschooled?", said Ruth Snider, II P & OTS, member of the Varsity Radio Committee today.

"In addition to that we have received several letters suggesting subjects and improvements for the program," Miss Snider continued.

The programs have consisted of a panel of undergraduates and professors discussing subjects of interest to the university and the community at large. Importation of non-university experts to speak on the panel has been one of the suggested revisions.

"We have had several good subjects suggested, but are still in the market for more. There are still six programs to be organized. Anyone with a good subject or a sharp tongue should get in touch with a member of the radio committee," Miss Snider continued.

Other radio committee members are Ernest Luwish, II U.C.; Jack Kennaley, II St. Mike's and C. M. Godfrey, III Meds.

Find Sinfulness Is Root Of Man's Dissatisfaction

"One of man's basic longings is for satisfaction," stated C. S. Woods, General Secretary of the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship. He was speaking at the monthly Sunday evening service of the Varsity Christian Fellowship in Wycliffe College Chapel. Standards differ, yet all are seeking peace and contentment in some form, he said.

Is anyone capable of meeting this basic human desire, or must he turn to some outside source? The natural desire for life and the fear of death answer this clearly. We cannot find satisfaction in ourselves, he continued.

Repeatedly Jesus Christ claims that He alone is able to solve man's problems, giving peace and security, Woods said. With divine wisd Christ goes to the root of dissa faction — human sinfulness. Woods defined sin as any want likeness to a holy and just G hence all men are sinners, he s Nevertheless, whenever an indivi is willing to acknowledge himself sinner, and seeks forgiven through Jesus Christ, God promised satisfaction, Woods c tinued.

In conclusion Woods, who travelled extensively and been gaged in student activity throu out Canada, the United States, many countries of Europe, st that he knew of no one who come as a sinner to Jesus Chri and had not found satisfacti However, he knew of many who rejecting Jesus Christ had unhappily and died disillusi and dissatisfied.

Architects Corner Art Contest

Architects are cornering the market in art nowadays. At any rate, that appears the deduction to be drawn from the Hart House Undergraduate Art Contest, in which all 11 entries to date have come from students at the School of Architecture.

However, undergrads in other faculties will have till this Friday (Feb. 22) to submit their entries to the Warden's Office in Hart House. Entries may be in oil, watercolor, or pencil. Sculpture is discouraged, according to Dave Gardner, Assistant to the Warden, because the art gallery has no facilities for sculpture display, and there is danger of damage to small pieces.

The contest — which is open to all undergraduate members of Hart House — will hang from March 3 to March 22. Women will be admitted on March 5 and 12.

Science And Society Topic In Geiger Talk

"Danish is not a language, it is a throat disease," says Professor T. J. Geiger of the Dept. of Political Economy. Dr. Geiger is giving a public lecture, "Human Society and Scientific Law", today at 4 p.m. in Room 115 of the Economics Building.

No relation to the inventor of the Geiger counter, Dr. Geiger is Professor of Sociology from the University of Aarhus, in Denmark. "I'm not one of those people who go to another country to criticize because things are different" says Dr. Geiger who feels that people are much the same throughout the world.

Every year the Dept. of Political Economy arranges a public lecture for each visiting professor. In his lecture "Human Society and Scientific Law", Dr. Geiger says he will consider that "the humanities like history can either choose to apply scientific method or keep on being a series of confused events". Geiger says that history is not important for the events themselves but for the laws and generalities which can and must be behind the events.

Professor Geiger, who got his LL.D. (Doctor of Laws) degree from the University of Wurzburg in Bavaria, went to Denmark in 1933. Recognized as one of the leading sociologists in Europe, he has written 23 books on Sociology and law. The first in English translation will appear soon, and is entitled "Class Society and the Melting Pot".

After marking essays in both Danish and English, Dr. Geiger considers that Canadian students present a greater range from good to bad in their marks, while European students stay closer to average. Both groups, Geiger feels, are equally poor in the use of their respective native languages, though, he says, Canadian students are comparatively worse in spelling ability.

Joins Polar Bears But Lives to Tell Of Ice-Boating Trip

To go ice-boating and live to tell about it. Perhaps this doesn't sound like a wonderful accomplishment to the uninformed. But it is!

Last Sunday four enthusiastic sailors set out for Hamilton Bay. The sailors were John Bent, I Arch; Mike Conway, IV Civil, and grad Frank Galloway. The University Sailing Club has bought a new ice-boat there. This craft is an attractive Blue and White model which although quite heavy is very sturdily built.

An ice-boat looks something like a racing car. It is a long, thin, pointed boat with skates sticking away out on one side. At the front there is a single skate which acts as a steering rudder. This rudder is turned by a steering wheel in the cockpit.

First the ice-boat has to be carried over the slush to the edge of the good ice. Then the sail, the battens (slats for the sail) and the rigging must be assembled. Finally the front skate is fastened on and the boat is ready to go.

Now (despite the roaring gale) the sailors discussed whether or not it was cold and windy enough to ice-boat. Deciding that it was, they started to push the boat across the ice.

Panting from exertion the icers finally got the craft started. With a yell, "We're off", Frank jumped into the craft. It gave a sudden lurch, quivered to a halt and started to sink beneath the waves. Moaning about his ribs, Frank began to salvage the remains.

After several hours of pushing, the nameless craft (which has nevertheless been called many names), at last started to go. Mike jumped in and went oozing across the Bay at the record speed of two miles per hour. This was the only satisfactory attempt that resulted all day.

Deciding to try it, I entered the cockpit. The boat went roaring along towards the shore. There was only one problem: ice-boats are like old cars—no brakes!

Being still in one piece when the journey was over, I was feeling good. Church first thing Sunday morning had been a good idea. However luck ran out as the boat was being pu away.The ice disappeared and Presto!—anotner charter member for the polar bear club.

If you're bored, want excitement, women and adventure don't fall for those Varsity ads. Unless you get to be a feature writer forget The Varsity, try ice-boating.

St. Hilda's Upholds System Of Federated Arts Colleges

The St. Hilda's Literary Society voted down 18-12 a resolution that "The system of federated Arts Colleges at the University should be abolished," at the final debate of the year, held Monday night.

The fundamental meaning of the university is universality, said Christie Russell, IV St Hilda's, first speaker for the government. This is violated by federation, she said. Religious and social segregration are not democratic, she said, and our system is "inefficient, antiquated and discriminative."

She complained of Trinity's reputation as a "college of snobs", and described its members as "daughters of Toronto's upper half".

First speaker for the opposition, Stephanie Parker, I St. Hilda's, replied that a unitary system produced a thing feared by modern psychologists, the "mass man". A small college defends the human personality and upholds the minority, she said. She also stressed the feeling of contribution the student received in small classrooms, and the advantage to professors of hearing how much was absorbed through discussion.

Betty Southgate, IV, St. Hilda's, second government speaker, said that a unitary system forces the association of all types. In the federated system, she said, students in the same course are not all equally prepared for the final exams. She pointed out the time wasted in discussion during lecture hours, the overlapping in staff and cost of administration and the divided loyalties of a federated college system.

Education deals with the individual, said Ruth Charlesworth, I St. Hilda's, second opposition speaker. College develops responsibility, personality and self confidence because it forces one to appreciate the other person's point of view, she said.

The unitary system encourages fraternities and even smaller snobbish exclusiveness, said Miss Charlesworth. She stressed the worth of mall religious colleges in a materialistic world. The religious knowledge sytsem at this university helps to build the necessary firm foundation of faith, she said.

SAC Round Table Finds Universities House Lost Souls

Canadians are not being overschooled.

The examination system will be unchanged for so time.

DVA should be extended in some form to non-Vete students.

There are too many "lost souls" at Universities.

These findings emerged from one of the stormiest of the current series of meetings of the Varsity Radio Round Table, over CKEY last night. Taking part in the discussion were Dr. W. R. Blatz, Professor of Psychology; John Finlay, IV Vic; Pete Turner, II SPS, and Fred Walden, Grad Studies.

"We haven't begun to scratch the surface of the way in which we can school our children and adults," said Dr. Blatz at the beginning of the discussion. He held this position in the face of arguments from Turner who argued that the economy of the country could not afford more schooling and Finlay who said we spend far too much at school now for the amount of schooling we get out of it.

"Too many people at the University level don't know why they are there", said Walden. He blamed much of this on the present emphasis on learning isolated facts in lower schools and claimed the examination system served to perpetuate this trend. Dr. Blatz agreed the exam system was not the ideal way but "it is the only technique we have of finding out whether a student has absorbed what he has been taught".

Finlay sugested there should be a break between high school University so that students c apply some of their knowledge the working world. He also gested that senior students take longer university courses handicapped by not being ab make a living and support a fa He lauded the DVA scheme urged it be transmuted to a general distribution.

"As far as professional facul are concerned", said Turner, feel we are being overschooled that we cover too much ground too little a time." This he felt the Engineer a very wide which might be desirable in but was not being realistic in of the present need of a special tion in the professions.

In answer to a query as to ideal type of schooling, Dr. B laid out this plan; a school which there is taught in as a time as possible the tools of ization—the art of communicat knowledge of number manip tions, skill in living with one other and the development o number of basic skills. He felt last was particularly important view of the greater amount of sure time that is being provide our society.

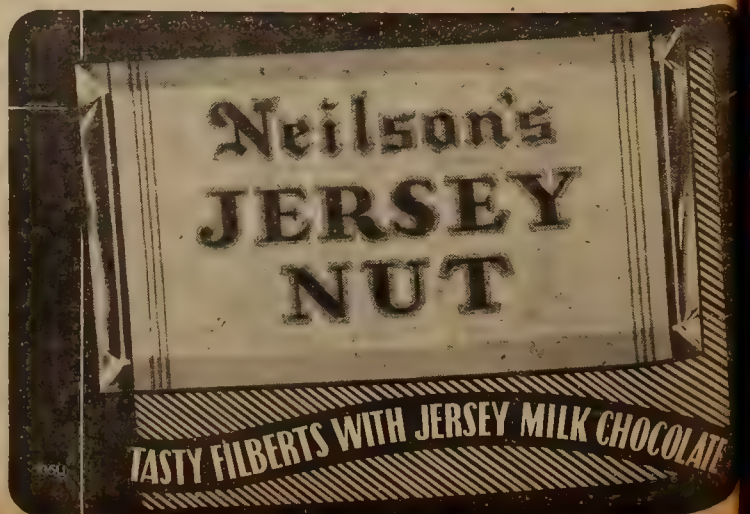
By DAVID PEDDIE

Tommy Trinder and his Royal Command Music Hall Varieties came here to Toronto at the request of the Variety Club to make money for Variety Village and to entertain. Entertainment is the watchword and to the person uninitiated to English "Music Hall" it is really fun. The show is different from anything one sees here. It is naive and adheres strictly to the formula of all Music Hall entertainment, but the show is very refreshing. Even when an act is bad, there is the obvious desire of the "artists" to please their audience, so that one cannot help being pleased or at least flattered.



Monday night's audience at the Royal Alex seemed at least half English and they showed the rest how to join in the fun. They called the people back for more applause, asked for the songs they liked and help the juggler juggle. Tommy Trinder himself is a cocky little Cockney who pokes fun at everything, including himself, and pretends to be something of a crooner, which he isn't — at least, not with that face. He has a lantern jaw, a quantity of teeth and very expressive features. He works hard at his jokes—especially the very old ones—gives the tag-line with pugnacious solemnity and then waits for the reaction. As it comes he starts to smile broadly and generously and then he ducks his head in acknowledgement. This one mannerism makes him a most engaging personality.

Many of his jokes are old, but are told so defiantly that he actually challenges the audience not to laugh. In his turn, he kept up a steady stream of jokes, jibes, and snide remarks, made fine use of a stooge called Yussel, who looked like the last stages of malnutrition, and he sa a few songs. His jokes about Canada were a all witty, clever and not laboured, but a few the English ones fell flat. The audience enjoy too, his direct attacks at them—his admonit to the late-comers and his digs at the lady w laughed more than the others. His idea of Brazilian dancer was, however, a little unnecessa and not as funny as he seemed to think it.

Joseph Locke, the greatest, biggest and bo Irish tenor was also a real treat. He overflow with sentiment and blarney and sang the ri right off the theatre. There was really no n for him to use a mike and the vibration ca by using one kept my head ringing for an ho But Mr. Locke has a fine voice and was especia ly good in his rousing march "The Soldier's Dea and the Christopher Robin song. I can only assu that his style was that of a true vaudevill Whatever it was, I found him as delightful an ham as I could imagine.

The dance team of Blanche and Alan Lo is a home-town product. They were in the Can dian Navy Show and have been a smashing su cess in London. The couple combine an easy-go effortless charm with their very clever and co plex dancing and it is no wonder that they a success. They can slip into an old barn da without any loss of dignity and actually a numbers only add to their popularity. They w a rare addition to the show.

The other acts that I liked were the slack-w juggler Jose Moreno, the Three Hellos, a cre team and the Elkin Sisters who did acroba Altogether a funny and entertaining show.

Queen's Supports Pres. S. Smith

President Sidney Smith is not the only Canadian university head to deplore the lack of ability in the handling of English on the part of some university students.

Last week in Ottawa, Principal W. A. Mackintosh told the Queen's Alumni, Ottawa branch, that there is a lamentable deficiency in knowledge of the English language among university students. He told the Queen's alumni that a special effort was being made at their alma mater to correct this situation.

He added that he was not "satisfied" with the present methods of preparing high school students for university. Queen's is not getting a high enough proportion of top quality students from the collegiates in the large cities, Doctor Mackintosh said.

The World War II veterans have left Queen's, Dr. Mackintosh said. He termed the high school graduates "uninformed and inexperienced." However he said that their judgement usually gets back on the right track.

Dr. Mackintosh felt that high school graduates did not show an ability to concentrate and that they "over-organized themselves."

It is a tremendous handicap, Dr. Mackintosh said, to have students all coming from the same city or province as, to a great degree, one student educates another student.

US Texts Dear Here

Kingston, (CUP)—Students at Queen's University are paying as much as ten percent above list price for text-books published in the United States, it was recently revealed by Prof. Arthur Jackson, Secretary of the Faculty of Science at Queen's.

Under present exchange conditions, text-books entering Canada are subject to approximately two percent increase in price. In addition to this some publishing firms mark their prices up 10 percent for sale in Canada over list prices south of the border.

Publishers claim that they must do this to finance the establishment of branch offices and agencies here in Canada although most American publishers sell their books for the same price in California as in the east.

Despite the shorter distance and similar freight rates prices of the same texts are 10 percent higher in this country.

A new heating plant for the university is being erected at St. George and Russell Streets, across from Knox College. The new heating system is shown above as it nears completion, scheduled for this March. The old heating plant, located next to the Anatomy Building, has celebrated its fortieth birthday and will soon be going into retirement. It is expected that the new plant will mean a 20 per cent increase in efficiency. Eventually electric power for the whole university will be delivered to the new plant, from which it will be distributed to the rest of the campus.

Tayyeb Blasts Colombo Plan Spirit Is Willing, Flesh Weak

"The Colombo plan can be a very good thing, if it is carried out in the spirit in which it was conceived," said Mr. Ali Tayyeb in an address to the International Relations Club, yesterday. "But if its main aim is to defeat communism, it is definitely harmful."

Himself a native of Pakistan and student of Asian geography at the University of Toronto, Mr. Tayyeb told the IRC that there are some very serious defects in the plan as it is being carried out.

"The whole thing has been very poorly planned," Mr. Tayyeb charged. "Indian students are sent to other countries to study completely without a frame of reference. Those studying education, especially, are given little opportunit pecially, are given little opportunity to learn anything valuable, he said. They spend a few hours a week at OCE and at the parliament buildings, and at neither place do they learn anything valuable.

"The Colombo Plan student too often visits foreign countries as a tourist at a picnic. Often the time he is allowed is much too short, and he returns home disillusioned," said Mr. Tayyeb.

Many of the original parts of the plan have not been carried out, he said. There have been no technical advances within India itself, so that the student is liable to return home and find no opportunity for actually using his new technical knowledge. There have been no attempts to bring foreign experts perts into India to give demonstrations.

Moreover, if the nations who are supporting the plan are not sincerely interested in helping the people of Asia, but merely in defeating Communism, the plan will not be successful, he said. The difference in objectives will mean that the money will not be used carefully and effectively.

"In any case, the Colombo Plan is not a cure-all," Mr. Tayyeb reminded the group. "It was created to fill a definite need, but it is being carried out as a practical plan simply because certain nations have made commitments, and want to get them over with. But even if all goes well with the plan, it is not adequate to raise the living standard of the countries involved. It is just a drop in the bucket, although better than nothing."

The Colombo plan calls for a capital development program in the Commonwealth countries of South East Asia totalling about $5 billions over a six-year period, two billion of which is to be raised internally, by contributions from the other commonwealth countries. This money was originally planned to be used to give Asian students technical training in other countries, and for technical developments within India.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

The Rules Committee for the Intercollegiate football league met at the end of last month to make proposals to the general meeting of the CIAU next month, and as usual accomplished nothing. It was the same old story, a group of delegates representing the "old guard", the let's-keep-the-game-the-way-it-is (as was) men, setting out to make rules proposals for the colleges, whose coaches for the most part favour the making of several changes.

The McGill delegate proposed the raising of the present limit of 24 players dressing for each game, a move which all but two or three of Canada's pro and college coaches have been urging for a couple of years now. The proposal was turned down.

A move to restrict substitution, to prevent more than three players coming into a game at one time, was also suggested. This also failed to pass.

Though there was little support in college football for the latter change, the voting down of the former was a bit of a surprise to some. Queen's is the only college whose coach and athletic directorate are known to be against raising the player limit, probably because of the financial situation down there. Bob Masterson here at Toronto is strongly in favour, and Obeck, who is both coach and athletic director at McGill, apparently instructed his delegate to propose it.

Toronto's delegate was Bob Coulter, who played for the Blues in the thirties, and coached them from '45 till '47, when Masterson was sort of eased in and Coulter sort of eased out.

Coulter has been the Toronto delegate for the past two or three years. Masterson says he has given up trying to get Coulter to make changes, and that he knows practically nothing about what goes on in the meetings, except what he reads in the reports issued some time afterward.

It seems to us that if anyone is going to change the rules, it should be the men most directly involved. Either the coaches should be able to take part in the meeting, or at least be able to send proposals to be considered. We have suggested previously in this space that proposals be accepted from the players or a players' committee, but it will be a long time before the league gets that democratic.

Ottawa Rough Riders reached into the Queen City last week to grab Varsity's bone-crushing line-backer Bob Garside right out of Argos' hands. Garside, who graduates this year after having a sensational final season, was just about set to don the double blue next season. However, Ottawa stepped in and offered a little more money and a better job, so . . . Argos will have to find a line-backer somewhere else.

The same thing happened two years ago when Bruce Cummings graduated. Argos bargained with him, then Ottawa came across with a good job and a fair stipend besides, and signed him. Argos, with the biggest stadium in the country at their disposal are the wealthiest of the pro clubs, but having the players in their own back yard they seem to think they can get them cheaper.

Al Brown is also looking the field over considering several offers. With Brown, as with Garside, the job involved is the first consideration and the football salary second.

Marsh Hames, who is going to Osgoode next year, will probably play for Argos since he will be in Toronto anyway.

Lawmen Shutout In Hockey Playoff

Interfaculty hockey playoffs continued at the Arena yesterday, as Junior SPS shutout Law 3-0. The Law team put up a good battle throughout, but were outclassed by a more polished Skule squad.

The first period was fairly even on the play, although the Engineers took a two-goal lead in this frame. The big difference was that the Engineers were able to capitalize on their scoring opportunities. Skule speedster Larry Yeigh opened the scoring midway in the first frame, and teammate Jameson made it 2-0 before the end of the session. The Lawmen were in on goal on many occasions, but a lack of finishing power combined with some terrific netminding by Dave Barker in the Engineers' nets kept them off the scoresheet.

The second period was slower than the first, with the Law boys in particular unable to keep up with the pace. Jack Mollenhauer added the clincher for SPS in this session.

The winning Skulemen now advance into the semi-finals, and will meet Trinity A next Monday at 12:30 in the Arena.

Sportswoman

In the first game of a triple V-ball bill at the L.M. gym last night, Phys. Ed. beat UC, 30-21. Joan Mulveney showed good spiking form for UC, and Carol Hopton served well for the Red and White. Standouts for the PHE squad were Audrey Milne, Jean Thompson and Nina Lancaster.

The second tilt saw Vic II defeated by Meds I by the score of 43-31. Mary Swanson starred for the Medswomen, while Joyce Gould showed well for Vic.

School of Nursing trounced St. Mike's, 38-18 in the third contest of the trio. The winners were led by Donna Pearl and Joan Moggridge, while Mary Bartok and Mary Mahon played well for the Mikemaidens.

Boxing Meet Rescheduled

The Intercollegiate Boxing meet, originally scheduled for this weekend, has been postponed until the 29th of this month. Efforts of the Varsity team to change this date have so far been unsuccessful.

The Blue team will be running into exams the following week, and therefore will not be in top shape for the meet, but so far, the other Universities involved cannot find another weekend which would be suitable for the event.

Hamilton Swamps Blues 14-7 Parks Brothers Score Ten

Varsity's Intercollegiate Water Polo team went down fighting before Hamilton Aquatics at the Hart House Pool last night by a score of 14-7. The Parks brothers of Hamilton were the big factor in the victory as they scored ten goals to make the win a family proposition. Hackbourne paced Toronto with two.

Hamilton went into a 3-0 lead in the first quarter. The third goal came after a Toronto penalty. The Mountaineers left no doubt to their superior ability and training as they started with a rush.

Stulac scored the first Varsity goal early in the second quarter making the score 5-1. The Hamiltonians replied; then Roger caught the corner with a good hook shot. The Parks brothers squelched this rally as they whipped in two more before the half time mark.

Hart Robins, Toronto goalie, stopped five shots in a row at the start of the second half. Robins was outstanding throughout the game. John Bates tightened up the game with a nice shot. Then Parks received a penalty. Langer added another for Toronto on a protested penalty shot. Then the Mountaineers splashed in two more to open the gap to 9-4 at three-quarter time.

The winners racked up four in succession at the beginning of the final stanza. Then Hackbourne and Langer put in two to keep Toronto in the fight. Briton pumped in the Hamiltonians' last goal just before George Parks received his second penalty. Hackbourne then made the final score, 14-7.

Waterlogged Wisecracks: The Hamilton team looked in slightly better condition than Toronto although this may have been because o ftheir greater experience. . . . McElroy played very well but he missed several shots . . . Part of the scoring difference was due to Hamilton's better shooting . . . Hart Robins was Varsity's outstanding player . . . Several of the Hamilton goals were scored when the Mountaineers evaded their checks . . . the best team player award went to Central's Borus Strumc remarked one of the referees . . . the next game in the two game total point contest will be played in Hamilton, Thursday.

Jack Ross has been guarding the nets for the Varsity Blues hockey team for the majority of this season, and so far has been doing a good job. Jack was goalie for last year's championship Baby Blues, and previously played Junior B hockey in his home town of Stratford. Jack will have a tough job this weekend, as he will be facing the sharpshooters from Laval twice in three days. The two games in a row were made necessary by the postponements made out of respect to the late King. The Rouge et Or squad will play here Saturday afternoon, and again Monday night, both tilts at the Arena. The Blues lost both tilts in Quebec, and must up with a good showing this weekend in order to remain in the running for the Intercollegiate title.

Skulemen Win B-Ball Contest By 34-32 Tally

Sr. SPS continued its upsurge in the Major basketball league as they nipped Sr. Meds yesterday by a 34-32 score. It was the second straight win for the Engineers who had lost their first three, and it puts them into a second place tie with the Medicals.

The game was close all the way. SPS was clinging to a narrow 24-20 margin entering the final period, and managed to stave off a last second Meds drive to eke out the win.

Hank Tamowski was best for the winners with seven points, while Austin and Doble netted six each. Lindzon of Meds took down high scoring honours for the tilt with an even dozen markers.

Pitching Sportshoes

SPS VI continued to dominate their group in the Major Intramural B-Ball loop as they trounced Dent. C's yesterday 32-19. The Sixths appear a good bet to go a long way in the play-offs. Ottaway spearheaded the Skulemen with 15 points while Hoffman hooped seven for the Dents.

The Dent. B squad did a little better than their brethren with a 40-23 conquest of Emmanuel A's. Best for the Drillers were Prokop and Matuluk with 13 and 11 points respectively. Lowery racked up seven for the losers.

The final Major cage fixture saw St. Mike's C take a 30-27 decision from Arch A. Ford potted 12 for the Mike men with Walls getting eight and Rossi seven. Neville and Bandola split 16 evenly in a losing cause.

In Minor Basketball activity, UC Lit. ran up a 16-12 first period margin and hung on to outscore the St. Mike's Day Hops 35-32. Freedman and Bernstein provided the scoring punch for the UC'ers with 14 and 13 points in that order. Timmins netted ten for the Double Blue. III M and M took an easy 22-12 win over Wycliffe B as Campbell scored six points. Nestoruk managed four for the Ministers.

The Faculty of Medicine didn't fare too badly as the First Yr. team edged Dent. II Yr. 34-32 and Pre-Med. IIA topped IV Chem. 34-31. Pace sparked the Medsmen in the first tilt with 15 points while Teslet and Hrabowsky got eight apiece for Dents. In the latter encounter Barkoff and Charendoff got ten and fourteen for the victors, while for the Chemists Phillips swished 15 and Ratuski 12, including eight out of nine foul shots.

The remaining basketball game saw IV Eng. Business outscore Vic Rugby 22-17. Prestnall sparked the Engineers with ten, while Anderson netted eight for the Footballers.

Three games were played in the Water Polo league. St. Mike's A beat Dent A 3-1; Trin. B took Vic. II 4-2, and Med V downed Forestry B 3-1.

Queen's At Toronto For Final A-Night

The basketball game between Varsity and Queen's has been rescheduled for March 8. Queen's was scheduled to play the Blues at Hart House in an athletic night last Saturday, which was cancelled when the college presidents decided to cancel intercollegiate activities till this Friday. The exhibition swim meet with Rochester, which was also to be held that night, is being rescheduled for the eighth, although Rochester has not made definite their acceptance of the date.

This will make the March 8 show the last athletic night of the year. The Blue game with McGill March 1 was to be the last athletic night, as well as the last game of the basketball season.

The other basketball game postponed, the McMaster game billed for tonight, will be held March 5, a Wednesday night, at Mutual Street Arena. The JV game with the Mac Buccaneers will be played as a preliminary the same night.

The exhibition games in which the Blues and the Junior Varsity were to play Buffalo University are not being re-scheduled. The JV's match with YMHA which was to make up the prelim for Saturday's Athletic night will also be washed out completely.

The wrestling meet with Western, also billed for the a-night, will be held on the March 1 show.

Risque Cartoon Brings Criticism

Kingston, (CUP)—As a result of a special Arts Faculty edition, The Queen's Journal is receiving letters condemning it, among other things, for printing material which would have made "the old Police Gazette and Calgary Eyeopener — which were noted for their putrid articles — blush."

The items concerned include a cartoon of a woman of obvious ill-repute asking a Queen's co-ed, "Don't you find it a crashing bore to be a virgin?"

The other article which has brought forth complaints was a commentary on Queen's men and women, which suggested that "Queensmen would be all right if they didn't think more of their beer than their women; import; talk too much about nurses."

The article also suggests that if Queensmen want: (a) a mother, they go home; (b) a prostitute, they go to Montreal.

In the next column, in what appears to be a male reply, the paper suggests Queen's girls would be all right if only: "they gave a man the same kick as does beer; they didn't act like the ratio was what it really is; they didn't act like they'd never tasted beer before."

Finally, the Journal suggests why Beer is Better'n Women. The reasons given are: you can buy it for less than a woman; beer is always dependable—does what it claims to do; bottles of beer do not get pregnant; beer can be shared with your friends; you can throw away the bottle when it's empty.

The articles were part of a special edition of the Journal put out by members of the Arts Faculty, and not by the regular staff. Like some other Canadian universities, the Journal has special issues throughout the year which are put out by the individual faculties.

Complaints came from present students and from a graduate of 1922, who asked that "the moron" who wrote the article be discharged from Journal staff, and that the general tone of the paper be raised "at least to an extent sufficient to indicate the general run of male students has some idea of morals and that the chief interest is not beer and sex."

Another letter mentions another case, "when a very crude, suggestive poster was placed on the nurses' bulletin board." The unnecessary emphasis on sex at a degrading level, suggests neither intellectual nor social maturity in college students, the writer continues.

Another student answered the Journal's articles with the Biblical quotation: "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."

"We take comfort in the fact that you represent a small minority of the student body. Alas for our school if it were otherwise!" the letter adds.

In the same edition in which the letters were published, the editor of the Arts Journal — Alex McCuaig—admitted that the issue included some material he would not again include, but explained he was taking part in a debate on press night, and had been too busy preparing his debate material on previous days to keep a sufficiently close eye on the paper.

Significant Finds On Old Indus Sites

The prehistorics of the Indus river valley cities "carried sanitation to a morbid extreme", said Dr. Wheeler, London University Archaeology professor, to a large audience in the Museum Theatre.

Lecturing on the recent archaeological finds at Mohenjo-Daro and Harappa on the Indus river in North West India, Dr. Wheeler showed slides of buildings constructed over 4,000 years ago.

"There were far more drains in the cities of the Indus valley than in the whole of medieval or modern India", Wheeler commented. Above the drainage in the houses "comfortable little seats of a very modern type" were found, he added.

The climate of the region must have been very different 4,000 years ago, said Wheeler. This is evidenced by the discovery of "carefully baked bricks" used to withstand dampness, while in Ur, a comparable civilization, mud bricks were used, he said.

Wheeler showed pictures of solid brick towers and parapets on which he found elliptical missiles of clay, "quite a useful missle when properly used".

A large granary, of grid-like construction and kept dry by complex systems of air ducts, "was the focus of Mohenjo-Daro's economic life", said Dr. Wheeler. Like a state bank of today, the granary's condition reflected the degree of solvency of the city, he added.

Wheeler showed two pictures of mortars, used in milling grain. One was unearthed in the ancient city sites, and the other, a similar one, is used today in nearby Kashmir.

"The arts and crafts of the Indus are disappointing when compared with those of the western civilizations," Wheeler said. Showing pictures of terra-cotta figurines, Wheeler described them as the most skillfully executed of the arts.

Tiny, inch-square seals of clay were also shown and were called "most remarkable" by Dr. Wheeler. They contained a "semi-pictographic" style of writing. Commenting on the script, Wheeler said, "We can say a lot about it except what it means."

A figurine believed to be the Hindu god, Siva, was discovered on one of those seals. Dr. Wheeler indicated that because of this and similar finds, it is now believed that the Indus civilization "may have had a very considerable effect on later India".

Such an influence was affected "on the less material side", Wheeler suggested. The material elements of the Indus civilization died suddenly when the invading Aryans completely destroyed the populace of Mohenjo-Daro, he added.

Wheeler showed photographs of the Indus city excavation with skeletal remains of citizens sprawled in the streets and on stairways. He told of finding these skeletons with broken skulls which indicated that they have lain there since the Aryans slaughtered them in about 1500 B.C.

The discovery of public baths, large granaries, organized streets, massive brick fortifications, complex sewage systems, and artistics indications of a religion similar to that of contemporary India, are significant to the understanding of the prehistoric India civilization, Wheeler said.

Dr. Wheeler was formerly Director of Indian Archaeology and more recently Director of Pakistani Archaeology. He is currently Professor of British Archaeology at the University of London, England, and is on a lecturing tour of Canada.

Dr. Watson Will Speak At Noon

Dr. W. H. Watson, head of the University Physics Department, will speak on "Grounds for Hope" this afternoon at 1:30 p.m. This is the second in a series of four addresses being given by members of the University staff and sponsored by the Hart House Chapel Committee.

Formerly head of the theoretical physics branch at Chalk River, Dr. Watson is a world-famous authority on atomic energy.

The following two lectures scheduled for February 20 and 27 are to be given by Dr. A. B. B. Moore, President of Victoria University, and Provost R. S. K. Seeley of Trinity College.

Radcliffe Censorship Ended Now

Cambridge, Mass — (CUP) — Radcliffe's stringent control over college news and individual publicity ended recently. President Jordan announced that student correspondents would no longer have to clear stories through the Publicity Office. Nor would it be necessary for students to get the permission of the News Office to grant outside interviews and pose for pictures.

A special committee was appointed by Jordan to draw up the new regulations. Students may still obtain material from the Publicity Office, but need not submit articles for approval. The practice of having students serve as representatives of newspapers will be continued "because of its potential value to the college as a medium of publicity and to students as training in journalism." Students are now free to secure their own appointments as newspaper representatives, but the publicity director will continue to assist those who have not got specific positions. (Formerly all representatives were appointed by the publicity director.)

The problem of press-board administration relations came to a head a year ago. One of the students, Bureau Chief of the College newspaper, was threatened with disciplinary action for writing a story "not in the best interests of the College." Under threat of expulsion she was forced to resign from the newspaper staff.

Cleaning Out Garbage

The Problem

Not very long from now an old alley cat in the guise of the Students' Council is going to start poking into various of its activities. The time for re-appraisal is here. One activity that it is going to poke through most carefully is what has been termed "the campus' biggest garbage can" — the External Affairs Committee.

With a little intensive sifting and sniffing the old cat will try to decide whether what appears to be a rather battered and beat-up old can on the outside, has enough healthy contents to be set up on a permanent basis.

Set up last spring by the SAC on a year's trial, the EAC was meant to combine and co-ordinate the activities of the International Student Service and the National Federation of Canadian University Students committees on the campus. The future of the international and national work of Toronto will depend on the decision taken.

Both organisations work for the interests of the whole student body. They often represent the student body issues causing a good deal of overlapping. To elliminate this, to give them a more representative character and make their work more effective, were some of the factors put forward in support of the idea. At the same time the new committee would be responsible to the Council for its actions and have official SAC backing, with one of its members appointed as chairman.

The plan was approved. But EAC was given no budget, no constitution, no program of action, or organization. It had to make its own way. And when the current season started all the students who had pushed the amalgamation had graduated and could not help to put their ideas into practice. It was a tough job to handle from the start.

Made up of elected representatives for NFCUS and volunteers for ISS, EAC has been able, with some measure of success, to co-ordinate the activities of the two and give them a fair degree of recognition on the campus. In fact, EAC quickly assumed a prominence second only to that of the SAC itself.

But the "garbage can" analogy crept in as EAC started to sag as all manner of issues and jobs was dumped into its lap. It soon proved it was simply incapable of handling them adequately. There were the Russians, the Austrians, SHARE, demands for lower fees, international affairs of NFCUS and all the regular things both committees handled in the past.

As a result the people in charge of EAC grew acutely aware of the inadequacies of the committee and its inability to handle such complex problems. Embarrassment and confusion were the natural result, before EAC had even become accustomed to the alleys it had to work in.

As a result many a member wished that he had never heard of EAC at all. The Council itself was continually perplexed and staggered by the massive detailed reports which it was expected to know about and sanction. The EAC chairman even asked that some of the motions passed at his meetings be stymied in short order.

The EAC meetings themselves were often long drawn-out affairs. The major time was given over to issues that were nearly impossible to be resolved and the reports of the regular sub-committees got lost in the shuffle. Part of the blame for this can be laid, of course, on too obviously uninformed members.

With all this it is not hard to become suspicious about the value and competence of the committee. And certainly there is some feeling that, if nothing else, the old system had fewer headaches. Particularly was this felt during the controversy over the Russian visits.

The Solution

But it is our belief that the External Affairs Committee, garbage can or no, was one of the most progressive steps taken by the Council this year. And we want to see it continued. If it can learn from its present mistakes and growing pains, the EAC should become all the stronger and more effective next year.

For ISS and NFCUS, through EAC, have a character that is both broad and challenging. And this character has been fairly well brought out. The two organizations encompass a sense of unity and co-operation with all sorts of students. And certainly some of the biggest controversies and problems of the year have been stirred up through EAC.

However, an organization is only as effective as the people in it. For EAC this is particularly true. With a scope so broad, the most important thing the EAC must have is an extraordinarily strong and capable leader. He must be able to compromise opposing points of view. The EAC needs a constitution to establish the limits of its responsibilities, to prevent a recurrence of the garbage can addendum.

Also needed, to prevent more embarrassing motions, is a ruling that only the elected representatives be permitted to make motions. Finally an honourary chairman is needed to allow the EAC chairman to take the leading role in discussion he should have. This has been impossible under the present setup. These are a few of the most striking requirements.

Re-allocating ISS and NFCUS to their former independent status would mean only reducing them to utter poverty as far as effectivitness is concerned and perhaps even to oblivion.

With the experience of the past year to look back on, it would seem that NFCUS and ISS, under the EAC banner have waxed green in the glory of official sunlight.

Massey Report

National Challenge

Although most of the furor over the Massey Report has pretty well spent itself, we are reprinting here an extract from a talk by Arthur Phelps, Professor of English at McGill University, that he gave recently over the BBC. Professor Phelps analyzes the growing nationalism and the desire for earnest self-appraisal in Canada from which the incentive for the Massey Commission stemmed.

It is a fact that the Massey Report — as it is coming to be called — is a shocking document. If it gets into the consciousness of the Canadian people it will be a shock to the nation similar to that for the individual when, by virtue of some crisis in his development, he sees himself as for the first time and wonders what he really is.

The report strikes vigorously and deeply right in behind the facade of our commercial and political expansion and material achievement. In effect, it asks what sort of resources in aesthetic, moral and intellectual and spiritual vigor have our leaders behind them as they speak for Canada in the business and political counsels of the world? It asks what sort of spiritual climatic environment have all these young Canadians of ours about them as they grow up in a land they call increasingly their own, their native land.

Why did the Report come into being? It came into being because the country wanted it. Canada was ready for what might be called a cultural stock-taking. If it be true, as it is true, that the soberly analyzed findings of the Commission of sciences in Canada demonstrate serious shortcomings in the range and nature of Canadian interests, it is also true that the country was in a mood to be told the facts and to treat them seriously.

For the past 30 years there has been in Canada a continuous, conscious, and sometimes deliberately engineered weakening of Canada's ties with Great Britain. By some, it was called getting rid of colonialism; by others spiritual disaster. But the process went on. Canada sought and found a new sort of independence.

Within the last ten years realization has become widespread that independence of Britain might only mean but another form of dependence, a progressive absorption without checks into the way of life of the United States. American instead of British investment in developing natural resources and business enterprises, co-operative occupation by American troops, the pervasive, continuous interpenetration of Canadian life by American advertising — all this made many Canadians think Canada was losing not only her independence but her identity.

A wave of feeling which has swept the country during recent months has not been, in essence, so much anti-Americanism as pro-Canadianism. When Mr. Pearson in April, 1951, said in a Toronto speech that Canada must not be a mere echo of the United States, a vast amen went up from the whole country.

This feeling was nourished from all sorts of sources. During the last ten years, Canadian high school and university teachers have sought for relatively more text books in economics, sociology, politics, philosphy, and literature edited, if not written, by Canadians.

All this means that for a long time there has been a stirring in the mulberry trees here in Canada. The Massey Report has simply drawn into sharp focus a fresh projection of the people's half-conscious need and will.

In the introduction to the Chapters in Part II of the Report, the commission shows both its sense of the breadth of the mandate under which it worked, and its knowledge of the fact that what are sometimes called spiritual ends are conditioned by material means. The commission believes that by taking thought and using money a nation adds cubits to its cultural stature.

In that sense the Commission's findings have been so precise, detailed, and practical that they have taken the wind clean out of the sails of those ready to dismiss the report as the foolish dream of long-haired idealists. The taxpayer can meet the report head on and debate it in his own terms. Here are two passages from the Introduction to Part II:

"The task assigned to this Royal Commission was conceived by its authors in the government with imagination and boldness. The work with which we have been entrusted is concerned with nothing less than the spiritual foundations of our national life. Canadian achievement in every field depends mainly on the quality of Canadian mind and spirit. . . ."

It is with the future of the Canada Council, that it should be set up, that the hopes and fears of tens of thousands of Canadians are intertwined. If the Council is established, and if it does even part of the work the Commission has plotted for it, Canada will be setting out on a new phase of her developing nationhood. To the Canada you have known may be added, then, another Canada with a consciousness of an inner life of her own for which she is responsible and through which she finds herself increasingly a part of whatever makes fuller and richer the life of man.

Our Readers Write

Editor, The Varsity:

According to the first SHARE financial statement (in the Tuesday, Feb. 5, issue of The Varsity), the VCU has withdrawn its donation (and vote) to the SHARE Band Contest rather than have it publicized that outside of these checks, the VCU Collection per capita for SHARE amounted to $0.00167.

The presentation of the "Treble Trophy" to the band collecting the most money was delayed because of the doubtful legality (as votes) of these large checks, included in donations received after the SGLIRPB played. Therefore since the VCU, having no extraordinary powers, cannot spend this amount twice, as they seem to have tried, the LGMB is the rightful and honest winner having raised $101.00 of the remaining 149 and as soon as the VCU returns the "Treble Trophy" which they obtained by the usual underhanded methods it will be engraved suitably and presented to the LGMB, now two-time winners. I cannot help reflect on the obvious irresponsibility of members of the VCU flaunting the money of Victoria students and it is hoped by gentlemen of SKULE that those barbarians from the North will not disfigure the lovely, hand-made, "Treble Trophy," before they return it.

Hart House

NOMINATING NEXT WEEK

This painting — "Pipe Smokers" — by Jacqueline Gilson, is one of those in the New Canadian Artists Show currently in Hart House. The House Committee is considering the purchase of this picture. Miss Gilson is the daughter of Professor Gilson of St. Michael's College, head of the Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies.

Warden Stresses Need Of Active Participation

By DENISE RICHARDS

Nominations open Monday for the Hart House Elections. Seventy-one posts are open to undergraduate members of the House on the various committees.

Warden Ignatieff stressed the importance of active student interest in these elections. The idea that Hart House runs by itself, or on its administration, is completely false he said. He explained that the majority of committee members are students, and thus Hart House administration is an experiment in student, faculty, and staff relationships.

There is a need for creativeness on these committees, the Warden said, for they provide a scope for doing things, and carrying out ideas, not just for talk.

Hart House was officially opened in 1919. Since then there has grown up what has been described as the "Hart House idea." An article in The Varsity of 1946 explained this idea as follows:

"First, a House devoted to student life should be efficiently managed and make full provision for the material needs and social activities of its members, and secondly, without being 'high-brow' or educative, it must stand pre-eminently for the cultivation of the arts, more especially of painting, music, books, and the drama, for the encouragement of the undergraduate's interest in public affairs, through the medium of speakers and debates, for the wise presentation of Christianity, for the introduction of a certain dignity and courtesy into daily intercourse, and for the formation of lasting friendships."

From the earliest days of Hart House, its activities have been administered by committees consisting of senior and undergraduate members. The senior members (faculty and graduate members), numbering not more than two or three on each committee, are chosen for their interest in the particular affairs of that committee, and are appointed to serve by the Board of Stewards.

The undergraduates, who are in a large majority on every committee, are elected annually by the undergraduate members of Hart House, except that in order to provide continuity, two undergraduates in the larger committees (i.e., House, Library, Music, Art, Debates, and Glee Club) and one undergraduate in the smaller committees (i.e., Camera, Squash Racquets, and Chess) are elected to serve for the following year by the out-going committee. The Warden is Vice Chairman of all committees, except in the case of the Board of Stewards, of which he is ex-officio Chairman.

Every undergraduate member of Hart House is eligible to vote, and is urged to do so, in the election of members for the House, Library, Music, Art, Debates, and Squash Racquets Committees. In the case of the Camera, Glee, Amateur Radio, Chess, and Table Tennis Club Committees, voting is restricted to members of each club.

All undergraduate members of the House are eligible to stand for election to the committee of their choice, except those who are graduating (for obvious reasons). There are no qualifications for candidature other than an interest in the duties of the particular committee chosen, and a readiness to give time to its affairs, with the exception of the Debates Committee, where a candidate must have spoken twice from the floor of the House during a Hart House debate this year, or three times in the past two years, and the Squash Racquets Committee, where a candidate must certify that he has played squash at least six times during this year and has had his name on the ranking lists at least three weeks before the date of nominations.

Nominations open at 9 a.m. Monday, February 18th, and close at 6 p.m. on Thursday the 21st. Withdrawals will be accepted until 6 p.m. on Friday the 22nd. The elections will be held on Wednesday, March 6.

Nomination forms may be obtained in the Warden's office. The Nominee must obtain the signature of two undergraduate members as Mover and Seconder.

Campaigning posters, no larger than 24" by 36" may be put up by candidates on or after February 26. Assistant to the Warden, Dave Gardner asked that they be taken to the Warden's office before being hung.

There will be a display of campaign posters from the permanent collection of Hart House in the main floor corridor of the House during the week of the nominations.

THE HOUSE COMMITTEE

The House Committee is concerned with the general management and social activities of Hart House, including the annual All Varsity fall dance. It is responsible to the Board of Stewards for seeing that the structure itself and all equipment are maintained in good repair. It deals with all matters that make for the comfort and convenience of members. The Tuck Shop, the Lunch Room, the Barber Shop, and guest rooms come under its supervision. This committee is also directly concerned with the operation of the Great Hall, both as regards the daily meals, and also those served to members at any special functions

Debaters' Budget Escapes Financiers At SAC Meeting

The future of intercollegiate debating at the University of Toronto was threatened at last night's meeting of the Students' Council but after 45 minutes of discussion the SAC finally decided to vote the University Debating Union the necessary funds to carry out its year's program.

The problem came up when the Finance Committee suggested that no more funds be allotted to the Debating Union for tours to other colleges. Out of its $1,000 budget, the UTDU has spent a little over $600 in travel expenses. However, increased costs in other Council activities have necessitated restrictions in the budget, according to Finance Commissioner Trivett, Law.

At present the UTDU is planning debating tours to universities in the United States and the St. Lawrence region of Canada. The latter debates—with McGill, University of Montreal, Carleton College, University of Ottawa, and Queen's—are all in connection with the Inter - University Debating League, a cross-Canada organization.

Debates Commissioner Charles Hanley said that the University of Toronto teams have lost only one debate (the Brading trophy debate with two Scotch debaters) and that the teams may have a chance to try for the Eastern Canada and the Canadian debating championships. Hanley said that if the UTDU had no further funds, it would have to drop out of the IUDL. The UTDU joined the league this year. The possibility of re-joining might be jeopardized if Toronto dropped out at this point, he added.

Hanley said that it was impossible to cut out the United States debating tours and that any cuts would have to be in the IUDL debates.

The council decided to have the finance committee reconsider the UTDU budget and defeated an amendment by Trivett that the committee should consider spending only a further $100.00.

During the debate, Trivett stressed the need for economy in the debate tours. "They should be able to travel in upper berths", he suggested, "instead of bedrooms. If the debaters themselves are willing to economize, we could probably save $50 there alone", he added.

Camera Club

Entries in the Hart House Camera Club's annual exhibition must be turned in to the Hall Porter, not later than 6 p.m. on Friday, February 15. Both black and white and coloured prints are all being accepted. The black and white prints must be mounted on boards, sixteen by twenty inches, and the colored prints must be the exhibitor's own work, mounted on standard size boards.

CLARE BICE

New Canadians

The "tremendous human interest" in the backgrounds of most of the artists exhibiting in the New Canadian Artists' Show in Hart House adds to the interest of their paintings, said Clare Bice yesterday. Bice, who spoke on the current show in the Art Gallery, is the Curator of the London Art Gallery, and conceived and arranged the show.

Bice said that the artists had not been questioned about their backgrounds, and were asked only their age and place of birth, but that much fascinating information had been uncovered indirectly.

One artist, in a brief note on the back of a canvas entitled "I Was Deported to Siberia," explained that he had escaped from Siberia through Nazi Germany to Sweden, and had sailed to Canada in a small fishing boat. The Canadian government had permitted him to stay.

A 76-year-old woman, who specified that she was from "Old Russia," is now living in a small town in northern Quebec, where the express office had never heard of London, Ontario. She was particularly happy that one of her paintings had been sold, as it would help to pay the debt incurred by her family in bringing her to Canada.

Other artists with intriguing backgrounds, said Bice, include a pre-world war II Czechoslovakian ambassador, a 17-year-old Chinese boy now living in Medicine Hat, and a Grand Duchess, sister of the last Czar of Russia.

A small exhibit of the works of four New Canadians in London last year gave Bice the idea of having a Dominion-wide show for New Canadians, when he discovered that quite a few good painters had come to Canada since the war. He said that it had been impossible to contact all of the possible contributors, but that co-operation from the Department of Citizenship and Emigration, and a wide spread publicity campaign, had brought out 300 entries. 106 of these are in the present show, and of them, 57 have been selected for a travelling show.

The New Canadian artists still have to adjust to Canada, and what other Canadian artists have said, before they can have anything original to say about Canada, Bice commented. He added that the most interesting works in the show were on European subjects with which the artists were familiar.

Curiously few of the entries were based on harrowing wartime experiences, Bice said. He explained that some pictures of this type, whose artistic quality did not seem to justify subjecting the public to such experiences, had been rejected by the judges. The panel of judges consisted of two artists, and two Canadians with European backgrounds.

Bice said that the New Canadian artists were hampered in many cases by lack of money and the necessity of earning a living in other fields, and by the fact that they still have to make their names known to Canadian buyers. He said that he hoped that this show would help them feel that they are achieving some recognition in the artistic field in Canada, and that it would show Canadians that these new citizens had a contribution to make to Canadian cultural life.

Bice was in on the founding of the London Public Library and Art Gallery in 1940, which has become a community art centre, and has been its curator ever since.

The New Canadian Artists' Show is now in its second week in Hart House. It will be on display until Sunday, and will be open to the general public Saturday and Sunday afternoons from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. A related show on the "Modern Movements in 20th Century Painting" is on display in the Print Room.

Won Contest Keeping Loot —Vic Band

"Victoria College will certainly resist any attempts on the part of the Engineering Society to get back the prizes from the SHARE band contest," Vic Publicity Director Ed File announced today. "We won the contest and we're keeping the loot."

Skule, in a letter to the Varsity, yesterday, demanded the return of the Treble Trophy, symbol of band supremacy, on the grounds that Vic didn't win at all.

The Treble Trophy was to be awarded to the band collecting the most money at the contest, held on January 23. The Victoria College Union turned up with cheques totalling $300, which easily gave their entry, the SGLIRPB (Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry and Regimental Parade Band) the victory.

Then, Band Contest Director E. H. Scott charges, the VCU withdrew their money, and gave it to SHARE in Vic's name. Since the VCU cannot spend their money twice, Scott says, they thereby lost the contest, and must return the trophy, as well as two purloined

No Greater Singe

By BARBARA SCREATON

The term primate is used to classify the highest order of mammals, which includes lemurs, monkeys, apes and men. There is great variety in appearance and habits among the several member-tribes of the family, but all have certain characteristics in common.

Most primates ordinarily produce only one offspring at a time. It is born in a state of complete helplessness, and requires parental attention for a longer period than do most mammals. This is particularly true of men.

Primates are either vegetarian or else live on a mixed vegetable and meat diet. None are exclusively carnivorous. All, except certain types of man, have a conspicuous coating of hair or fur. The anterior extremities differ from those of other mammals in structural adaptation to other uses than those of locomotion. Most primate (again with the exception of one kind of man) walk with their heels touching the ground.

The presence of certain useful accessories, such as manipulatable great toes and a tail, often indicates tree-climbing efficiency on the part of the owner. Although frequently associated with primates, these assets are optional.

The largest and generally most intelligent of primates belong to the classes Similidae and Hominidae, which cover Gibbons, Orang-utans (or is it Orangs-utan?), Chimpanzees, men, and gorillas. These all walk erect or semi-erect, and lack tails and cheek pouches. They are often very intelligent, and show marked individuality of character.

Chimpanzees in particular are surprisingly ingenious at solving problems of environment through mechanical skill and imitative ability. They have frequently been seen resorting to fairly complicated manoeuvres, like building towers of boxes or telescoping several sections of bamboo, in order to obtain food placed out of reach.

Mrs. Ladygin-Kohts of Moscow proved, by long experimentation with her chimpanzee Ioni, that the animal could be trained to match two objects having some quality in common, that he could distinguish colors, that he had not inconsiderable powers of discrimination, and quite a good memory as to means of solving a problem.

Many scientist agree that the behavior of the great apes frequently suggests that they undergo processes of ratiocination, (remedial English). The skill of chimpanzees in imitating actions like riding a bicycle, smoking, or waiting on table has been amply demonstrated in circuses.

Besides showing superior qualities of intelligence and alertness, the anthropoid apes can demonstrate, by action and facial expression, varied emotions — affection, sadness, amusement, excitement, anger, dislike, and sympathy. Although many primates can make a variety of sounds, it appears that only man has developed a systematic code of speech.

The greater primates are generally monogamous, again with the exception of a type of man. And, as the great French author and Singomist Georges-Dollard Lapineau so actutely remarked: "Vous feriez mieux d'eviter ce type-la. Choisissez plutot un singe."

May Have FM Station Though Less To Hear

"There are no openings on an AM band for a station such as proposed by the student planning committee at Toronto University," said Sam Ellis, Radio Inspector for Ontario. The only possibility, according to Ellis for Varsity to operate an FM station similar to Ryerson Institute of Technology's station. The FM station would operate on a higher frequency and thus would have less listeners because there are only 35,000 FM stations in the Toronto area.

Despite the statement the student committee will continue their investigations, Jack Tinker I Law, head of the students' committee said We understood that the Canadian government is interested in advancing culture, he added. It seems unusual that they would only allow commercial stations on an AM band. The AM band includes the normal broadcasting range covered by a regular radio set.

Tinker said later, "We intend to investigate the whole situation and submit the answer to the university. This of course includes any alternatives to a broadcast band station should that not prove feasible." When the possibility of a directional station which only broadcasts in certain specified directions was mentioned, Tinker commented that they didn't intend to broadcast to anyone but the students who live in the city.

The intention of the committee is to have students run the station with the faculty participating in the broadcasts, said Tinker at Tuesday's meeting. Senior faculty members on the University were not available for comment on this.

Principal Jeanneret of University College said, "I do feel that the University should have a broadcast station whether or not it is operated by students. There is no reason why it shouldn't be a success if other Universities have done it. However, I feel that the financial side should be investigated first."

Tinker felt that the finances were but a minor problem. He said that if all the other problems could be solved the finances could be obtained.

Location for the station also came under discussion. At yesterday's meeting the studen agreed that it should be complet ly contained within the campu Commenting on this Princip Jeanneret said that perhaps th versity College had reached i limit for offering accommodati to undergraduate activities. though, he added, we like to courage them and maintain record of hospitality.

K. G. Chisholm, a resident engineer at RCA Victor compan said that the cost of a 250 w AM station would run to $20,0 If the station was directional cost would climb another $15,0 However, he also felt that an station was impossible. The co of an FM station brand new w the exception of buildings wou only run $10,000 added Chisho This is for brand new commerci equipment. However, the Studen Committee hope to get a go deal of their equipment secon hand. This is expected to cut cost by at least one seventh.

The program committee for t organization met today to contin planning for a station, which T ker said will continue to report the University.

Makes Sleepy Proust Difficult 'Not Palatable'

"Proust is not always palatable" and is often "conducive to sleep", said Professor J. S. Wood lecturing yesterday afternoon before an audience of about 140 in Victoria College Alumni Hall. Prof. Wood, chairman of the French Dept. at Victoria spoke on Marcel Proust in the second in a series of public lectures on twentieth century novelists. The lectures are sponsored by the Victoria College Council.

Prof. Wood limited his remarks to Proust's one great work "A la recherche du temps perdue", which he translated as "In Search of Lost Time." Proust wanted to "re-create the past", said Wood. "Remorse for a wasted life made him start to write", he said.

Prof. Wood read selections to illustrate Proust's ability to seize upon the peculiarities of certain groups. "A sentence of Proust can be two words or two pages in length", he said "He observes and depicts his characters in relation to time" said Wood continuing that Proust makes his characters develop and not remain static. Proust was 'first to break with nineteenth century novel style" said Prof. Wood. He continued that Virgina Woolf was the English novelist most closely resembling him.

Next lecture in the series will be Wed., Feb. 20, at 5.00 p.m. at Vic, when Professor R. K. Arnold will talk on Thomas Mann.

Thursday Afternoon Lecture Series

POSTPONEMENT

is announced of future schedule for February 14 by Dr. R. L. McDougall until February 21.

Campaign To Begin For SPS Election

All nominations for next year's Engineering Society executive must be made before Monday, Feb. 18, 5 p.m., this year's committee announced last night at the executive meeting. The elections will be held on Friday, Feb. 22.

"Usually there is one week for the campaign, but since this Friday the University is closed, we had to extend the time for the nominations," said Doug Sherk, Chairman.

In its interim report, the Constitution Committee proposed that next year's Society President should not be the fourth year representative too, "Because the two positions are too much to handle for one person, even for someone in one of the easier courses," said Mrs. J. M. DeGroot, chairman of the committee.

Next year's Skule External Affairs Representative will be a third year student, according to the report, and Director of Professional Relations a fourth year student, who will handle liaison with the professional Associations. Mrs. DeGroot commenting on this new position, said that the third year man is still interested in the campus, whereas the fourth year student is more interested in his profession.

The Editor of the Toike Olke will still not have a vote in the executive meetings. Said Mrs. DeGroot, "The Editor's job is not to report only, he must also write editorials and he must be informed about what is happening at the executive meetings." "He also has to be impartial in a reporting capacity, therefore he should not make motions."

The Varsity and Torontonensis representatives will be appointed by the Director of Publicity and Publications, it was announced, and they will not be on the executive.

Presenting his report on Skule Nite, Vice-President Jim Allan said that the Engineering Society's subsidy amounted to $182.17. Commenting on the show, Producer Paul Hutchison said that everything went well except the ticket sales. Price of the tickets to the show was increased 25c a seat. The price of the tickets to the dance was not raised this year, he said.

Marxist Talk

Mr. Hal Proctor, B.Sc., speaks today on the topic "A Marxist View of the State," in Room 11, U.C. at 1:00, sponsored by the Campus Labor Progressive Party.

Proctor graduated in Chemical Engineering from the University of Toronto in 1936. He has been active in the Labor Progressive Party since its inception. He will discuss the problems of force and violence, democracy and the nature of the State in our society today.

Athlete, Soldier, Columnist, Speaks On Feature Writing

WESSLEY HICKS

The combined talents of journalist and athlete will be offered to the campus today at 1:00 p.m. when Wessley Hicks, editorial page columnist for the Evening Telegram, addresses the student body. He will speak on the Art of Feature Writing.

This is the third in a series of Varsity-sponsored lectures on journalism. The lectures are open to any student interested in the newspaper field. Today's lecture will be held in Rm. 8 of University College.

Hicks writes a daily column, "Wait a Minute!" for The Telegram. A native of Oshawa, he attended the University of Toronto in the early '30's.

His newspaper work began with the Boston Post. Later, he was associate editor of Saturday Night. During World War II, he served 22 months with the Royal Canadian Navy. He gave up a commission in the United Kingdom to spend the final fourteen months of the war as a War Correspondent.

Hicks covered the British post-war elections, staying in Europe till April, 1946. He joined The Telegram in February, 1949, where he has been ever since.

He is married and has one child. Hicks' personality is described by a Tely staffer as "sparkling and witty—like his columns."

His athletic experiences include a year on the Varsity Blues in 1932, when they won the Dominion Championship. In 1933 he played on the Toronto Argonauts, another Dominion Championship team.

Hicks rowed for Varsity fours and eights at three Canadian Henleys. He was a member of a team which set a world distance record for light shell rowing in a Toronto-Hamilton jaunt.

Engineers Will Raise Their Fees

The Engineering Society will hold a general meeting in Convocation Hall between 1 and 2 p.m. today. They will discuss the proposed Society fee increase. All lectures have been cancelled for this time, it was announced.

"The Executive Committee of the Society found great difficulty running its social and other functions from the $3.00 per capita contribution of the students, which is part of their incidental fees," said Jim Allan, Vice-President of the Society. "We are attempting to have the fee raised, but we need the students' approval before the Caput can even consider it," he said.

One of the functions of the Society is to run the Engineering Stores, said Allan. "Our prices in the store are lower than anywhere else in town, but we could still lower them next year if we got the raise," he added.

Skule's Athletic Association needs money to cover the depreciation of it's equipment, said Bob Beattie, President of the Association. The proposed fee increase would also take care of the expenses of athletic awards and the athletic dance, he said.

Vic Objects to Role As SHARE Villain

"Everyone seems to have the impression that Vic hasn't contributed enough to the SHARE campaign," says Victoria Publicity Director Ed File. "While the figures in the Student-Help-For-Asian-Relief-and-Education SHARE interim report were more or less correct, they were presented in such a way that they made Vic look the goat of the whole campaign. Actually, as it stands, we have one way and another raised more than any other faculty."

The proceeds of the Vic Informal, amounting to about $475, must be included in the Vic total, File said. "We got companies to donate cigarettes, food, and so on, and sold them to Vic students. This is definitely part of our contribution."

The proceeds of the Vic Informal were listed separately in the SHARE report, as $417. Actually, says Vic SHARE chairman John Lewis, the dance raised about $475, which should be added to the Vic personal canvass returns of $326, to give a total of about $811.

In addition, says File, a large portion of the work for Gray Cup Parking was done by Vic students, using the grounds at Vic, including the football field.

"In view of these considerations, the Vic Executive is not very happy with the impression which the SHARE report gives, placing Vic in such a poor light," File says. "When the figures are all added up, we have put in more than Skule, even if they count in their band concert, and other activities. We do not want to be made the scapegoats, just because the campaign has not been too successful."

At present, Vic is engaged in an argument with Skule, who charge that Vic used their SHARE funds to win the Skule-sponsored band contest, then withdrew their money and gave it to SHARE themselves. The Engineers say that Vic thereby forfeited the contest, and demand the return of the prizes Vic won in the contest, including two Skule band uniforms, and the Treble Trophy. Vic claims that it won the contest, and is going to keep the loot.

ActivityCut By Service For King

The main University library, a University College Parliament, and a Student Christian Movement lecture are among the campus activities affected by the Memorial Service at 5 o'clock today at Convocation Hall.

Both the main library and the UC Reading Room will be closed from 4:45 to 6 o'clock today, but will be open tonight. Books for the weekend will be given out from 1 o'clock on at the main library, and from 2 o'clock on at the Reading Room. Both libraries will be open on Saturday.

The UC Parliament resolution "That Canada is a figment of the imagination" will be debated next Thursday instead of today.

Dr. R. L. MacDougall's talk, "Goldwin Smith and the Canadian Renaissance", the fourth in the University College Lecture series, will be given next Thursday, instead of today. The fifth talk, "Schelling's Philosophy of Religion", will be postponed until February 28.

Also postponed until next Thursday is the Student Christian Movement address on "The Sacrament of Holy Communion in the United Church" which will be given at 4:10 on February 21 in Room 37 in University College. A SCM cabinet meeting planned for 5:45 today has been cancelled completely.

THE BOARD OF STEWARDS

The Board of Stewards is the governing body of Hart House except for the Athletic Wing which is controlled by the Athletic Directorate. The Board is composed of: the Warden (as Chairman), the President of the University, a representative of the Board of Governors, two senior members appointed by the President, the Financial Secretary of the Athletic Directorate, a representative of the Faculty Union, a representative of the graduate membership, three undergraduates representing respectively the Athletic Directorate, the Student Christian Movement, and the Students' Administrative Council, and the undergraduates Secretaries of the House, Library, Music, Art, Debates, and Committee of Clubs' Committees. The Comptroller of Hart House is Secretary of the Board.

What's Your Verdict?

The case of the suffocating sponge:

Dr. Chasney, a qualified surgeon of long-standing removed the tonsils and adenoids of a five-year-old child in a routine operation. A few hours later the child stopped breathing. The nurse on duty reached in to the child's throat and removed a sponge which had been left there accidently during the operation. Artificial respiration was applied but the child died.

The father sued the doctor claiming the surgeon was negligent. It was shown that the hospital had sponges with tapes available making an error virtually impossible. They would also supply a nurse to supply the sponges. Dr. Chasney used neither of these methods. The other city hospital did use sponges with tapes.

Dr. Chesney testified to the effect that he had performed 200 similar operations without mishap and that he had made a thorough search with his fingers and forceps after the operation. It was accepted that the sponges are difficult to find when soaked with blood. Dr. Traynor, head of the Manitoba Hospital Association, gave evidence showing that Dr. Chasney's technique was the one in general practice. It was not customary to use sponges with tapes or practical to make sponge counts. He stated a search was the usual check made.

SAC at a glance

Besides discussing the budget for the University of Toronto Debating Union, last night's meeting of the Students' Administrative Council:

—decided not to request that the Champion, a National Federation of Labor Youth publication, be sold on the University campus; Bud Trivett claimed it should be sold through the "regular channels."

—passed a motion by Finance Commission Chairman Bud Trivett that The Varsity drop publication of three issues (February 15, March 6, and another) in order to "balance the budget." A fourth issue or its equivalent to be dropped at the discretion of The Varsity.

—heard that Torontonensis sales were seriously low. Discussed ways and means of increasing the sales without decreasing the budget. Planned to print a large ad in The Varsity since no supersales director could be found and personal letters would take too long. Graeme Ferguson suggested Council get to the bottom of the trouble even if it meant printing free English remedial courses and Pogo in Torontonensis.

—heard Syd Wax promise that the Russian visit question will be "threshed out" at the NFCUS executive meeting this weekend. Wax said problem of whether not to reverse the executive decision this year or to have a student national referendum will be decided.

—supported a motion to send a letter to the federal government voicing Toronto University students' support for the Colombo Plan.

—heard Linda Burrus, IV St. Hilda's, ask for committee reports.

—heard Graeme Ferguson, IV Vic, explain the correct rules for debating, and in particular certain sections on page 48, in Bourinot. Ferguson had promised to bring his copy of Debating procedure for the guidance of SAC chairman Dr. McBirnie.

Next Jupiter Production Socrates Drinks Hemlock

It was the intention of the Jupiter Theatre when they began operations last fall to present Toronto audiences with a superior brand of theatre that would at the same time try as far as possible to include new plays by Canadian playwrights. This in itself is a bold undertaking considering the dearth of good Canadian plays and playwrights, but Jupiter have decided that Lister Sinclair's new play SOCRATES measures up to the standard of plays they are producing. This places it in the category of CRIME PASSIONEL by Jean Paul Sartre, GALILEO by Bertolt Brecht, and THE BIGGEST THIEF IN TOWN by Dalton Trumbo. But of course the theatre audience still have to confirm the opinion of the Jupiter management when the play opens next week.

Sinclair has attempted to set the Dialogues of Plato on stage in a realistic situation that presents the essence of Socrates in his last two days on earth. The particular Dialogues from which Sinclair has stolen his material are The Republic, The Symposium, Crito, and The Apology.

The play itself covers almost two whole days, beginning with the morning when Socrates is declared to be the wisest man in the world by the Delphic Oracle and ending in the prison where the philosopher drinks the hemlock in the final fulfillment of his life of teaching.

Socrates is at this time very old, very ugly, and extremely humble. His disciples are for the most part young vigorous aristocrats who see the corruption of the world and of Athens and want to change the old order of things. They are the cause of fear in the magistrates of the city, who foolishly blame Socrates who is the source of this criticism.

He on the other hand is interested only in the True and the Good which to him are very real things that make up the essence of his life. Both in the feast scene where the talk is about Love, and in the trial scene where the talk is about God, Socrates shows his closeness to these values as living ideals. In both scenes he shows up the other people whose talk is comparatively superficial.

The famous image of the cave, that everyone who ever studied philosophy knows so well, figures in the text of the play too, when Socrates meets the soldiers sent to arrest him. They talk about the old philosopher whom the soldiers do not know by sight. In this one scene Sinclair has in one sense overstepped the bounds of the play but his rendering of the famous image is done in a masterly fashion.

Jupiter's production is being directed by Esse W. Lhungh the CBC director who directed a radio version of the play. In this first staging Lhungh has decided to make use of a fore-stage in the too-small Museum Theatre and to make the production as big and as imaginative as possible, in the lighting and the staging.

Featured in the cast is Frank Peddie, who played the part on the radio twice before. In the other parts are more of the original cast and other Toronto actors. Dave Gardiner of Hart House plays the actor Agathon; Don Glenn, who directed the Vic play is acting the part of Crito, and Ivan Thornley-Hall who took the lead in the campus PYGMALION plays the part of Phaedo. Others in the cast are Bob Christie, Alex McKee and Colin Eaton.

Kraus Concert

The final concert in this year's Wymilwood series will be given this Sunday by Greta Kraus, harpsichordist. As usual, the concert will begin at 9:00 p.m. in Wymilwood. Miss Kraus will bring her own newly-constructed harpsichord to play on. This instrument was made specially for her in Europe and brought to Canada last year.

Born and trained in Vienna, Miss Kraus came to Canada in 1938. She has since become one of the continent's leading harpsichordists. She plays every year for the Mendelssohn Choir's performances of the Messiah and the St. Matthew Passion.

Through her numerous performances on the CBC networks, Miss Kraus has contributed a great deal to the musical life of all Canada. On many occasions she has accompanied CBC orchestras in performances of 18th century music, and in 1950 she was soloist almost every week on the Bach Bicentenary Series.

Miss Kraus has performed before both in Hart House and in Wymilwood, and is well known to students on this account. She also teaches both piano and harpsichord at the Royal Conservatory of Music.

Sunday's concert will consist of works written during the 17th and 18th centuries. The harpsichord is one of the keyboard instruments for which the piano is not entirely adequate as substitute. Works seldom heard in their original form will be heard Sunday as they were written.

Hart House Film Showing

The gallery used by the National Film Board is the Toronto Art Gallery. The second picture is a short colour cartoon, which shows an abstract hen dancing to waltzes and reels of old time French Canadian barn dances.

The Electrician

The electrician in a theatre is so important a position in the backstage crew that his job is usually relegated to a member of a union, but there are those who would like to know about lighting for no particular reason except they are afraid of the dark with elaborations. They are the kind of people who have no interest in theatre but are moved rather to produce pretty colours for the sake of the colours.

Those on the campus would do well to follow the example of the Hart House Electrician who being a full fledged union man doesn't care about colours or even lighting, but in doing his job when he is asked or told. "Dim" William Neen is at the fore-front of his profession due almost entirely to his self-effacing attitude to his work. Rumour has it that his nickname was given him because of his devotion to duty. Once when told to dim the lights he dimmed himself through sheer will-power and could not return to his original brilliance. Of course there are other reasons put forward as to the source of this particular nickname. Others just blame it on his lack of colour, which is due in turn to his preference for electric light over daylight. Rules:

(1) Electricians have a reputation for being disreputable and loose, and then sleeping it off on the job. Live up to this.

(2) When in doubt, one must accept the responsibility — take a bit of a shock. What's a few hundred volts?

BIG A-NIGHT THIS SATURDAY

Blue Relay Team

Buffalo State Here For Basketball Tilt

What will probably be the biggest Athletic Night thing year will be held this Saturday, at Hart House. The Blue and Junior Varsity basketball teams, the swim team, the gym team, will all be in action, and the Interfaculty wrestling meet will also be held.

The Blues play Buffalo State Teachers' College, their first game in a week and a half. Buffalo State beat the Blues in Buffalo the first of last month in a close contest, in which neither Natanson nor Monnot was in the Toronto line-up.

Buffalo's big gun last year, Milt Garfield, who scored 29 points against the Blues in the game at Mutual, was ineligible to play last term, but we hear is back with the team now. Garfield put on one of the best one-man team acts ever seen in college basketball in Toronto.

The Junior Varsity will play a team calling themselves the St. Catharines All-Stars. They are made up mostly of Niagara Falls Collegiate players, including the McKenzie brothers, Dick and Carl, and Howie Triano, all of whom turned in sensational performances in the Ontario Secondary Schools basketball championships here last Easter. Other players come from various parts of the Niagara Peninsula. The All-Stars have been operating as a team, more or less the same players, for a couple of years now, as well as playing with their respective high school teams.

The swim team takes on Wayne University of Detroit. Wayne beat the Blues last year, though the Toronto team of Stulac, McIlroy, and Bate that competed in the Michigan State AAU meet in December placed ahead of Wayne's entries.

The gym team has its big night of the year; the Intercollegiate meet, which is a contest between Varsity and McGill, gymnastics being the popular thing they are in this country. Hugh Alexander, III Vic, and Frank Grmek are being most heavily relied on. Other stalwarts wearing the Blue and White will be Mike Dignam and Jim Dooley, head cheerleader last fall. Grmek, who has much European experience, is a good bet for individual honours.

The Interfaculty wrestling finals will occupy the wrestling room, while the usual bill of dances, games, and movies will also be on tap.

Laval Pucksters Arrive Saturday

The second place Laval Red and Gold invade Toronto on Saturday for a week-end double-header with the hockey Blues at Varsity Arena. Saturday's game will start at 2 p.m. and the Monday night game at 7 p.m. U.C.C. and U.T.S., arch prep school rivals will play the second part of the Monday double bill commencing at 9.15.

The Blues will ice the same team that soundly whipped the league leading Montreal Carabins here two weeks ago by the score of 9-4. Jack Ross will take up his regular position in goal with Red Stephen, Al Fasan, Paul Prendergast and Gerry Fitzhenry forming the defence in front of him.

Varsity's top scorer Don Rope will centre Johnny Adams and speedy Jack Wheldrake. Jack MacKenzie who scored two goals in the Blues' last game will be setting up plays for Phil Arrowsmith and Captain Ernie Frey, the left wing opportunist who turned in the hat trick in the Montreal game. Hard checking Norm Fox will centre the third line with Al Conboy and Pete Vernon playing on the wings.

Laval brings an aggressive group of hockey players who have proved their right to be part of the Intercollegiate loop. This is only Laval's second year in the league but already they have displayed a much stronger team than the Queen's entry which they replaced in 1950.

The Quebeckers at present boast three of the league's top ten scorers.

Roger Lagace and his brother Jean Marque are both tied for fourth place in the scoring race with 10 points. Team mate Claude Roy, a former Toronto St. Mike's star is close behind him with 9 points. Laval, so far this year, has whipped the Blues twice by scores of 4-3 and 6-3 in Quebec City. However, home ice has played an important part in the outcome of most games this season, and consequently it is likely that the Blues will provide much stiffer opposition on Toronto ice.

Any way you look at it, this week is crucial for both teams — either one particularly has to take both games in order to catch the front running Carabins. A split would all but eliminate both teams. It should be an interesting week-end with the second place position in the league at stake.

Trackmen Go To States Visit Buffalo, Michigan

Varsity sends two track teams to the U.S.A. this weekend. A medley relay team goes to Lansing, Michigan, to enter the Michigan State Relays. A second team goes to a meet at the Buffalo Armories.

The relay team going to Michigan State University will consist of Murray Gaziuk leading off with the 880, Eric Kofmel following with the 440, Mal Crawford next, running three-quarters of a mile, and Charlie Wortman finishing with the mile.

The relay will be the main thing the team will be concentrating on, since the competition in individual events makes entry in them pretty hopeless. Gaziuk may enter the 600 as well as the relay, and Wortman will probably try the two-mile again.

Other teams competing will be Michigan (last year's winners), Michigan State, Notre Dame, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Purdue, Ohio State, Wisconsin, Northwestern, Michigan Normal, Bowling Green, Baldwin - Wallace, and possibly others.

The team going to Buffalo will consist of Doug Wilson, Jack Warga, George Webster, George McMullen, and possibly Clint Husband. They will enter the mile relay there, and probably other events as well.

Mat Prelims For A-Night

There were five preliminary matches fought in the senior Intramural wrestling championships yesterday. All the bouts were in the 157 and 167 pound weights because these are the most entries in these classes. The first round bouts will continue tomorrow noon and tomorrow night with the finals at the athletic night.

Best match of the evening was the one between Vic Pitkanen of Vic and Hiekki Auwinen of UC. Pitkanen was behind 5-4 at the end of the match but he tied it up in time advantage. In the overtime round he got the takedown and managed to hang on for the two minutes. Auwinen was the favourite as the Vic boy had gone up in weight.

Danny Cucin PHE dropped Frank Manuel of Meds in 48 seconds. Cucin pulled a snap takedown and pressed for the fall. In the other 157 pound bout Jack Taylor SPS also above his weight lost a fall to Pete Nichols PHE in 4.12. Taylor was also above his weight class and kept the score even until Nichols' weight told the tale.

There were two 167 pound contests. In the opener, Pete Beatty, Vic, dropped Bob Watson, Meds. Beatty got the takedown in the first round. He quickly reversed in the second and after one near fall pinned Watson.

In the second bout Glen McCormick took only twenty seconds in the second round to pin Ronan Cheops Forestry. McCormick hung on top in the first, reversed and pinned in the second.

HOCKEY

POT I hockey team defeated Vic I by the score of 1 to 0 in a noon hour game at the arena, yesterday. The play was close and fairly even in the first two periods with neither squad netting a goal.

The Physots opened up in the third period with repeated rushes on goal but the Vicsters net-minder kept the disc at bay. The Scarlet and Gold defence failed to clear the puck out of their end and the POT girls finally hit the light.

Star of the game was Joan Wickware in the Vic nets. The Therapists outskated and outshot their opponents, but Joan kept their scoring down. Ginny Goulding and Joan Vanderwater also played well for the Vicsters. For POT, Molly Bark and Pat Thompson turned in good performances on the forward line, while Pran Annesley shone on defence.

In the first volleyball game at the Lillian Massey gym last night, St. Hilda's I downed UC I 42 to 24 in one of the most exciting games seen so far this season. The UC team played a steady defensive game, but the St. Hilda's nete line, aided by the setting up plays of Janet Jefferies proved too much for their opponents. Janet Abbott and Joan Mulvaney were outstanding in a losing cause.

In the second tilt, PHE I fought to a close 27 to 20 lead over Vic I. The Physeds showed their superiority in the rotation first half, bouncing up a total of 19 points to the Vicsters 9.

Helen Tsandi and Joan Creary sparked the PHE team, while Dot Parkinson and Mavis Reid played steady games for Vic.

Pitching Sportshoes

Featuring yesterday's water polo action was the clean sweep by Meds teams of the three games they had part in. Five were played.

Meds I swamped SPS in the main event by a 5-1 score. Silverstein threw in 3 goals for the doctors; D. Mortimer and N. Mortimer got one apiece. Prendergast got Skule on the scoresheet.

Trinity A blanked Skule Seconds, 2-0. Both goals were racked up by Roger. Meds III piled up a 6-0 margin over UC III. Miller and MacArtly scored in the first half and Meds came on strong in the second with markers by Evans, Palmer, Rosen and Mendelson. Wycliffe A took a close one from the Law team. It was 2-0, with Armstrong and Hazard garnering the points.

Finally, Meds VI rolled up seven goals while holding SPS IV to a single. Warmaj spearheaded the Meds' attack with a trio of goals. Moran and Bates netted a pair each. McLachlan saved the engineers from a goose-egg.

There were a couple of games in major league basketball. Jr. UC won a thriller from Dent A's, 30-26. The Redmen took a 6-point bulge in the first period and the drillers shaved one off this in each of the last stanzas but it wasn't enough to win. Every man on both teams threw in his share of points although Brown got 7 for UC and Kidd 7 for Dents.

Jr. SPS walloped Jr. Vic., 40-25. Day was the spark of the enineers with ten points. Bristow hooped 8 for the losers.

In the minor loop, PHE A trounced Trinity Crumpets, 62-28. Peebles dropped in 16 for Phys-Ed. McKenzie with 12 and Wass with 10 were not far behind. Spinney, 11, and Graham, 9, took care of most of the Trinity scoring.

Music took the measure of II Eng. Bus, 49-11. Four men got all the points for the musicians — Gulka, 16; Clark, 13; LaPointe, 10, and Green, 10. Cohen did his best for Skule with 6.

Meds IV-year whipped Trinity Orphans, 65-16. Hutchison netted 18 for the winners and Mackenzie got 15. Birnbaum had 10 and Ditchburn 9.

on the sideline

By CAROL LOGAN

The try-outs for the Intercollegiate hockey and volleyball teams were started today, with futures both bright and gloomy. Although hockey, if the enthusiasm of players and spectators alike means anything, is the hottest spring term female sport, its Intercoll. program is completely overshadowed by basketball and the new infant, volleyball. As we have already moaned, this ghastly state of affairs is not due to any lack of eagerness on Varsity's part. If the other universities won't play, there doesn't seem to be anything we can do about it. We will have to be content with whatever opposition is to be found off the campus.

The Intercollegiate v-ball squad has a much happier outlook. The second Intercoll. tourney will be held at McMaster on the 1st of March, with teams from Western, OAC, McMaster, and Varsity competing. An exhibition match will be played with McMaster sometime before the big meet.

Verdict

The trial judge dismissed the claim. He said a surgeon must be as skilful as a normal member of the profession and that he must be careful. However, he cannot be held liable for accidental slips. Expert evidence is conclusive on the question of negligence.

On appeal the court awarded the father $5,000. One judgment stated that the practice of medicine is progressive and by failing to use techniques available the surgeon assumed the responsibility for the risk incurred. In non-technical matters medical evidence could not be presumed conclusive but would have to be weighed with all the facts.

This case decided in 1949 illustrates a general problem: Whether the customary practices of a profession or business are sufficient to protect those who rely on their services. Similar cases arise concerning lawyers, accountants, bankers and others.

Won Contest

Skule band uniforms, which were to be given back to Skule in the event that the Lady Godiva Memorial Band won the contest.

File claims this money was raised for SHARE, and it didn't matter whether it was contributed directly, or through the contest. At any rate, the contest may have been won illegally, but it was won, and Vic has no intention of returning the prizes.

Revenge is threatened by Skule if the Trophy is not returned. "We will march on Vic as we did on University College two years ago," says Scott.

Made in the machine shop of the Electrical Building for the first of the annual Skule-sponsored band contests last year, the Trophy is a very attractive copper bar bent into the form of a cleft. Concern has been expressed by Skule that the "barbarians from the north" will disfigure the "lovely, hand-made Trophy."

Naturally, File says, a slight bit of money has been set aside to commemorate the occasion of winning it, since it was presented to Vic absolutely bare.

Meanwhile, the two uniformless members of the LGMB are wearing overalls and straw hats.

White Dove

The Engineers have done it again. This year they seem to have crossed a dove with a groundhog, to obtain a bird which hibernates during the winter months.

A year ago, a brand-new dove of peace—slightly grease-smeared, possibly, from its engineering associations—flew out of the old Peace Council nest. For a while great hopes were held for the fledgeling, but one day when it was just beginning to fly it got drowsy and plummeted swiftly out of sight.

When a group of students, mostly Engineers, took over the Peace Council executive last March, it was considered a brilliant coup. By suddenly joining the Council in force at the last business meeting of the year, they managed to gain a majority of members and elected their officers. In doing so the group used a totalitarian technique of block membership. But the events of this year would indicate it lacked the saving graces — which totalitarians always have — of organization and purpose.

For a while, the NEW Peace Council showed signs of life. In this year's Handbook, it promised "purified" methods, but maintained the same end of peace. There was even a public meeting early in the year, at which a World Federalist explained his plan for world unity. The implication was that this was the first in a series of talks on ways to peace.

Then, in late November, the Council held its first business meeting. The result: a decision to investigate amalgamation with the campus United Nations Club, since the two organizations ostensibly have the same purpose — or so they argued.

Since then the executive has presumably been investigating the amalgamation. At any rate, nothing has been heard from it or the Council as a whole. Even the UN Club has not been contacted. It has been left to the Student Christian Movement to hold a series of talks on "The Nature and Attainment of World Peace."

Ever since its move to amalgamate last fall, the Peace Council seems to have maintained an unyielding peace — the peace of absolute inaction. At best, it would seem that the dove of peace has laid an egg.

Red Heart

"Wherein lies happiness?" asks Keats —
"In that which becks
Our ready minds to fellowship divine,
A fellowship with essence; till we shine,
Full alchemiz'd, and free of space . . . the crown . . .
Is made of love and friendship, and sits high
Upon the forehead of humanity.
. . . but at the tip-top,
There hangs by unseen film, an orbed drop
Of light, and that is love:"

When Keats wrote this early in the 1800's it was awfully fashionable to be romantic and so-o in love. In fact Keats felt that the world could not go on if "souls did not kiss and greet".

Today we live in a cynics' world. Perhaps we still feel the delicate emotions of the Romantic School but we cloak them in the inane crudities of commercialism. "Roses are red, violets are blue . . ." and all that.

But every once in a while the "orbed drop of light" peeps through our pseudo-sophistication. While we hide ourselves in shame lest emotion reign, it's rather pleasant too, to feel that all the exquisitely beautiful and delightful sentiments have not been uprooted, but are still growing in the crevices of our armour. Especially when today is Valentine's Day.

Class Education

And Critical Thinkers

Shirley Endicott, fourth year Sociology student at Victoria, comments on University education and society. She is Chairman of the University of Toronto Labour Progress Club.

The current discussion on the crisis in education has overlooked a vital factor — the society in which we live with its conflicting values and pressures. These conflicting pressures lead to cynicism and apathy on the part of the students.

Thus on one hand, education is held up as the road to individual advancement. "Education is beginning to count more and more. I don't think you can be successful without it," is a common thought. Only by a university education can one get the well-paid, high status positions of doctors, managers, or lawyers.

Why then should people with well-paid and high status positions such as Sidney Smith be annoyed when students want to get practical education and shy away from the non-lucrative humanities courses. Even President Smith himself thinks "getting ahead" is important, for in his report he gave advice to young graduates on how to get more money.

Then, on the other hand, we are told that we have a responsibility to the community as a whole. After all, we are "the future leaders of society". But how can one be successful in one's job and still be responsible to the community? Being a success in our society involves fighting against everyone else. As Karl Marx has said, under capitalism, "every man finds in other men, not the realization but rather the limits of his freedom."

If responsibility is involved, it is only to one's board of Directors, or Deacons, to the Bar association, or to the shareholders. Is it possible to be morally obligated to serve the community as a whole or do we not have to take sides in carrying out our social responsibility? If we feel something to be detrimental to the "community" we are sure to discover someone is making money out of it. The latter attacks us as being irresponsible social disrupters, or maybe even as "Reds". The fear of being so slandered is stopping many students from developing any sense of social responsibility at all.

Then too, we are told that the purpose of university education is to develop "critical thinking". But the cold war atmosphere has infected the university too. I know people who are afraid to go to hear certain speakers or receive certain publications through the mail because these speakers and papers challenge the status quo. The fear of being suspected as a Communist is inhibiting thought and action. It is counteracting the traditional high ideals of university education.

Mr. Pearson calls on the universities to train more clear-thinking students but the policies of his government are primarily to blame for the atmosphere of cynicism and apathy.

Furthermore, if it is intellectual ability that is wanted why is financial ability made the criterion for entering university? Is it not because those who come from the higher income groups will be less critical of the important institutions in our society? Is it not because the opportunities for success, even as defined above, are decreasing rather than increasing?

It is a well known fact that competition for the "good" jobs is stiff these days. High university fees serve well to limit that competition within certain favored groups. The result of this situation is, that there are many students who are only interested in passing their course. They came to university "to meet the right people" or because "it was the thing to do", not because they wanted to be better educated. This situation could, and should, be alleviated by making university education free with academic standing as the only criterion.

A remedy for the problem of the double standards and conflicting values held up to the students can hardly be found short of a new type of social system which does not have these contradictions in it. The competitive "dog eat dog" nature of our society makes individual success incompatible with social responsibility.

Changing a social system is a large order, admittedly, but there are other changes possible which do not necessitate such radical thoughts. For example, if, instead of the hysterical cold war, anti-Soviet situation that exists now, with all its uncertainties for young people, Canada with all other countries was disarming, trading with the Soviet Union and China, her peace-time industries expanding as a consequence, this change would have an effect on the universities. There would be money to reduce fees. There would be opportunities for jobs in industries that are working to build up the civilization we have been studying for four years, instead of working to destroy it. The fear of being labelled as "subversive" would be lessened and "critical thinking" would have a much better chance to develop.

This may seem far fetched but there are reports from the United States that the war situation with conscription has made students so anxious and uncertain that they have even taken to stealing examination questions. Canadian students have the same anxieties. The difference is one of degree.

I Shot An Arrow Into The Air It Fell But Where

Pwaaang!! What was that? I saw an arrow set squarely between my hip-pockets. I yanked it out, and suppressing an overwhelming desire to kiss Dean Ferguson, looked for the culprit.

He was a scantily dressed brat of about 10, cigarette drooping from his mouth, and carrying a large crossbow. I noticed he had a pair of wings.

"You must be damn stupid to do a thing like that," he hollered.

"Howdja guess, Mac? I'm Dan Cupid's brother. The jerk was cleaning his cross-bow yesterday, and didn't know it was loaded. So he shot himself, and now he's in bed with a bad case of lovesickness (come ta think of it—she's not too bad at all.) "So," he said, spitting out his gum, "I'm taking his place—and, boy, am I having fun! Get a load of this. Just ten minutes ago I had Fergie chasing a poor MPC freshman down the UC basement. Right now Dean Whistle and Principal John Ray are wrestling over Miss Sparks' band—and get this—I even made William Glenesk lower his nose to say 'hello' to a lowly Hart House actress—)heh! I had to use six arrows that time! and? I cut him off.

"Give me the bow;" I put some extra potion on the arrow and shot myself. Then I aimed at a voluptuous blonde coming out of UC and fired. But just then she bent down to straighten her stocking. The arrow missed, but found its mark in a walrus-like creature waddling its way from the UC rotunda. It spotted me. As it lumbered closer, I noticed no flippers, but two fat bow legs, and a body, vaguely resembling that of a woman. It grabbed me with its monstrous arms and pulled me to its bosom, which gave way like quick sand. Its stout whiskers brushed my face until I could no longer bear it. With a mighty lunge I escaped and ran to the urchin:

Damn it, damn it, isn't there any antidote?

Yeah, sure, he said . . . hop on my back. I'll take you to Sam's joint.

I climbed on. His wings faltered momentarily, then he charged ahead. It followed—but we gained time by flying over traffic lights while it bulldozed through them. We made quite an impression, so much so that I understand the KCR is closed down and renamed the Knights of Columbus Room owing to lack of business. Finally we arrived at Sam's bun shop. I dashed and bought the first gun in sight. As the monster came charging through the door, I pulled the trigger. It fell in a crazed passion crying, You can't shoot me in cold blood—I've got my love to keep me warm—a haa haaa haa . . .

Right now I'm eating my last dinner,—the minister should be coming soon and I can see through my bars that they're getting the gallows ready. I ask you—is it fair?

Must Wait Till Fall For NFCUS Vote

By IAN MONTAGNES

Ottawa, Feb. 17 —(Staff)— The question of Soviet student visits to Canada will not be settled until next fall, according to the decision of the National Federation of Canadian University Students' (NFCUS) Executive meeting in Ottawa last weekend.

However, questionnaires will be sent in the meantime to all member universities to determine accurately student opinion on the matter and investigate the practical problems of the visit. A final decision will be reached at the Annual NFCUS Conference to be held at Laval University (Montreal) next autumn.

The NFCUS Executive felt the new referendum necessary because of the confusion of the previous student votes, in which both resolutions and voting bodies differed widely among universities and did not "provide a satisfactory basis for an intelligent decision on such an important matter."

"In view of the decisive expression of student interest in the visit," the Executive decided, "the matter should be given complete and serious consideration." The Executive said it respected Canadian student wishes and realized consideration of the issue runs counter to the express decision made at London last September.

The new questionnaire begins with the visit principle, asking if each student council favors a visit to Canada of a Russian student delegation of 12 to 15 members for about a three-week period, and a corresponding reciprocal visit. It also states definitely that the present NFCUS budget cannot possibly finance such a tour across Canada, and asks if student councils favor raising necessary funds from student and/or community sources. "It is understood that cost of transportation of such a visit must be borne by visiting delegation," the questionnaire adds.

The Executive also asks whether the group should be cultural in nature, as well as consist of student leaders. Suggested purposes of the visit are to enable Russian and Canadian students to meet and discuss problems of mutual interest, and to enable Russian students to observe Canadian life and Canadian campi. While the questionnaire is circulating, the International Activities Commission (IAC) will attack the tour's technical problems, financial and otherwise, to have all the facts available for presentation at Laval. This will entail contacting the Russian student organization for further details of the tour, and investigating the possibility of obtaining clearance for such a group from the government.

The final decision of NFCUS Executive will take into account both the referendum and the IAC findings, it was decided.

The Executive also decided not to hold a National Summer Seminar this year, following the recommendation of McGill (Montreal) NFCUS Committee which advised postponement because of lack of interest. McGill said it had received only one reply to the seminar questionnaire which was sent to all university members.

Blues Nip Laval 5-4 McKenzie Scores 3

By BARRY THOMAS

Sparked by a brilliant three-goal effort of rangy centreman Jack MacKenzie, the Varsity Blues emerged on the winning side of a 5-4 count in a see-saw hockey game played against Laval at Varsity Arena on Saturday afternoon.

The two teams produced plenty of action in the game, played before about 2,000 fans, in which the lead was exchanged several times. Although not as rough as previous encounters the contest provided its fair share of penalties. Altogether 17 minors were meted out by the referees.

Varsity gained two points on the second place Laval team by virtue of the win but is still two points behind the Quebeckers who have played two more games than the Blues. The loss was costly to Laval who, like the Blues needed a pair of week-end victories in order to catch the league leading Montreal Carabins.

The visitors started the game in great style and pressed the Blues constantly for the first ten minutes of the opening period. Robert Lafreniere potted a pair of goals to give Laval an early lead, and it wasn't till near the end of the same period that Varsity finally replied with a goal by veteran Pete Vernon after a sustained goal mouth attack. Centre Norm Fox poassed the puck out from the corner to Vernon who rapped a fifteen-footer beneath goalie Raymond Vezina.

The second period which was the best played, produced five goals, three from the sticks of the Blues. MacKenzie tied up the score when he finished off a power play with Frey and Wheldrake drawing assists. Captain Frey put the Blues in the lead for the first time when he slapped in a shot from defenceman Gerry Fitzhenry. Varsity also had a-man advantage on this goal.

Laval however bounced right back with two fast goals. Raymond Laroche fired a long shot from just inside the blue line which hit the inside of goalie Jack Ross's left pad and careened into the net. Roland Dubeau put Laval back in the lead when he scored after taking a pass from Claude Laraochelle. MacKenzie got his second goal to again tie the score with Frey and Arrowsmith picking up assists.

The same three players duplicated their efforts early in the final period and that was the end of the scoring. The Blues, with Ross making several great glove hand stops, stayed off the Laval attack for the rest of the period even when goalie Vezina was removed in favour of a sixth attacker in the last 55 seconds of the game.

The same two teams hook up again tonight in the first half of a doubleheader in which U.T.S. and U.C.C. will play in the nightcap. The intercollegiate game commences at 7 p.m.. The admission for both games is one A.T.L. card.

Rink Remarks: The Roy boys were best for the visitors, with Rod the mainstay of the defence while Claude led many dangerous rushes up front . . . Vezina played well in the Laval nets and especially shone in the first period against the Rope-Wheldrake-Adams line . . . in general, Laval seems to be the best of the three Blues' opponents, providing a better balanced team than either Montreal or McGill . . . Gerry Fitzenry was the pick of the Varsity defence which too frequently was caught out of position . . . two of Laval's goals were the direct results of defensive lapses by the Varsity squad . . . Don Rope, as usual, played a tireless game. . . . Paul Prendergast was used sparingly as was the Fox-Vernon-Conboy line . . . according to statistician Humph Gilbert, Laval outshot the Blues, 28-25 . . . only in the second period did Varsity have an advantage . . . the referees missed some obvious interference while Laval was scoring their second goal. . . . Laval actually scored in the third period after a wild goal mouth pile-up but the goal was disallowed . . . after the game Mackenzie was quick to share much of his scoring credit with his linemates Frey and Arrowsmith, who both played well.

Line-ups:

Toronto: Goal, Ross; defence, Fitzhenry and Stephen; centre, Rope; wings, Adams and Wheldrake. Alternates: MacKenzie, Frey, Arrowsmith, Fox, Vernon, Conboy.

Laval: Goal, Vezina; defence, R. Roy and LaRoche, Talbot, Chabigny; forwards, C. Roy, Dubeau, J. Lagace, Marceau, R. Lagace, LaRochelle, Houle, Boulet and Lafreniere.

Skule, UC Share Senior Mat Titles

At Saturday's Athletic Night the Senior Intramural Wrestling champions for 1951-52 were crowned. SPS had the evening's best showing winning four of the nine titles. US was second winning three.

The closest contest of the evening was between Larry Skitch PHE and Doug Hamilton SPS. Hamilton won 6-4 on time advantage to give Skule the 191 pound title. When Hamilton got the takedown Skitch reversed to tie the score. Then on the bottom throughout the second Skitch again reversed to go ahead 4-2. However, Hamilton reversed in the last period to set up the victory.

Glen McCarmick, UC, and Phil Henderson, PHE put up another rousing display. These two intercollegiate candidates who have been disputing the 167 lb. spot all season really turned on the heat. Henderson got the initial takedown and after a reversal by McCormick he used his arm roll to get on top again. He gained two more points for time advantage as he won the match 6-2.

Bill Chykaliuk UC earned an expected decision over Leon Smith SPS 5-0. After bulling through the first round Chykaliuk escaped at the start of the second. Then he scored with a take-down. Smith never got away from him; so adding on time advantage he won 5-0.

There were two upsets during the evening. Timo Pallandi dumped Ernie Dryden, Vic, to become heavyweight champion. Pallandi, PHE in trouble in the bout until the end, finally gained some life and reversed. Then he applied the pressure to Dryden and surprisingly pinned the veteran wrestler at 5.42.

The other upset came in the 157 pound tilt. John Medcoff UC opened with the takedown and seemed determined to score a quick win. He had Jack Taylor SPS in trouble continuously for the first two minutes. However, Taylor rolled out on top and pinned Medcoff with just five seconds left in the period.

Stan Kopera, PHE, and Paul Phelan SPS put on a spirited display in the 147 pound contest. Phelan scored the only points on the initial takedown and on time advantage. This reversed the junior interfaculty results when Kopera won 2-0.

George Vestos pinned Jack Christie in 1.43 of the first to win the 123 pound championship.

Walt Pittman won the 130 pound title for Trinity in 2.39 of the first.

McGill Fencers Champions, 41-21

Toronto didn't fare too well in the intercollegiate fencing championships held at the Athletic night at Hart House. The Blues lost all three classes to McGill, the only entry in the contest. The combined score in the contest was 41-21 for the Redmen.

The foil event was very one-sided as McGill dominated this class winning by the score of 13-3. Varsity looked slightly better in the other classes losing both the sabre, 9-7, and the epee, 19-11.

Blue Relay Team Comes Fourth In Medley At Michigan State

Toronto's Distance Medley Relay Team of Eric Kofmel, Murray Gaziuk, Mal Crawford, and Chuck Wortman placed fourth in the 2½ mile distance medley relay at the Michigan State Relays Saturday night at Lansing, Michigan. The event was won by the University of Michigan in 10 minutes 4 seconds, to break Michigan's own record of 10 minutes 8 seconds set last year. Varsity finished in 10:42 to settle for fourth place, a step and a half behind Notre Dame which placed third. Michigan State finished second.

Kofmel, who ran a 51-second 440 to lead off, was accidentally tripped as he came in to make the pass to Gaziuk. He finished his part of the race in a three-way tie for second place with Notre Name and Michigan State, all three runners converging on one spot where their respective half-milers were waiting. There was a tangle of legs, and Kofmel went down across the finish line. Gaziuk turned back, went down on his knees and grabbed the baton in both hands. By the time he got up and started running he was in last place.

Gaziuk poured it on in the last 300 yards and pulled up from last place to draw alongside the Michigan State runner who was running second. His 880 was timed at two minutes flat, including the time spent going back for the baton when Kofmel fell. This would make his time about 1:57 which ranks with his best ever.

When Crawford took the baton for his three-quarter mile, the Notre Dame runner passed him like a shot, and Bowling Green and Michigan Normal passed him soon after. He had repassed the Michigan Normal runner and drawn abreast of Bowling Green when Chuck Wortman took over for the mile.

Wortman ran a very good 4:28 mile, pulling clear of Bowling Green and overtaking Notre Dame. The latter runner, John Alexander of Montreal, caught Wortman on the last quarter, however, to drop Toronto back to fourth place.

But for the unfortunate mix-up at the end of the 440, Toronto showed at least as much as any of the teams in the race except Michigan, whose nearly all-Canadian team ran away from the field easily.

Several Canadians distinguished themselves at the meet. John Carroll of Montreal ran a 49-second 440 to lead off the medley for Michigan, and Don McEwan of Ottawa, ran a 3:09 three-quarter in the third leg. John Moule of Hamilton ran a 1:57 half mile in the two-mile relay, in which McEwan also ran a good half mile. Outstanding performer for Michigan, however, was John Ross of Oakville, who ran a 4:13 mile to anchor the medley relay and a 1:52 half mile to anchor the two-mile relay. Ross, a sophomore, is a good bet for Canada's Olympic team, judging by his meteoric rise this seasqn. Along with Drake's Dewey Johnston, who won the 1,000 yards and the two mile, he was the outstanding runner of the night.

Drake's Jim Lavery, from Calgary, won the 600 in a tremendous 1:12.3. Michigan's Roy Pella, from Sudbury, placed sixth in the shot put with a heave of slightly over 46'. Another Michigander, Nilson, won the shot with 53'7".

Murray Gaziuk, who pulled up from last place to overhaul the second place runner at the Michigan State Relays, talks a race over with coach Hal Brown. Gaziuk runs an invitation mile with Gehrman and Wilt in Buffalo next month.

Blue Runners Place Third At Buffalo

A University of Toronto mile relay team placed third in a college meet at the Buffalo Armories, Saturday, finishing a couple of paces behind McMaster and ten seconds behind Syracuse's team, which won the other heat. Syracuse set a blazing pace right through the race, to clock in at 3:27.2, an average of 52 seconds for each quarter mile.

George Webster, generally a miler and two miler, came down to the quarter to run the first leg of the race for Varsity, and passed the baton to Doug McEnteer in about fourth place. McEnteer pulled up even with third, and George McMullen pulled ahead and held third place.

Warga ran a very good last leg, probably about 52 seconds with a flying start. He passed the third place man, and finished a step behind Koenig of McMaster to get second in the heat, at 3:37.2.

George McMullen and George Webster placed fifth and sixth in the mile, both finishing in about 4:30. The race was won in 4:26 by Morgan of Alfred College. Morgan placed third last year in the 1,000 at Hamilton, in the indoor meet there.

Doug Wilson and Jack Warga ran heats of the 300 before the mile relay.

The races were run on the armories' hardwood floor, with the runners wearing rubber soled shoes, unlike their teammates at Lansing, who were able to wear spikes. The relay team had the fifth and outside lane for all their passes in the meet's unusual way of regulating the exchanges. As a result the runners had to swing out to the outside lane on every exchange.

Varsity will send a full team down for the big 178th Infantry meet in the armories, March 15. Murray Gaziuk is to run in the invitation mile with Don Gehrman and Fred Wilt in that meet, and other Varsity men will be entered in open events.

Blues 46-39 Over Wayne Swim Team

The Varsity Swimming Team won their meet with Wayne University Saturday night by the close score of 45-39 on total points. The final result was in doubt all the way and Varsity had to take the last race to clinch the win. The Varsity squad did win seven of the ten events but Wayne swimmers generally managed to take second and third to keep fairly even on total.

George Stulac, Olympic hopeful, swam a very strong race in the 150-yard medley for about the best individual performance. During the backstroke and breast stroke laps, Jenks of Wayne stuck with Stulac but as they entered the crawl, it was no race as Stulac pulled away. Doug Gibson won the 220-yard freestyle and the 440 freestyle. Al Haig won the 50-yard freestyle handily. McElroy was the other Varsity individual winner, taking the 200-yard backstroke.

Varsity teams won in both relays, the 300-yard medley and the 440-yard medley and the 440-yard freestyle. In the medley, it was George Stulac again, swimming the crawl lap, and running away with it. DaDeppo was a tower of strength for Wayne, winning the 200-yard breast stroke, finishing second in the 220 freestyle and third in the 440 freestyle. Lagerkvist also swam in three races, winning the 100-yard freestyle. Wayne gained considerable ground, sweeping the diving competition.

B-Ball Team Downs Buffalo 56-46 Monnot, Lukenda And Fawcett Star

The Varsity Blues took an early lead and held it through four quarters of fast basketball to down Buffalo State 56 to 46 at Hart House Saturday night. Varsity's close checking held Buffalo's ace Milt Garfield down to 13 points. Although Garfield was high scorer of the night, he scored 29 points against the Blues last year. Varsity lost that game in overtime.

Ray Monnot was high scorer for the Blues in the low-scoring game with 12 points. Lukenda hooped 11 and Fawcett 10. A good crowd turned out to see the game and they saw good basketball featuring a close contest between two evenly matched ball clubs.

The first quarter started off slowly with both teams checking very closely. Buffalo State had a tough time all night trying to crack the effective zone defence which the Blues set up. Monnot and Fawcett sprang loose to score in the opening seconds. By the end of a see-saw first quarter the Blues held a 10-7 lead.

The second quarter started off fast with Gary Glover scoring on a neat hand-off from Art Binnington. Buffalo, still stymied by Varsity's zone defence, succeeded in opening up the game somewhat with the result that fast breaks began to pay off. Monnot tapped in two in a row for the Blues to put Varsity ahead, 26-13. Van Loan replied for State, but Eddie Brennen, who had hard luck with his shots all night, caged one for the Blues. Garfield electrified the crowd with a fantastic running push shot from centre in the dying seconds of the first half to make the score 31-20 for the Blues.

Varsity opened the second half with two quick baskets by Huyke and Fawcett in the first 30 seconds. Fawcett connected again with a long set shot, and he followed it up with another good heave to give Varsity a fat 41-22 margin. Garfield and Wukovitz came back for the Statemen to make the score 46-33 at the end of the period.

State's Negro flash, Wally Handy, who showed some clever ballhandling in the Harlem Globetrotter tradition, opened the last quarter with a quick lay-up. The two quintettes matched each other point for point until with a little more than two minutes remaining Garfield dropped in a basket from an almost impossible angle to narrow Varsity's lead to eight points at 54-46. Fawcett sank two foul shots in the remaining seconds as Varsity hung on to make the final score 56-46.

Jayvees Win Beat St. Kitts

The Varsity Jay Vees, and especially star guard Leo Madden, were a little too much for the outclassed St. Catharines All-Stars at Hart House Saturday as the JV's came through with a convincing 69-49 win. Madden, hitting consistently on long set shots, was high scorer of the game with 19 points.

The All-Stars, composed of players from various sections of the Niagara Peninsula, were paced by the McKenzie brothers, Dick and Carl, until they both fouled out in the last quarter. Dick was best for the losers with 13 points.

Varsity jumped into a quick lead in the first quarter as Russell and Madden combined to build up a 14-3 nargin with five minutes gone. McKenzie's lay-up and pair of free throws pulled the Stars up to 16-9, but the period ended with Toronto out in front 22-11, a lead which they lengthened to 37-20 by half time. Varsity was getting much the better of the rebounding, and generally limited St. Kitt's to one or two shots every time they brought the ball down.

Madden's set with three minutes gone in the third quarter gave the JV's a 44-20 bulge, their largest of the game. Fred Martin clicked for five points for the Stars and Davidson counted a pair of baskets to cut the lead slightly to 48-32.

The St. Catharines squad lost tall centre Dick McKenzie on fouls after two minutes of the final frame. All-Stars Harrison and Carl McKenzie drew their fifth personals a few minutes later, and Don Brennan was ejected for deliberately bouncing the ball off the referee's dome. Frankie Palermo for Varsity and Jack Shewar for St. Kitt's hit for a couple of baskets apiece as the game ended with the JV's ahead 69-49.

Blues Win Gym Get Caron Cup

The University of Toronto team won the Caron Trophy, emblematic of the Canadian Intercollegiate Gymnastics championship at Saturday's athletic night by edging out the McGill squad, 112.5 to 107.5 in tota points. McGill had held this cup for the last three years.

Frank Grmek led the Varsity team to the win with 37 points on a nearly perfect showing. He had the maximum of 10 on every event until the last one, the mats event, when he dropped to 7. Hugh Alexander was close behind with 32. After a consistent display, Alexander came through with a 10 in the mats section when Grmek slipped some. For the Red and White, Marshall had a total of 34 and Welsford got 30.

The points for each man in each event are determined by the standing of his score out a possible 300, the combined total of the three judges who score each man on the basis of a maximum 100. Thus, on each event, the men receive anywhere from 0 to 10, depending on their total in relation to 300.

Varsity won every event but the mats. They were all close. First was the horizontal bar with Varsity taking a 29-26 lead. Grmek was given 10 points and Welsford took 8 for McGill. It was 29-26 again for Varsity on the parallel bar. Grmek had 10 again. Varsity stretched their lead in the combined flying rings and pommelled horse event, outscoring McGill, 30-25. Grmek got 10 again and Alexander was close with 9. McGill roared back on the mats getting 30.5 points to Varsity's 24.5. Alexander got 10 for U. of T. It was not enough for McGill to overcome the lead Varsity had piled up, though, and the final tally was 112.5 to 107.5.

Both Intercollegiate Basketball squads resume their schedule tonight, when they meet McMaster in a return double-header. For the Senior team, this game means a final check-up before the big Intercollegiate tourney at Queen's next week-end. The Toronto girls have played only two games so far this season, and although eight of the twelve players are veterans of last year's championship team, exhibition tilts provide plenty of opportunity to get used to the changes in the line-up.

The McMaster teams gave the Varsity gals lots to think about after the game last month. Senior Mac's Dorothy Burton, who tallied 15 of McMasters' 23 points, was a constant threat to the Bluebells. The Mac Intermeds also have an individual powerhouse in Barb Ross. Both these girls play a fast, flashy style that makes basketball a spectators' sport. And if you think that this is a plug to get you out to the game tonight—you're right. This PM's tilt is your last opportunity to see the Senior team in action before the big Intercoll championship meet. A few eager faces might remind the girls that they are representing people and not just a name.

So—the place: Ryerson gym, Gerrard and Church Streets, the time: 6:15 for the Intermediate game and 7:30 for the Senior contest.

Mendelssohn Choir Concert

For many years Toronto has waited for an all a capella concert of the kind sung by the Toronto Mendelssohn Choir under Sir Ernest McMillan last Wednesday evening in Massey Hall. The opportunity to hear a good choir unaccompanied is rare enough, but a whole evening of it by such a large group is rarer still.

After a brief but reverent choral tribute (two chorals from Bach's St. Matthew Passion) to the memory of the late king, the choir began the concert proper with Byrd's Sing Joyfully Unto God—and did justice to it. This was followed by two madrigals, Soster Awake by Thomas Bateson, and the well-known As Vesta was from Latmos Hill descending by Thomas Weelkes.

The motet Surge Illuminare for double chorus by Palestrina is a scholarly work based directly on the first six verses of Isaiah LX. Bach's chorale Come Jesu Come was equally inspiring, but neither was so awesome as Willan's great Apostrophe to the Heavenly Hosts.

The effectiveness of the pianissimo passages are complemented in several places by their gradual petering out to two soprano voices. On the whole, this was well performed, although there thewas a noticeable flattening of the first and second sopranos in places demanding the most in pitch control. This work, too, was the only place in the program where diction tended to become clouded. It was good to have the words printed, as this piece is a mine of proper names.

The assisting artists, the duo-pianists Bartlett and Robertson performed among their arrangements Bach's "Little" fugue in G minor. Two pianos means four hands and two damper pedals—an apparently sure-fire recipe for obscurity of the fugal subject. But it did not take an open mind and two open ears to imagine the subject, for it always came out in clear, strident tone.

Whether the Mendelssohn Choir sings better accompanied or unaccompanied is a moot point, and undoubtedly a matter of preference. The truth remains that they turned out a splendid performance last Wednesday evening.

Generally, their attacks were clean, and their releases well-defined. The only really disappointing aspect of the whole evening was the pitifully small audience, but if the choir or the pianists were adversely affected by it, they certainly did not show it.

HART HOUSE DEBATE

Morals And The State

The question of whether the state should be responsible for the morals of its citizens is the subject of tomorrow night's Hart House debate. John Barton, IV Trinity, and Dave Gauthier, II UC, are supporting the motion while Neville Taylor, I UC, and Maury Kertzer, III Law, will speak for the opposition.

The Varsity asked Cardinal McGuigan and Prof. Leslie to present their views on the topic.

It is surely common ground among all men that the State exists for the welfare of its citizens and that the maintenance of justice is the most important factor in social welfare. Justice is not simply something external to individuals; it is a virtue in men's hearts and minds.

It would be a low conception of the State to think of it only as a coercive and not educative power, as a policeman and jailor for handling criminals. The authority of the State would rest merely on force if it did not represent morality, and the State would be no more than a tyranny if its power were not used for purposes expressive of the conscience of the community.

The positive promotion of what is right is more important than negative measures against what is wrong. The State must, therefore, see that education in right conduct, which is another name for morals, is available, and that the community is protected against demoralizing and degrading influences. The words of Holy Scripture come to mind: "Righteousness exalteth a nation but sin maketh nations miserable."

His Eminence James C. Cardinal McGuigan,
Archbishop of Toronto.

As the organized structure of power within a society, the state must exercise its powers justly by restraining the evils of disorder and anarchy and seeking the common welfare. But the sources of moral obligation which determine the relative justice of the activities of any particular state lie either in some theological or metaphysical principle or in the general aspirations of the society, which transcend the particular power structure of the state.

Compulsory morality is a contradiction in terms. The state can enforce a relatively high degree of confromity to a particular code, but there is a great difference between obedience and a free and responsible choice. Genuine morality is only achieved in the deliberations and decisions of relatively free, informed, and responsible individuals. The protective paternalism of an authoritative state or church has always tended to end up in self-righteousness, insensitivity, and a conventional respectability that pays lip service to the letter of the law, and kills the spirit of goodness.

The only way to produce mature and responsible citizens, who themselves will be the most effective checks upon the tyrannical power of the state, is to leave themfree to make their own choice of good or evil. Moral goodness is not the fruit of either force or fear.

Prof. Charles Leslie,
Professor of the Philosophy of Religion and Christian Ethcis in Emmanuel College.

(A Canadian University Press Feature Issued by The Manitoban, University of Manitoba.)

You can have your Jane Russells, Dagmars, May Wests, Lana Turners, and the other ballyhooed sex machines of the past two film generations. We've found the mistress of them all, and the others can't hold a candle to her, in our humble opinion. There she was, big as life, minding her own business ankle deep in an Italian rice paddy. We are referring to Her Majesty Signorina Silvana Mangano, reigning queen of good old-fashioned pulse-quickening of the male animal, and featured star of Bitter Rice.

Perhaps we are leaving ourselves open to charges of fickleness for climbing on the Mangano bandwagon after having at various stages been a booster of the other ranking candidates for her crown. We defend ourselves by suggesting—somewhat meekly, albeit—that we had yet to feast our eyes upon Signorina Mangano when we made our previous pronouncements. This shows we have an open mind, something which we are told is a virtue these days.

Signorina Mangano has IT, make no mistake about that. And she can act, too, virtually a rarity among the other sirens of repute. She requires no glorification of garb, either, but, unlike her rivals, she relies strictly on what nature gave her, which in itself is nothing to be sneezed at.

Silvana does not boast the biggest bust on the screen, but she's wholesome. She has a reservoir of natural acting ability, and a pleasing speaking voice. And she does not have to load her phrases with suggestion to achieve effect.

Mlle. May West used to boast she could do more with her voice than most girls can do with everything they possess. Miss West's undulating syllables sound like echoes in a sewer compared to the Mangano personality.

Miss West had to corset, paint and perfume herself to gain attention, besides garbing herself in flashy, low-cut gowns, and draping herself about boudoirs. Miss Russell, once having bid farewell to the haystack, must resort to plunging necklines or expensive (but not expansive) swimsuits. Miss Turner has abandoned the sweater she helped popularize, and the gentry have all but abandoned Miss Turner. Dagmar is ceasing to be the novelty which greeted her debut, and the general consensus of opinion among televiewers is that if she says six words on her program that is seven words too many.

Queen Mangano resorteth not to these man-made attraction assistants. In Bitter Rice, the most formal attire in which she appears is a peasant blouse and flowered skirt, no stockings, and open-toed shoes. Miss Turner must have run for cover when la Mangano appeared in her two sweater scenes. The Misses Russell and Dagmar must have sunk into the depths of their seats in the darkened theatre when Director Giuseppe De Santis allowed her neckline to dip. Miss West is... be practicing in front of the mirror ever since she saw the effect of a few well-chosen (but not innuendo-laden) words from the Mangano tonsils, and a raising on the Mangano eyebrow. And all this in the drab surroundings of rice paddies or gloomy women's living quarters, or a colorless granery interior.

Off hand we can recall but two smootch scenes from "Bitter Rice", and they certainly were not the "torrid flaming passion which sets the screen afire" a la Hollywood. The story is a fascinating one and Signorina dexterously executes the tricky part of a simple young girl who acts more on impulse than on reason.

Sex appeal oozes out of Silvana's every pore, from her every movement, Jitterbug fans will be amazed at what she does with their erstwhile pastime. And if she doesn't start a vogue of wearing nylons with runs in them, we'll chuck away our window glass specs.

news events to fill its pages. The SHARE Committee's position has been to stress personal canvass, leaving the running or special events to campus organizations which wish to help in this way. Apart from the banquet which was designed more for publicity and education, the skating party was the only departure from this policy, and the Committee tends to regret it in spite of the $177 dollars it brought in. This position of the Committee is another compromise between principle and expediency, and we feel it is a fair one. That it is a compromise at all assumes the unproven thesis that special events raise more money than canvass. Supposing this thesis to be true, and that it is simply the amount of money that is raised which is important, then special events are called for. This method is painless to the contributor for he gets something he wants in return, and satisfies his lazy social conscience by thinking that the profits which would ordinarily go into private hands are now helping someone in need. On the other hand, the SHARE Committee feels that only if the contributor is encouraged to give where it hurts a little, and thus to think for a moment on the humanitarian and sympathetic values of his giving, does such a campaign have any lasting and educational value. This educational aim is fundamental to ISS (WUS) work. A conscious gift is incalculably more valuable than an unconscious one. The SHARE policy is an effort to encompass the aims of substantial relief, and broadening education; if it achieves a little in both aims, it accomplishes much. As a Committee, then, its functions were seen to be general planning, encouragement and synchronizing of activities, and the distribution of educational publicity.

There were also more practical reasons for this policy. It was noticed by some of last year's AVA organizers that where personal canvass was used, it was exceptionally successful. Indeed it was recommended by those who set up the EAC that personal canvass be used in this year's campaign. It was. And the results seem to have justified the decision. Five Colleges and Faculties exceeded their objectives. In all those in which the method of canvass was used with some vigor and organizational effort, the results were gratifying. At the beginning of the year we had the opinion of a couple of members of the Engineering Society Executive that AVA had really failed to reach most individuals in their part of the campus last year. Their average was 40c a head. From this it would probably be safe to conclude that at least 50% of the Engineering Faculty contributed something. This was really encouraging. Again looking at the total receipts to date, we find that of $5,678, only $1,454 were raised by means other than personal canvass. Remembering that the total for this year's campaign is not complete, let us do some comparing with other years. $1 per student has never been raised, and it was certainly not expected that a canvass of this year's undergraduate body would produce that amount. Even if it did, it would only come to about $9,000, the number of the undergraduate body. (Toronto has 2,000 graduate students.) AVA's cash receipts last year gave an average of 68c per undergraduate student. The cash receipts so far this year give an average of 63c per undergraduate student. We have heard that in the heyday of the veterans at the U. of T. an ISS campaign netted about $7,000 out of a registered student population of 16,000. At the moment we have cash receipts of slightly over $5,600 against a registration of 11,000 — a slightly better showing. Considering that personal canvass has been the core of our campaign, and that it has involved more people actively for a shorter time, it seems to us that the method has been justified by the results.

We might have been better to have budgeted on a figure about $9,000, on the basis of one dollar per undergraduate.

A revising of the budget will not, of course, be made until the final receipts are in.

The following figures clearly set out here may be of interest. SHARE has total cash receipts to date of $5,678, which with expenses of $311 deducted, and a balance from AVA of 629, leaves a net cash on hand of $6,196. AVA had net cash receipts of $6,845.

In general, we may say that the SHARE Committee tried to design a type of campaign that would build good-will and be a pattern which succeeding years could follow. It has made some errors, of course; and there will always be some knotty problems in publicity and organization in a university the size of ours. But we believe that the Committee has successfully set the main lines of future campaign work.

No ten people have worked harder around the University this year than the SHARE Committee, and for no glory, gain or, apparently, thanks. Only their chief, Tim Armstrong, has achieved any sort of general recognition or acknowledgment around the University. It is hard to express how pleased they were, as a group, to see the encouraging and helpful comments of Mr. Cork in the Feb. 12 Varsity, although his letter was used editorially as a new occasion to launch old and facile criticisms. We feel that the Committee has done good work.

QUIET SERVICE HONORS KING

Torontonensis

Torontonensis, the University of Toronto year book, is currently being assembled. Three of the make-up staff Anne Sommerville, I St. Mike's, Ruth Abels, IV UC, and Diana Cook, IV UC, are seen here. They copy-read all articles, and make sure all biographies are with the correct picture.

News Story With Twist Is A Feature

The essential in feature writing is to find a little personal twist in the story and develop it, said Wessley Hicks in the third of the Varsity-sponsored lectures yesterday. Hicks, who writes a daily column for the Evening Telegram, spoke on the art of feature writing.

"A feature story, in these days when space is scarce in a newspaper, must have a news peg," Hicks told a gathering of about sixty students, including members of the Varsity staff. "A feature story is really a news story dressed up to tickle people's fancy. The gathering of news is basic in any newspaper work, no matter what you do on the paper."

Feature writing is a specialty requiring a little more knowledge of the business, and a little more skill, than newswriting, Hicks said. Moreover, he said the feature writer is a better writer, and is treated as such. There is also more future in this type of work. The men on the big beats, such as Ottawa, deal to a large extent in news, but do a little of the interpreting, and give the little pictures, which are essentially feature writing.

"Newspapers don't have feature departments these days," Hicks said, but make features out of the ordinary assignments. In writing a feature story, the reporter should first get the basic information, as in newswriting. Then he should try to develop the twist which makes a story a feature. Unlike newswriting, where as much of the material as possible should be crowded into the first paragraph, the feature writer, if telling the story properly, should dole out the information bit by bit, to arouse the reader's interest.

Sob sister writing has a definite place in the newspaper, he said, in answer to a question. "The best newspaper in the world, with the most objective reporting, must be read by people, or it is a failure. Since newspapers these days are a business, not a gentleman's hobby, they must be financially successful, and it is undoubtedly crime and sensationalism that build circulation."

Hicks writes a daily column, "Wait a Minute," for the Telegram. A student at the University of Toronto in the early 30's, he has been in newspaper work ever since. He served in World War II, in the navy, and later as a war correspondent.

Hick's talk was the last in a series designed to acquaint staff members and others with various aspects of journalism. Other talks were given by Ken MacTaggart of the Globe and Mail, and Ted Reeve, sports columnist of the Telegram.

Honor Centenaries In Torontonensis

Torontonensis this year will be dedicated to Trinity and St. Michael's Colleges which are now celebrating their centennial anniversaries. Walter Mackenzie, Torontonensis editor for 1951-52, revealed this fact for the first time in an interview Wednesday.

This is being done in hopes of stimulating more sales of the year book, especially in the colleges to which it is dedicated, said Mackenzie.

The main trouble, according to Mackenzie, is in selling subscriptions to the students. To date only 13 to 14 hundred subscriptions have been sold and the books have to be bought in advance. "Most of the students," said Mackenzie, "have the childish attitude of refusing to pay for the book before they receive it. However we can't take a chance of being able to sell the books after. The loss resulting from any books left over is absorbed by the Students' Administrative Council (SAC) and eventually by the student body."

"Also the students don't seem to know what Torontonensis is. In previous years the book was a memento for the graduating class. In the past couple of years, the tendency has been to make a book for all University students. Campus shows, faculties, activities, clubs, at-homes, and people are all included and we are trying to increase the coverage of campus life. This year we are running some historical material in connection with Trinity and St. Michael's."

"Another headache for the staff," said Mackenzie, "is to get people to meet their deadlines. Things are left to the last minute and deadlines have to be extended. Material that should have been in last December is still coming in and there is no indication when the flow will stop. However, it will have to be soon because sales will probably end sometime this week."

"The students' pet peeve," said Mackenzie, "is the $3.50 price for the book. The cost of production is $6.00. The SAC gives us a subsidy. Money from the space sold in the book also goes towards expenses.

"From a survey made of 77 colleges and universities on the continents, we feel the students haven't anything to complain about. For its size Torontonensis is the lowest priced year book on the continent. Prices range up to $12.00 for some and the average is $5.50 while only six books out of the 77 are larged than Torontonensis."

Anyone is welcome to join the staff in the Drill Hall at 119 St. George Street.

Was Inspiration Says President

It was clear, sunny and cold last Friday when the University of Toronto gathered to pay its last respects to late King George the Sixth. It was a quiet dusk when six hundred people filed solemnly from Convocation H one hour later.

The memorial service was simple and reverent. Speaking of the late King, President Smith of the University of Toronto said that in our time he had given a new strength to the Crown. "The death of His Majesty George VI has brought to an end one of the most remarkable reigns in the history of the English monarchy," he said.

During the First World War, President Smith served in the Royal Flying Corps, under the King, then Duke of York. He gave effective leadership and showed a genuine interest in the men, Smith said. Royal pomp has never overshadowed his humanity, he continued.

Reviewing the fifteen Christmas messages broacast annually by the King to the British Empire, Sm said our King lived by those pr he professed.

In 1945 the King told the yo people of the Empire to "h faith in the best of life and n judge this world by the recent w of war and confusion of peo "Regard the future as an op tunity and an adventure," he Another year, the King said must always remember that diff ences of opinion are not the as quarrels.

These messages are an inf of courage, inspiration and Dr. Smith concluded. "We m put our hand into the hand God; for God is better than light or the known way," he s

As the service began, a proces of university dignitaries wea their brilliantly hued acade gowns entered the silent hall. T was the blue and silver of the U versity of Toronto, the scarlet gold of Victoria University and shades of pink, purple, b yellow, red and the traditional symbolic black.

The saddened and thoughtf congregation rose to sing "Oh G our help in ages past," and "T the hills around do I lift up longing eyes." Quietly they jo in the responsive reading of 34rd Psalm, "The Lord is my sh herd . . ."

Delay Decision

The Canadian University Debating Association finals will be held in Ottawa on March 7 and 8, the Executive also decided. The subject is "Resolved that Canada should have a Bill of Rights".

The Executive deplored the "new attitude" of International Union of Students (IUS) publicity, which it says has been insulting Canada in recent months. It predicted an accentuation, rather than a lessening of this attitude.

Present at the meeting were NFCUS President Jean de Margerie, Lavil; Ontario Regional Vice-President Kathy Swift, McMaster; Quebec Regional Vice-pres. Don Lawrence, Bishop's College; Maritime Vice-pres. Bill Hoyt, Acadia; Western Canada's vice-pres. Don McGillivray, Saskatchewan; and IAC Chairman Syd Wax, Toronto.

All constitutional amendments were ratified except one making IAC chairman a member of the executive, with the vote, 10 against, 5 for, with 5 abstentions.

Equality Fictitious — LPP Lecturer

Though frequently interrupted by five hecklers in the audience, Hal Proctor, of the Labor Progressive Party, claimed in a lecture on "The Marxist View of the State" last Thursday, that the state was simply "the apparatus by which the capitalist class is maintained over the working class." He said the state was not neutral but actively worked in support of the ruling class—the capitalists.

Proctor, former educational director of the Labor Progressive Party, was speaking at the second of a lecture series on "Marxism" sponsored by the campus LPP Club. The lectures are held each Thursday noon-hour in Room 11, UC. It was estimated that about 45 students attended.

According to Proctor, Marxists see the state as "all the weapons parliament, the police, the press, the army, and so on" whereby the rule of the small class of E. P. Taylors and J. S. Duncans over the large labor class is continued. He said that only if the conditions of fascism is the open rule of the capitalist made clear to the people.

At one point during the lecture Chairman Shirley Endicott stopped the speaker and tried to quiet the hecklers. She asked them to stop drawing chalk figures on the seats as the LP Club is responsible for the way the room is left."

Proctor charged that the press was only perpetuating the "big lie that Canada has to fear aggression from the Soviet Union." He declared only 22 per cent of Canadians, according to a Gallup Poll, believed this and that the press was speaking only for the capitalists.

"Under cover of the term law and order a fictitious equality between the million dollar corporation and the worker is created," he said. The "striking power" of government comes out in support of the capitalists, he added. "When there is a threat to the old ruling class the rules are changed in order to secure the ruling class."

Proctor rejected the idea that Communists support violence. "There is not one bit of evidence," he said, "that Communists advocate force or violence."

The speaker believed the Canadian Parliament could be used by the people of Canada to win socialism "if they control parliament and if the capitalists are ousted from their controlling positions in the state apparatus."

Proctor graduated in Chemical Engineering from the University of Toronto in 1936 and also has his B.Sc. degree. He has been with the LPP since its inception.

The CBC Wednesday Night production of Shakespeare's OTHELLO ...s certainly better than average radio-fare, but it could hardly be ...led an excellent presentation of this famous tale of love and ...alousy. Seldom do the short-comings of radio appear so great ...so obvious as in such a production, which being written for the ...ge by a great playwright, is not easily translated into other terms.

The major conflict of the play is between the arch-villain Iago ...d his master Othello. The two have almost diametrically opposed ...aracters, and the clever Iago works constantly on the innocent ...nd of the Moor forcing him to actions that he would not ordinarily ... This relation was not as clear on the radio, if only because ...o is not constantly present, watching, thinking, plotting, and ...cting. The big scene between the two—the temptation scene ...was the best in the show because here the essential feeling of ... play was explicit in the speeches.

The production as a whole was, I think, further marred by a ...ce that was far too fast; it didn't allow one time to take in the ...aning of all the speeches — especially Iago's, for his mind is ...ick and one must realize all that he is thinking. John Drainie in ...s most difficult part was not sufficiently clear himself as to the ...aning of his lines.

His scenes with Roderigo did not savour of true obscenity and ...rnography as I think Shakespeare intended. Nor did Drainie pay too ...uch attention to Iago's advice to Roderigo about the body being a ...rden to which the will is gardener. Too often Iago lost his self ...ntrol, and seemed to be acting, or planning to act, according to his ...elings rather than his mind.

Lorne Green played the part of the Moor with great strength and ...asurity. He was perhaps a little weak in his doubts; there was not ...er taut feeling of frustration, when he is not sure if his wife is ...ge to him or not. But I felt that he outdid himself in the final ...ne with Desdemona, when he kills her, and then regrets it. It is ...t often that an actor can, or will break down and cry in such a ...al and moving way.

Desdemona was played by Sandra Scott in not too convincing a ...shion. It is not an easy part, again because it depends on being ...en by the audience. I imagine that it was for visual reasons that ...o Christie cut the scene in which Othello hits his wife, but that ...ident is as good as a hundred lines on stage. Margo Christie as ...e's wife Emilia gave a good performance of a small but juicy part. ...r coarseness was in proper contrast to Desdemona and it showed ...e way Iago's coarseness should have been played.

The production showed too that the majority of Toronto radio ...ors cannot speak Shakespearian verse. The only ones who really ...t the lines across without that self-consciousness were Othello, Emilia ...d Brabantio, and at moments some of the others approached it.

Engineering Soc Lacks Quorum Doesn't Vote On $4 Fee Raise

Lack of a quorum prevented the Engineering Society from taking a vote on the proposed fee raise for the Society. The engineers held the meeting on last Thursday in Convocation Hall.

President Doug Sherk, announcing that the vote will not be taken, said that "If you leave we will not be offended, but at a future meeting we may not be able to explain everything so clearly; therefore it would be good if you stayed."

While some students left, there were catcalls, boos and some shouted "Here go the Artsmen," and "This is the Skule spirit."

"The Executive has definite opinions about the raise, but it is up to the students to decide," said Sherk. "We are the first Executive really caught by this cost of living rise," he added.

If the students will not approve the $3.00 raise, they will have to keep paying a substantial amount through the purchase of their equipment at the society's store, said Sherk. At the present the store is operating on a 30% mark-up basis, the gross profit amounting to $6,900. Next year the store will operate on a 20% mark-up basis, if the raise is approved, he said. "The gross profit will be $4,655 — if students buy the same number of slide rules, refills, and other things next year," Sherk said.

According to Sherk, the present prices in the Engineering Store are slightly below the prices of the downtown stores. "Next year on the 20% mark-up basis we could offer goods much more cheaply than anyone else," he said.

This year's Toike Oike Quarterly was to combine the now-defunct "Transactions and Yearbook," and the Toike Oike Newspaper, said Sherk. "We feel that the Newspaper was missed by the students," he said. He felt that the Engineers also need a Handbook, especially the freshmen, since it would contain useful information about the cannon, and, as he put it, that "we hate Artsmen, we hate Medsmen, we love Skulemen, and that sort of nonsense," and information about the Society's operations, and constitution.

Commenting on this year's School Dinner, Sherk said that "It was a good do, and you should have been there." It may have to be held in Union Station's Oak Room next year, where a plate would probably only cost a student $1.00, he said. The Skule Nite show may have to be cut too, he added.

Presenting the Engineering Athletic Association's case, President Beattie said that the main expense is the cost of equipment. During the Ajax years the Association had surplus money, because of the high enrollment, and they bought a lot of equipment. In the last few years, therefore, they did not need to buy much, but now they do, he said. The Athletic Association is asking for a $1.00 raise per student.

Football pants last about five year, which means that they have a 20% depreciation per annum Beattie said. "We have more teams, and there is more participation in sports now than before, although our enrollment is lower," he said.

When the depreciation is added to the other items on the budget, the amount the students should pay comes very close to $3.00, said Bob Beattie. The present fee is $2.00.

One student suggested at the end of the meeting, that all students should have a reserved copy of Toike Oike. Doug Sherk said that the last time the issue appeared, it was given upon presentation of ATL cards, for a certain period. Later it was given to whoever wanted it. Many students failed to realize this, and when they came for their copies, they were already distributed, he said.

UN Club Meeting Over Suez Issue

The United Nations Club is holding its final Model Security Council meeting this Wednesday night at 8:00 p.m. in Cartwright Hall, St. Hilda's College. The topic of this term's Model Council is, "The Annexation of the Suez Canal Zone as a threat to World Peace."

Jane Grey, II St. Hilda's, said yesterday that the Egyptian delegation to the U.N. Club Security Council held a special meeting Thursday. "We have decided to present a resolution demanding 'that the British troops evacuate the Suez Canal'," she said.

Dissatisfaction with this resolution was expressed by Rolland de Corneille, IV Trin., speaker for the American delegation at this Council. De Corneille stated, "the American delegation will bring in another resolution with a more positive tone." The general effect of the resolution which de Corneille outlined will be to put the Canal zone under some form of trusteeship until Britain's current treaty expires in 1956.

The Russian delegate, Ed. Lowry, could not be reached for comment, but Dave. Turnbull, III SPS, a member of the Russian delegation and speaker at last term's Model Council, claimed their line will be to support the Egyptian resolution. "The Russians believe that treaties become out of date," he said, and "that this one in particular is contrary to the U.N. Charter". "My delegation will argue that it violates the Egyptian territorial sovereignty," Turnbull added, "and in addition, the Russian delegation will argue that the treaty was obtained under duress."

Lit Announces UC Robinette Semi Finalists

The semi-finals of the Robinette Debates will be finished at University College by the end of this week, according to Literary Director Al Strauss. Strauss said Saturday that Chuck Hanley and M. Stoner are the finalists in the third year debates while Bert Bloom and Vern Turner are the fourth year finalists.

M. Seigal and G. Gibson will debate today against E. Berger and N. Taylor in the first year semi-finals. (Taylor represented Toronto in the Brading Trophy debate.) The winning pair of debaters will meet H. Lipton and Roberts tomorrow in the first year finals.

The second year debating finals will take place on Wednesday when D. Gautier and R. Bull will compete against A. Borovoy and M. Chusid.

The first and third year finalists will compete on Thursday and the second and fourth year teams will meet on Friday. Strauss said that it is planned to have the final debate for the Robinette Trophy the following week.

Radio Renaissance

In the February gloom of essay deadlines and library lineups, a ray of extra-curricular sunshine seems to be flitting across the campus. At a time of year when almost everyone has packed his bloop in mothballs and is laying in extra supplies of cigarettes and College Outlines for the long siege ahead, extra-curricular enthusiasm is a little incredible, but pleasantly so.

Yet, when enthusiasm centres about radio, it seems to have entered the realms of fantasy. For the trials and tribulations of the Radio Committee have afflicted the Students' Administrative Council since the former's inception.

Spurring the Radio Committee into any kind of activity — aside from conflicts within itself — has required a sort of blind determination on the part of the SAC. Only in January, the Radio Committee almost lost its toehold on the AM network when its program director resigned. Yet, under a new director, C. M. Godfrey, the series of programs "Of Mice and Men", has soared to unprecedented heights of popularity.

Undoubtedly, this forum of opinion program is the easiest to arrange since no scripts and little preparation are necessary. The main requirement — people with lively opinions — has been fulfilled and the twenty-five minutes on CKEY have been splendidly chaotic sparring sessions.

However, the radio renaissance barely begins here. Just after the Radio Committee began to exhibit quite forcefully its "raison d'etre", a group of real enthusiasts have embarked upon a plan to establish a "Varsity" radio station. Now, such ambition is highly laudable, but we rather wish that it could be channelled into the activities of the Radio Committee.

Aside from the difficulty, probably the impossibility, of getting an AM station, the problems of organization and staff would be almost too difficult to meet. Even a few hours of radio broadcasting each day would require vast hordes of people—writers, actors, program planners and supervisers and so on. The demands are insatiable.

With its very modest programs, two in number, the present Radio Committee has, at times, been hard put to find enough material, let alone people, to carry on. Surely this new enthusiasm, both within and without the Radio Committee, could provide the additional members necessary to carry on a more ambitious program.

In the past, however, the Radio Committee has always been plagued by initial delay in organization. September finds them without scripts, definite program time—and without an experienced Committee chairman. For each year, the SAC chooses one of its members to head the committee; usually it is someone without any previous experience and often without sufficient zeal.

Year after year, a sort of split often develops between the man ostensibly in charge and the hard core of interested people who continue their work together. It is difficult to foresee any broad program of development unless some continuity in leadership is established.

If the Radio Committee was set up on the same basis as The Varsity and Torontonensis, then such continuity might be possible. Although the committee would still be responsible to the SAC, it would be able choose as its leader someone who was not only interested, but who also had had some experience in radio work.

We would suggest that before the University of Toronto contemplates a radio station, it ought to build a strong radio committee; that before it embarks upon three or four hours of programs per evening, it should be able to organize that many hours each week. Up to now this has been impossible.

Those who would establish a radio station now, look rather as if they are putting the cart before the horse. Indeed, it would seem that they have overlooked the horse almost entirely.

SHARE Repor

The following is a complete report of the SHARE campaign, presented for publication by the External Affairs Executive.

The SHARE Committee and the EAC Executive wish to try to clear up the confusion and doubts which appear to reign in the minds of the Varsity editors and of the UC Lit, the expression of which may be causing concern in the minds of some of the many generous contributors to SHARE.

This is a lengthy defence of the SHARE Campaign. The EAC regrets the length but feels that it has been forced into this position by The Varsity. Prejudicial criticism can always be brief, and unfortunately, once launched, it can only be countered by detailed analysis.

Starting with the background, we must point out the error in the statement in The Varsity editorial of Feb. 12 that in the relation of SHARE to AVA "the main point of difference is its name." AVA was a spontaneous U. of T. student campaign undertaken by the SAC and as many independent campus organizations as would participate. It gave $3,000 to the National ISS (WUS) for which the Toronto ISS (WUS) committee, then a body of volunteers entirely independent of the SAC, gave up its local campaign. Of that $3,000, $1,200 was marked as Toronto's commitment to the upkeep of the National Office, and the remaining $1,800 was returned to this year's EAC for DP Scholarships. At the end of last year, when most students were too busy preparing for exams to notice such affairs, it was decided by the SAC with the wholehearted agreement of the Toronto ISS(WUS) Committee to unite the local activities of NFCUS and ISS (WUS) in one Commission of the SAC. Thus the EAC became both the Toronto NFCUS Committee and the Toronto ISS (WUS) Committee. The SHARE Committee is one of several functioning committees of the EAC, conducting an ISS (WUS) activity.

SHARE therefore has a character quite different in constitution from AVA. It is an ISS(WUS) campaign run by the SAC. This position was made explicitly clear at an EAC meeting last term in response to special questioning by a member of The Varsity Editorial staff, as well as in an earlier mimeographed exposition of the nature and functions of EAC, so The Varsity ought to know better. This position was also made clear in the EAC and to those responsible for the canvassing in the Colleges and Faculties through the explanation of two items in the SHARE budget. These were in the nature of ISS (WUS) commitments apart from direct relief.

One of these items was $1,100 (10c per registered student at Toronto). This the Toronto ISS (WUS) Committee's (i.e. the EAC's) commitment to the upkeep of the ISS (WUS) National and International Offices. This contribution is productive in that the National Office, kept in existence by such sums, raises money from non-university sources for the ISS (WUS) work of international relief and education.

The other was the sum of $1,500 for DP and Exchange Scholarships. This year three DPs have been supported at Toronto by the $1,800 from AVA returns mentioned above and by the generosity of Trinity, UC and the Phi Kappa Pi Fraternity. One student will complete his studies this year. We have a moral obligation, although not a legal one, to assist the remaining two to complete their studies. For this purpose the sum of $1,500 was included in the budget of the campaign. Exchange was mentioned in case these plans were negated by a failure, in which case the money could still be used to support a foreign student here. Since the sum is for use next year, it may be possible to get it from another source, the SAC. It has been recommended by Trinity that in the future the sums for the support of the National Office and the DP and Exchange Scholarships be payable out of SAC fees. If this is adopted in this spring's budget to apply next year then it may prove possible to devote to relief this $1,500 from the campaign monies.

Now let us look at a detail criticized by the UC Lit. "$600 was needed to cover campaign expenses," said Mr. Clee, according to The Varsity. $600 was the amount named in the budget for expenses. That figure represents very close to 5½% of the budgeted total. The SHARE Committee promised itself that it would not spend more than $400 on expenses. Thanks to the generosity of the T. Eaton Company and others, the total expenses will not exceed $340, which is very close to 5½% of the total cash on hand.

Mr. Clee also complained (according to The Varsity) that $4 300 was contracted to ISS (WUS)." It is difficult to see just how this figure was arrived at. Out of the total proposed budget, $8,300 was marked for relief. Half of this, $4,150, was designated to meet particular relief needs in particular places outlined in WUS's programme of action for 1952. According to the regulations of WUS relief campaigns, the other half of the money to be used for relief must remain undesignated. It will all be applied by International WUS to relief in parts of its programme of action not fulfilled by countries similar to ours. This system allows for the publicity advantages of designation and the efficiency advantages in filling-up gaps of a central administration. The concept of contract spoken of by Mr. Clee only shows ignorance of the standing of the SHARE Committee and the EAC as outlined above.

Without reference to the details, the Varsity headline "SHARE Publicity Co... Misleading" points up a problem of w... we were well aware. The name SH... was chosen primarily because it was ... that the significance of the word ... ters spell out was the proper spirit ... our efforts. The attachment of the ... Laval Defeats Varsity 5-4 On Late Goal By Dubeau Gaining A Weekend Split

By BARRY THOMAS

A goal by Roland Roland with one minute and forty-five seconds to play, gave Laval University a 5-4 verdict over the Varsity Blues in the second game of a two-game week-end series. The score was the same as last Saturday's but this time the Quebeckers came out on the right end. The win vaulted the Laval team into first position in the Intercollegiate League, one point ahead of Montreal Carabins.

The first two periods of the contest were dull, to say the least, but the last one provided the most spectacular action seen at the Arena for many a day. The Blues yanked out goalie Jack Ross with 55 seconds to go but the Laval team held and almost scored on the open net in the last few seconds. Varsity, down two goals midway through the last period, fought back valiantly to tie the score when Captain Ernie Frey rapped in the tieing marker after Gerry Fitzhenry had made the score 4-3 by sinking a long blooper shot from the blue line that goalie Vezina fanned on.

The Blues started off well and had an advantage in the play for the first half of the opening frame. John Adams opened the scoring when he flipped in a shot from a scramble in front of the Laval goal. Linemates Rope and Wheldrake drew assists. The rest of the period produced uninspired hockey but for a few brilliant stops by both goalies.

Laval tied up the score early in the second period on a goal by Levansseur while Fitzhenry of Varsity was off for charging. The Locals bounced back to again take the lead when defenceman Red Stephen soloed the length of the ice to blast a high shot to the upper left hand corner of the Laval net. This was done while Houle of Laval was serving two minutes for crosschecking. It was only a couple of minutes later that Laval tied it up when a shot by Hamelin took a crazy hop and skidded in behind Ross in the Varsity net. The two teams ended the period on even terms with Ross retiring for repairs after being shaken up on the Hamelin goal.

The last period, as said before, was as thrilling as anyone could hope for. The play opened up considerably as Laval took a two goal lead on counters by Jean Marque Legace and Claude Roy. From the time that Roy scored until the Blues finally tied it up the best action of the night was produced. When Frey finished off a three way passing play involving Mackenzie and Rope, the goal nearly brought the roof of the Arena down as the near capacity crowd gave out with a loud round of cheers.

Rink Remarks: Laroche of Laval received a misconduct penalty in the last period when he grabbed one of the referees in protest of a charging penalty that was handed out to him . . . Gerald Houle provided a few moments of respite from the third period action when he took time out to hunt for a lost molar . . . one of his teammates finally found same . . . the Fox-Vernon-Conboy line saw more service last night and showed particularly well in the first period . . . Both Rope and Mackenzie received minor facial cuts as did Laval goalie Vezina . . . Laval again outshot the Blues, this time by a 33-28 margin . . . The Blues still have a chance to take the championship but must win all their games from here on in to keep in a contending position.

Education Program Planned For Reps By NFCUS Exec.

Next year when the delegates go to the National Federation of Canadian University Students' conference at Laval they will know something about NFCUS, if the present national executive has its way.

International Activities chairman Syd Wax said, on his return from the NFCUS executive meeting in Ottawa over the weekend, that plans are under way for a NFCUS evaluation program on the Canadian campi. He explained that the evaluation program would mean that the students would be asked to study, and criticize NFCUS activities on the local, regional, and national level, so that they would understand the operation of NFCUS before going to the national conference next October.

The national office has been given a mandate, Wax said, to provide agendas for the conference, a complete outline of the conference, a financial statement for the Federation, and a review of the various regional projects. Wax said that this information is to be sent to the campi by next September and it is hoped to have much of the information sent out by the end of the school year.

The executive accepted reports on the Edinburgh conference and the Pan-American conference at Rio De Janeiro from NFCUS President Jean De Margerie and Wax. Both delegates will report on these conferences at the Laval national conference. Wax will also report on the two conferences tomorrow before an open meeting of the External Affairs Commission of the SAC.

The national executive has decided to strive for action on the social, political and economic needs of the students before the end of the year, Wax said.

In the field of economics, Wax said, the executive has decided to work for student income tax deductions, the removal of unemployment insurance payments during summer work, and to bring up to date an investigation into how tariff reductions on text books can be obtained. Wax said that another field for action considered was the implication of the Massey Report recommendations concerning an increase in the number of scholarships and increased grants to the universities.

The development of the student travel bureau was also discussed, Wax said. The Executive decided that inter-regional student exchanges, scholarships and exchanges to study in foreign universities.

Travel Info On Europe Coming Up

Montreal (CUP) — Detailed information on the recently organized travel service of the National Federation of Canadian University Students will be available shortly.

By the end of February, it is expected that a brochure will be available giving details about plane and ship accommodations and their cost. Yves Pilon, national secretary-treasurer for Canada's representative student body, has arranged this travel service to Europe. He said, in a recent bulletin, that the brochure had been delayed pending last-minute details from the United States and British Student Union travel department.

This is the first time that NFCUS has entered the travel service field in full force and the first time that it has ever negotiated to have long-established travel services for American and British students extended to Canada.

To be called "NFCUS - Travel 1952," the brochure will contain full information about fares, visas, currency and custom regulations and tours also being made available.

Pilon asked that students planning to travel individually or on tours to Europe this summer should wait for the arrival of the brochure and application forms for booking passages.

As soon as received, the material will be available at the SAC offices

Fund For Seminar Below Goal But Plans For India Continue

The objective of $65,000 which the International Student Service must raise for its proposed summer seminar in India is still a long way from being realized, International ISS Secretary Mrs. Greta Riddel-Dixon said yesterday.

ISS still hopes it can raise the money, however, and has not yet been forced to consider the possibility of cancelling or curtailing the seminar.

The money will be raised, it is hoped, through donations from business firms and interested individuals. There is also a possibility that the provincial governments will, as in the past, give grants to subsidize students from their own provinces. There has been and will be, no attempt at fund-raising though a campaign, Mrs. Dixon said.

"We are usually in bad financial condition at this time of year," Mrs. Riddel-Dixon said. "But some of the money is in already, and we are hoping for the rest." The usual objective is about $45,000.

A flood of applications is expected for the four delegates allotted to University of Toronto students. Application forms will not be available for another week, through the local ISS committee, but already about thirty inquiries have been received from people wanting to apply, she continued. Interest should be unusually large this year because people are naturally interested in a trip to Asia, and because India has been the centre of so much discussion lately, she said.

The theme of the seminar will be "Human Implications of Technological Chane". It will folow the usual pattern of a series of lectures on the various aspects of the theme by leading professors, Canadian and foreign, as well as smaller discussion groups, and opportunities for individual sightseeing, Mrs. Dixon said. One hundred and twenty students are expected to attend the seminar, 40 from Canada, 40 from South East Asia, and the rest from the rest of the world. Students are selected on the basis of academic ability, university activities, and character, by a panel of students and professors on each campus.

This is the fifth year for the seminar. Previous sessions have been held in Germany, the Netherlands, France, and Ottawa.

Discuss Fee Hike At McGill

Montreal (CUP) — A motion to discuss a three dollar hike in $15 student activity fees will be discussed this week at a meeting of McGill's Student Society, made up of all the students in the college paying activity fees. The proposed hike will incorporate the college yearbook subscription rate into the students' fees so that everyone will automatically receive a copy.

At present, the increased cost of printing the yearbook, "Old McGill", has led to a deficit this year of $1,000, that must be covered from the Students' Society surplus funds.

While the cost of printing the book comes to about nine dollars, it is sold to graduating students for only $2.50 a copy.

Last Chance For T'nensis

Torontonensis sales end today.

Editor Walt Mackenzie said last night that any student who does not order a copy now will most likely not be able to buy a book later in the year at any price. Last year, he said, Toronontonensis was sold out by the first of June and hundreds of students were unable to buy the University year book when they attempted to place orders during the summer.

Skule Nomination Deadline Extended

Nominations for election to next year's Engineering Society executive are being accepted until 1:00 p.m. today. Nominations were to have closed last night but there were no applicants for several positions and a large number would have been filled by acclamation. Therefore election committee chairman Denis Dos Santos decided last night to extend the time for the acceptance of nomination forms.

The extension of the nomination period followed a meeting of the nominees who were disturbed by the number of posts which would have been filled by acclamation. Dos Santos said the Engineering Society was very happy about this attitude because it "will assure the society of the best candidates."

For the first time in many years the Mining and Metallurgy Club failed to nominate a candidate for president.

The two Skulemen who have been nominated so far for next year's president of the Engineering Society are both from the course in Engineering and Business. They are SAC representative George Hayman and Third Year President Dave Fenwick.

As Any Carabin Will Tell You Religion and Pies Don't Mix

By DENISE RICHARDS

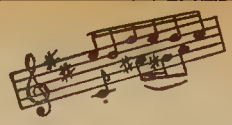
"Le Chant des Carabins" echoed loudly in the Union Station Sunday night as 40 Varsity students with pronounced French accents struggled off the Montreal train with skis and smuggled American cigarettes. All agreed that the Carabin weekend in Montreal has been a success, intellectually and recreationally.

The rushed schedule for the weekend included a day of skiing at the University of Montreal lodge at St. Sauveur in the Laurentians, a tour of the University, two parties, a banquet, a formal welcome by the Rector of the University, Monseigneur Olivier Maurault, a discussion on the Aims and Methods of Education in Ontario and Quebec, a memorial mass for the late king, and a performance of the University revue, Le Bleu et Or.

The discussion started with a laugh when Don Michel, II U.C., who was explaining the Ontario viewpoint on education for the Varsity representatives, read an anticipatory report of the weekend in the Sunday edition of La Patrie, which appeared Saturday noon saying that Michel had spoken eloquently.

Monique Lortie, Montreal Psychology student, explaining the Quebec viewpoint, said that religion gives orientation to education. She added that "a nice liberal education for its own sake is a luxury we cannot afford."

Michel's speech led to repercussions at the banquet. He said that man, who is inherently good, does not need the support of religion, as a good lemon meringue pie doesn't really need the support of a pie plate. When apple pie a la mode was served at the banquet that night, Michel's mates forced him to eat it without the plate.



It was generally agreed in the discussion that the main problem of education was the question of who is to say when something taught ceases to be opinion and becomes truth. On the solution of this problem depends whether education should be based on a question or an answer about the nature of God.

Dr. Leon Lortie, of the Montreal Faculty of Science, welcomed the Toronto group in the name of the mayor at the banquet. Speaking on the problem of science and religion, he said that the decline of the humanities was due to the fact that humanists accepted the myth of the omnipotence of science, which has been rejected by most scientists.

Quebec had refused federal aid for education, he said, to preserve academic freedom. He said that Quebec feared that the principle of "no donation without representation" would not allow the government to respect the autonomy of the university.

Father Paul Gregoire, Chaplain of the University, conducted a special memorial mass for the late King Friday morning, before the buses left for St. Sauveur. The informality of the service was very evident, for all the weekenders were in ski clothes, as was the altar boy, and ski pants were visivle beneath the robes of the priest.

Spirits were revived on the trip back, after the reluctant parting to "Ce N'est Qu'un Au Revoir" (Auld Lang Syne) by a conga line through the train, and a snowball fight in the aisles. But the French songs were sung with a nostalgic sadness.

Clarinet And Trio

An extra touch of color was added to the music of the deKresz-Hambourg Trio Saturday afternoon, when Leslie Mann, clarinetist, joined them for one of their regular concerts in the Museum Theatre. The tone of the clarinet, so utterly different from the strings', provided a welcome contrast to the more usual chamber music heard at the other concerts of this series.

The works performed were the Trio op. 11 by Beethoven (clarinet, piano and cello), five Bagatelles by Leslie Mann (clarinet and cello) and the Trio op. 110 by Schumann (violin, piano and cello). The five Bagatelles were given their first public performance.

On first thought, the idea of writing music for clarinet and cello seems a grotesque one. Two instruments so widely separated in range would hardly be expected to make a reasonable-sounding combination without some sort of harmonic filling-in between. However, Leslie Mann has succeeded in writing quite reasonable music for them.

Though one does not usually think of it that way, the ranges of the clarinet and cello actually overlap. Leslie Mann has them answering each other with the same phrase, and even puts the clarinet to accompanying the cello occasionally; yet at no time does one think of the result as ridiculous.

The first three Bagatelles are called Pastoral, March and Dirge, and make use of the rhythms associated with these names. The other two, called simply Chanson and Finale are more original in rhythm. The Finale indulges in a little virtuoso clarinet writing. This is transferred verbatim to the cello part later on, where, oddly enough, it does not sound out of place.

In style, the Bagatelles are the same dry, witty sort of music that comes from the pen of John Weinzweig. The writing of duo music of this sort is a tour de force, and the composer is not afraid to show it. When a little three-part writing appears in the Dirge, it sounds startingly rich and full — as though he were saying "Look what I am denying myself."

The clarinetist's playing was at all times flawless. The deKresz-Hambourg Trio performance was also above their usual standard. Mrs. deKresz at the piano is inevitably the backbone of the ensemble, and she played with a lightness and brilliance which she seldom achieves. And as usual, the informal manner of the performers gave the concert an authentic chamber-music feeling.

Christopher Helleiner.

VIC'S CORNER

Hello Vic:

Well people, the Vic At-Home will definitely be held on Friday, March 7 in Hart House with Ellis McClintock providing the music. The finals of the Hart House Barber Shop Quartet Contest will be held at intermission with a guest quartet from McMaster as a special attraction. Now you fellows still won't have to worry about corsages for your dates — for there will be flowers given every couple at the dance. So be sure and come to the At-Home — a good time for all is assured.

All members of the Music Club — (Glee Club, Opera, Stage Crew, etc.,) are urged to attend a special open meeting in Room 18, Vic Wed., Feb. 20 at 1:15 p.m. — Bring your lunch! Several vital items, such as change of constitution and executive nominations, are on the agenda . . . Not many days to go till the big social event of the Music Club year — The Music Club at-Home at Wymilwood — this Sat., Feb. 23. Formal and free (to all members) . . . Alex MacPherson, Glee Club President requests that all Glee Club sheet music — especially copies of 'God Save the Queen' be handed in, under his name, to the V.C.U. Office as soon as possible.

There is a Dramatic Society Meeting this Wed., 8:00 p.m. at Wymilwood — the speaker will be the noted Prof. Frye — A one-act play will be put on. This is the last regular meeting of the year and there is some very important business to be discussed. Refreshments by Jeannine!

The V.C.U. spring elections are close at hand and candidates for the various offices for the coming year may obtain nomination forms at the V.C.U. Office. This student government of ours is very important to us and deserves thoughtful consideration now that election time is here once again.

Gothletics — The Sports Schedule is moving along still at a rapid clip with hockey taking the fore. Vic I's sparked by Jan McMillan's two goal effort handed PHE their first loss in three years! Watch that team fellows — they're headed for a championship. The Vic II's play Tuesday at 12:30 while the I's play Thursday against Meds in the last league encounters.

U of T Team Overwhelms Yankees In Debate Tour

Not one debate was lost by the Toronto team of Dwight Fulford, III Trinity, and John Morden, VI Wycliffe, on the recent five-day tour to the United States.

The first debate was held at Wellesley College, Boston, and the judges declared a tie. The Toronto team took the affirmative on the topic, "Resolved that the United States Government should adopt a permanent system of price and wage controls." Fulford's comment on Wellesley was "proper young ladies receiving a proper education in a proper 400-acre surrounding."

The Toronto team won the debates at both Harvard and Princeton universities. Of these, Fulford thought of Harvard as intellectual and Princeton as social. At the Harvard debate the topic debated was "Resolved that this house approves of United States leadership in World Affairs." The debate at Princeton was based on the motion "Resolved that modern education is producing a race of educational fools."

At Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., there was no contest. The students of that college had prepared the same side of the topic as Toronto. It seems the secretary of that college fell ill and neglected to check which position they were to take.

Morden was interested in the lecture hours at Georgetown. The students take 8 hours of Jesuit philosophy each week in addition to the 16 to 18 hours in their regular courses.

It was at Howard, a Negro university in Washington, D.C., that Morden and Fulford encountered a style of debating close to that of the Hart House debates. There were no judges present to make a decision. The topic was, "Resolved that the government of Iran was justified in nationalizing the oil industry."

Toronto took the negative in this debate. After the main speeches, a forum was held in which the audience fired questions at the two teams. Fulford and Morden both thought this debate was the most constructive during the whole tour. The African and Indian students there showed great interest in problems related to British imperialism in Iran.

The Toronto team was royally entertained at each university, said Morden, and they invited their hosts to make a reciprocal visit here.

Can You Legislate Goodness? Debaters To Wrestle With Topic

A lively argument "as to whether, you can legislate goodness or whether it is a matter for personal responsibility", was prophesied for tonight's Hart House debate by Reverend Emlyn Davies yesterday.

Rev. Davies is to be honorary visitor at tonight's debate on the topic: "Resolved that the State should be responsible for the morals of its citizens".

John Barton, Trinity, and David Gauthier, II UC, will move and second the resolution. Neville Taylor, II UC, and Morris Kertzer, III Law, will speak in opposition.

As an undergraduate at the University of Wales, Emlyn Davies was an active debater. After studying at Oxford and preaching in a London church, he returned to Wales as National Secretary of the Student Christian Movement. Rev. Davies was a prominent speaker at the Baptist World Alliance in 1950, and was subsequently called to the pulpit of Yorkminster Baptist Church in Toronto.

John Barton stated yesterday that "in a decadent era of declining moral values and practices we find no alternative to a more active control of the moral values of the citizens, by the State."

"The concept of the role of the church in this capacity is one of the primary obsessions of our time," Barton added.

Neville Taylor, who teamed with Barton at the recent Brading Trophy Debates, will speak against him tonight. Said Taylor: "The morality or immorality of the State is dependent on the moral convictions of the individuals comprising the State".

Taylor warned that any attempt at State regulation of morals "can only end in discontent and social revolution".

"Collective responsibility in ethical matters is essential for the emancipation of mankind from its brutish tendencies," said Dave Gauthier yesterday.

Morris Kertzer indicated that "at some point the citizen firmly believes that his personal rights take precedence over the State's right to regulate and prohibit activity".

When asked whether or not the State should guide the morals of the citizens, Hart House Chaplain Ted Nicols commented "Yes and No". "Negatively by law, positively through education, the State does exercise responsibility, and should," he said.

Nicols added that when the State has done all it can "the question of fundamental assumptions, personal absolutes, remain largely untouched, and without these morals will wither away."

Although customarily held on a Wednesday night, this debate was changed to a Tuesday at the request of Reverend Davies.

Elmer Sopha, II Law, will act as Speaker of the House.

Air Forum To Discuss US Policy

America we sing of thee — but whether in sweet or sour tones will not be decided until 10:05 p.m. tonight when the Varsity Radio Round Table meets on CKEY to discuss "Are We Being Misled by American Foreign Policy?"

Those taxing part in the discussion which is moderated by Harry Rasky, CKEY news-editor, will be Dr. Gerald Craig, lecturer in history; Dave Rose, President of UC Lit; Elmer Sopha, II Law and Shirley Endicott, President of the U of T LPP Club.

Craig, an ex-RCAF navigator who took his Ph.D. at Minnesota said today: "American foreign policy strives both for the security of the U.S. and incidentally of Canada, and for the protection of weaker countries throughout the world. Canadian foreign policy has similar objectives."

Following U.S. foreign policy has brought Canada economic hardship and anxiety over the threat of war, said Miss Endicott.

Rose and Sopha were the main speakers at a recent HH debate when the House voted to "deplore the leadership" of America. Rose, a fourth year Arts student has done research work in the U.S. studying Soviet psychology and economics.

The discussion subject is currently travelling to the universities in Ohio and Michigan with the U of T debating team.

NFCUS Conducts Tours In Europe

Montreal (CUP) — A variety of conducted tours will be available this summer to students under the auspices of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, in co-operation with various European student unions.

This is the latest service established by NFCUS for its members. The first of the 44-day tours will leave from New York aboard a Dutch ship, the S.S. Zuiderkruis on July 5. The ship chartered by NFCUS in co-operation with the United States National Student Association travel service, and is given over entirely to students going to Europe.

Cost of the tours will run about $670 to $675 compete. Other tours of six European countries will average about $700.

Of special interest are hospitality tours of England, Holland and Germany. Students will spend two weeks in each country living with families. Motor tours covering as much of Europe as the travellers wish to see have also been arranged and will cost anywhere from $430 to $810 depending on the length of the trip.

Two air tours of Europe have also been arranged as well as tours to include the Art and Music festivals held in Europe during the summer.

All the information about the tours, travel and accommodation will be available shortly in a forthcoming booklet entitled "NFCUS—Travel, 1952." It will be available around the end of February. Yves Pilon, national secretary-treasurer of NFCUS, said in a bulletin recently. Pilon is responsible for the establishment of this travel service.

Students who want further information about travel, should contact Pilon at the NFCUS national office, Carleton College, in Ottawa.

You Can't See That Movie:

By FRANK MORITSUGU

Because of secret official censorship, certain books and movies are banned in Canada. This article explores the histories of movies and books that have met the censor's axe or scissor. Why censorship at all? Who actually does the censoring in this province or in this country? Mr. Moritsugu has some of the answers and asks some more leading questions.

Freedom, in American usage, means the freedom of the individual human being to think for himself and to come to the truth by the light of his own mind and conscience.—Archibald MacLeish.

These are brave words. And carelessly, most of us will nod our heads in agreement with them. We do this to most platitudes, taking them for granted, not bothering to pause a minute to consider what the words mean. We are so sure of ourselves and our freedom, that we are almost indifferent.

Yet you cannot buy a copy of Balzac's Droll Stories, William Faulkner's Sanctuary, or Charles Erskine Scott Wood's Heavenly Discourses in Ontario. You cannot see LA RONDE or WAYS OF LOVE, two fine European films.

The Censor says No.

The frightening thing about these words by Archibald MacLeish is that they were used recently in a defensive attempt to re-affirm the democratic ideal of freedom of thought and opinion. In this time of fear and insecurity, it was felt that a ringing defence was necessary against the bulldozinfi pressures toward a rigid and safe conformity.

MacLeish goes on to explain what would seem over-obvious to us who are products of the doctrine of free men. "A man's freedom," he declares, "does not depend on what he believes." And again, "In the American conception of freedom, the man and his conscience come first and the established opinions, the accepted verities, the official views come after." A needless reminder? While this conception of freedom is not an American monopoly, it has constantly needed re-stating and emphasizing in all democracies.

Censorship is a particularly powerful enemy of freedom of thought and opinion. And it has proved to be willing hand-maiden for any force or doctrine which demanded narrow rigid obeisance and attacked the existence of diversity of opinion.

This article is a brief examination of censorship in Ontario and Canada, with special emphasis on films and books.

Cases of recent film censorship in Ontario are the banning of the films, films.

WAYS OF LOVE and LA RONDE. The axe on the first film came because of THE MIRACLE, one of the three episodes in the trilogy. In his recent Maclean's Magazine article on Canadian movie censorship, George Hillyard Robertson revealed that THE MIRACLE was banntd by the Ontario censor sight unseen. The move apparently followed the outcry against the film in New York City. There, church groups succeeded in stopping the showing of THE MIRACLE on the grounds of "sacrilege."

In Britain, THE MIRACLE is being shown under an "X" classification—positively adults only. This in the country where the censor regularly cuts out the Lord's Prayer from any films on the grounds of "sacrilege.")

LA RONDE has also had an interesting history. It was also banned in New York City, on grounds that "it tends to corrupt public morality." It is showing in several other American cities where presumably public morality is of stronger fibre. Based on Schnitzler's Reigen, LA RONDE comments subtly, wryly and tastefully on the art of seduction. In Toronto, LA RONDE was shown at a special censor's screening; members of the clergy were among those invited and asked to express opinions. The two opponents to public showing of the film were a Catholic priest and a United Church minister. The objections raised included: "This picture is not true to life . . . it runs entirely counter to what an artistic production ought to be; it lacks the idealistic element that I think ought to be there."

LA RONDE is undoubtedly a film for adult audiences. Others would be bored. After the special screening, there was some talk of the possibility of an "X" rating being established in Ontario. But apparently, the censor has chosen the easy way out. LA RONDE is banned "for the time being."

Censorship of movies, like books, is a secret process. All exhibitors must submit their films for censorship and pay a fee to the censor for the service. The censor is free, under provincial statutes, to make any cuts or to ban a film. He does not have to explain his reasons to the public for any censoring.

With the new emergence of "art house" theatres which specialize in "different" films to cater to the "lost" audience—those who had outgrown standard film fare, censorship has become exposed to the bright glare of public curiosity. For the first time, there are movie patrons who take more than a passing interest in films, especially in European imports. So much that, the censor's control over film freedom is now being questioned by those who can't see why Toronto moviegoers should be cheated of a film that Washington and Atlanta see with impunity.

Along with questions about how censorship has affected particular films, there has come the most important question: Why film censorship at all? (The Robertson article in Maclean's Magazine revealed that eight out of the ten provinces have censor boards. The other two, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, take their cue from a nearby provincial censor.)

Films run into censorship more thoroughly and at more levels of their production and distribution than any other media. Hollywood films are subject to rigid self-regulation.

Instituted by the film industry in the early 1930's, the Motion Picture Code lays down a detailed list of taboos and "moral" standards that motives must meet. The Code was a result of self-protection. The industry had to do something to answer protests by many groups concerning the excesses of the adolescent chest-pounding of the new industry.

The Johnston office, formerly the Hays office, administers the Code which was drafted by two Catholics, one a priest and the other a layman. But the Code cannot be blamed on one Church, all major church groups in America supported the Code at its adoption. The Code means pre-censorship of all Hollywood-made films, since all scripts must be submitted to the Johnston Office for corrections and approval before production. The taboos have naturally affected the quality and diversity of themes that films might deal with. One long-reigning sex taboo even insisted that all married couples must be esconced in twin beds in bedroom scenes. It was Dr. Marie Stopes who charged that twin beds were perhaps the most danerous menace to happy marriage in America. But then, the Stopes' books on marriage and sex education ran into constant censorship trouble in America too.

After the Motion Picture Code pre-censorship, films go through local censor boards. There are several in America, but they do not thoroughly cover the nation, as provincial boards do in Canada. After the censor boards come the various pressure groups that attempt to interfere with films. The largest and most notorious pressure group is the Catholic League of Decency, and it is this organization that has helped to give the Catholic Church in America a bad name in authoritarian interference with public thought.

The League of Decency uses the powerful and effective method of theatre boycott. The League rates films, and suggests all Catholics attend or not attend films according to the rating. Most Hollywood movie makers say that the "C" rating (condemned) means box office death. (This has not always been the case, but the more conservative movie entrepreneurers flinch from bad League of Decency ratings.)

See No Evil

Above is a scene from the banned film, THE MIRACLE, as printed in Life magazine. It shows Anna Magnani, star of this Roberto Rosselini film from the triology WAYS OF LOVE. A peasant girl, Magnani, deludes herself to thinking her vagabond seducer is a saint. Actual stills from THE MIRACLE or LA RONDE were not available in this city for illustrating this article, since a ban on these films means that no publicity is available either.

One member of the LIFE magazine Roundtable on Movies (1949) protested:

"I think it is evil for a minority to stop a majority from seeing a film, reading a book, or hearing an idea. I think any group has a right to protest a film but not to put into effect a secret forceful boycott."

An example of League of Decency methods was suggested in director Elia Kazan's protest about the tampering with his film "A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE." Twelve cuts were made by the distributing studio in face of a proposed League "C" rating. Kazan protested on the grounds that these cuts impaired the artistic whole that had been attempted in this serious film. One cut was made in the line: "I would like to kiss you softly and sweetly on the mouth." The last three words were deleted. And to top this, when Kazan asked to be allowed to send an uncut version of STREETCAR to the Venice Film Festival, he was told that if he did so the League would give the "C" rating to the film in the United States.

Locally, we remember the animal-lovers' howl of protest that drove THE BRAVE BULLS out of a local art house. We wonder how many of these same animal-lovers are protesting about the fight between man and bull in the now-current QUO VADIS? In this less delicate or sensitive film, we hear the supposed sound of the bull's neck being broken by powerful Christian slave Buddy Baer. Perhaps it is a matter of whether bull-fighting is a Mexican sport, or a battle for Christian survival in a Roman arena.

The Breen vs. THE BICYCLE THIEF episode is a revealing example of recent Motion Picture Code operations. Joseph Breen has operated the Johnston Office since its original inception. In the memorable Italian film, Breen demanded two cuts before showing in America: the scene in which the thief is pursued into a brothel, and the scene when the young boy-child rushes to obey the call of nature. Both scenes were handled in the best of taste. The Breen brandishing of censorious scissors gave weight to a common opinion that the Johnston Office rulings sometimes seem founded on economic principles. In this case, the Johnston Office catered to Hollywood's hostility towards strong post-war competition from European films. (The Ontario censor did not make any such cuts.)

In Ontario, not all things said about the censor are antagonistic. Many exhibitors suggest that the censor is not to blame for all he does. His is an unhappy job, the constant trial of hitting a happy compromise against the loud protests of pressure groups such as church bodies, women's clubs, etc. But opponents of censorship charge that the censor always leans towards banning or cutting to be on the safe side.

Still in this province, ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT, a great war film with a strongly anti-war theme, was shown during the recruiting drive for the Korean Special Brigade two summers ago. On the other hand, Nova Scotia barred the film during the same recruiting.

Closer to home is the case of the Censor and ECSTASY. The University of Toronto Film Society included this early and now-notorious Hedy Lamaar film in its current program. But the campus Film Society officials bent over backward not to publicize the fact that ECSTASY was on the program. So much so, that membership selling membership early in the school year would only mumble non-committally when questioned about the item "Extase" on the program.

Then the Film Society hit a snag. A print of ECSTASY was available somewhere in the United States. But the Ontario Censor said it could not be shown in this province. Appealing this decision, the Society officials asked the Censor to at least look at this print of the film. They also pleaded special consideration since Film Society showings are not commercial showings. After viewing ECSTASY, the censor reversed his decision. The Film Society could go ahead. Then early this year, came a published report from the United States that the same film, ECSTASY, had been okayed for television use. Now many American children as well as Film Society members will have the chance to admire Hedy Lamarr sans clothing at long range.

Unlike ten years ago, film censorship is feeling a certain shakiness in its foundations. The competing medium of television seems to be the major termite. The Robertson article in Maclean's Magazine concluded with the prophecy that CBC operation of national television, and a resulting telecasting of films on a national network, will tend to break down the provincial censorship setup. The CBC would scarcely bother about submitting films used for approval of all eight provincial censors. So it may happen that the legal and moral position of movie censors would be challenged. Or, it may be that this flouting of local censorship rights by the national television system would be ignored, and the censors would go blithely along, cutting and banning away.

But television challenges censorship in another and more direct way. In the United States television's threat to the film monopoly of visual entertainment has become a challenge to the Motion

You Can't Read That Book

Picture Code. To bolster Hollywood movies against dreaded television, the Code is being whittled away from its rigid standards. Because self-preservation was the prime reason for the Code being brought in originally, it is not greatly shocking that the Johnston Office is easing up on the rules against sex and violence.

But, in the meanwhile, we cannot see LA RONDE or THE MIRACLE.

Book censorship in Canada is as secretive as movie censorship, but in most provinces it is handled by one agent: the federal Customs department. Therefore, censorship of books is usually a federal matter rather than local, unlike movie censorship by provinces.

In Ontario, as in all provinces, a Criminal Code ruling (Section 207) concerns local sale and distribution of "obscene and indecent" matter. But this ruling has not been invoked since two judicial cases of recent years: against comic joke books and against The Amboy Dukes. The latter case was heard in Brantford, with Toronto book critics among those testifying on the novel's literary and sociological merits. The attempt to ban or control was thrown out in both occasions, and neither provincial nor local authorities have attempted book or periodical censorship since that time. This is not true for all provinces, Quebec, for example, has a more rigid yardstick to manipulate.

The major book censor in Canada is the Department of National Revenue, as Blair Fraser pointed out in his Maclean's Magazine article of December, 1949. Under Article 1201 of the Customs Tariff Act, the Minister of National Revenue is directed to exclude anything "treasonable or seditious or of an indecent or immoral character." At all points of entry into Canada, customs men follow this directive, checking over books and referring any questionable items to the Department heads for decisions.

As a result, Fraser revealed, 505 books were on the Canadian banned list in 1949. The Revenue Department does not have to and does not publicize this list, or give reasons for any book banning. Although much of the list can be described as "trash", some of the books still kept out of Canada include Balzac's Droll Stories, William Faulkner's Sanctuary, James T. Farrell's Bernard Clare, and Charles Erskine Scott Wood's Heavenly Discourse, all serious works.

The Fraser article was effective in releasing at least one book from the ban, James Joyce's Ulysses. In fact, Toronto saw an interesting exercise in bookselling when Ulysses hit town, after the hasty official whitewash. Because of copyright restrictions, the modern Library edition of Ulysses could not enter Canada. Instead, only the more expensive British edition, with weak postwar bindings, was allowed. This edition was late in arriving despite the Maclean's publicity. At this point, an enterprising local bookseller stepped in, brought up a stock of the Modern Library edition — and that is the way many of us got our copies of Ulysses. (Of course, for many years many students have been smuggling in Ulysses from the United States, especially when the novel was on English courses.)

The case of Norman Mailer's World War II novel, The Naked and the Dead, is an interesting study of the Canadian censorship method. The ban on it was lifted only last fall. The comment made at that time was a reference to the Fraser article: "Well, it seems that the Deputy Minister of National Revenue finally got around to reading Mailer this summer." In 1948, when first published, The Naked and the Dead was sold in Canada. Suddenly it disappeared from the shelves. According to Blair Fraser, the novel was banned in May 1949 by personal order of the Revenue Minister, J. J. McCann himself. Until last fall, The Naked and the Dead was on the banned list.

The reason for the temporary banning of the Mailer novel was reportedly the certain "marked passages" that Dr. McCann said he wouldn't want his daughter (he hasn't any) to read. But considering the pressure which was suddenly and belatedly brought to bear upon the Minister, some people suggest that the violent anti-war theme rather than the sex may have been the actual cause of the prohibition. There is no way of pinning this down, of course, since book censorship is hidden behind a secret veil.

Logic and consistently have little to do with book censorship. Tobacco Road, the most famous Erskine Caldwell novel, was on the banned list and yet easily available in Canada. This was because a Canadian edition was published and it does not come under customs surveillance. Stopping an American edition in this case only seems to be economic protectionism. Many other novels have undergone the same experience.

In the meantime, recent American novels have brought emancipation to the ultimate four-letter sex word. James Jones' rough, tough From Here to Eternity, and J. D. Salinger's sensitive The Catcher in the Rye threw aside all previous inhibitions, and the censor's finger in the ban dike now seems futile. With this new freedom, all rulings against books on grounds of "obscenity" (and who can actually define that term?) need revision. It may be in the van of these new novels that Edmund Wilson's Memoirs of Hecate County has come off the banned list and suddenly appeared in Toronto bookstores this year.

In connection with the new emancipation of Anglo-Saxon words in recent best-sellers, one observer suggests that the customs censor does not try to hold up any book club choices. Both the Jones and Salinger novels were club selections. If a ban was clamped on a club choice, the censor would face an outcry which could be carried to the courts, since the publishers and the clubs have much capital invested in their choices. That is also why, suggests this observer, Droll Stories or Trotsky's Chapters From My Diary are still on the banned list, no publisher would find it worthwhile to contest the censor's ruling on those less popular works. Public indifference and departmental inertia combine to keep most books on the list.

But another and perhaps more dangerous reason seems to be behind some book banning. Instead of "obscenity" or "sedition", the real reason often seems to be "sacrilege". ("Sacrilege" is not in the statutes.) Balzac's Droll Stories are ribald tales with a sixteenth century setting. They are closely akin to the stories in The Golden Ass of Apuleius or The Decameron of Boccaccio, also classics which have been attacked by militant prudes. The language in Droll Stories is never crude and the literary quality is high. Yet this book is excluded while frankermouthed new novels enter freely. While The Naked and The Dead commits sacrilege toward the great God Mars, the Balzac work has been called sacrilegious by hypersensitive churchmen, since it tells tales of Renaissance monks and nuns that indicate the moral instability of that disrupted era. Why the ban? Sex or sacrilege?

One book clearly banned on the grounds of "sacrilege" is Heavenly Discourse, a collection of essays on God and man, written by American satirist Charles Erskine Scott Wood. This book has been available in Canada at recurring times in the now defunct American Penguin edition. There is no libidinous sex in these essays, only wry or bitter comment on how earthly beings pervert the teachings of Christ and the ways of God. In Canada, Heavenly Discourse was originally banned in 1927 by a church group which called it "irreverent and blasphemous". On this score, Scott Wood himself says in his introduction:

"Blasphemy is a matter of religious opinion, just as democracy and freedom are questions of political opinion, and opinion — religious or political — is not yet a crime. I am eager to have the 'irreverence' shown me. Reverence is not due to crowns or halos — heavenly or earthly — but to purity of spirit, greatness of soul, and goodness of deed."

Censors are not complete agres, but they present a constant danger to free society. Official censors in Ontario and Canada have done excellent work on the whole. But censors err often. This is because the work is usually given to political appointees, persons with no qualifications for this type of judgment. But more important, as public officials, censors are strongly subject to pressure groups. And in a secret censorship system, pressure groups find it much easier to get things done.

There are three main opinions on censorship. One is insistence on censorship. Another is completely opposed to censorship. Both these opinions are held by small groups. The third opinion is the most popular. It comes from the vaguely indifferent mass, members of whom feel, when asked directly, that somehow censorship is necessary. After all, everyone isn't intelligent or educated, somebody must protect them.

This vast indifference has eased censorship into the strong position it holds. So to protect the children and feeble-minded, LA RONDE and Droll Stories are kept from the adults. We forget easily that the basis of our system of government is the democratic compromise that evolves from the clash of diverse ideas. In a democracy, individual man is trusted to be a responsible citizen, to pick his own way from exposure to many ideas. If any man goes wrong, there are laws to cover any violations. There is no need to prejudge. No censor is needed. (Thought crime is a monopoly of totalitarians.)

In Ottawa this year, there has been some spirited defense of civil liberties. The CBC put up a strong defense of its talks by psychologists and scientist philosophers. And the Prime Minister himself answered Mr. George Drew's request for action against a Communist pamphlet by stating that this "vicious" pamphlet contained its own antidote for most Canadians. Mr. St. Laurent apparently trusts Canadians to make up their own minds.

What then can be done about existing censorship? Even if both movie and book censorship are being whittled, present abuses remain. The opposition to censorship is very weak. Money is needed, especially if legal questioning of the principle of censorship is to be undertaken, money is usually a conservative commodity. Another weakness, common to librarians, booksellers, and film society members, is timidity before censors. Let well enough alone, says librarians, things aren't as bad as they could be. Film society folk are unwilling to challenge the censor: Their special privileges rest solely on the censor's good will.

There are other means. Some students, inflamed by censorship abuses, talk of "citizens' committees" to combat censorship. Looking at the pressure lobbies, they cry "Fight Fire with Fire". But the individual student can do much on his own to fight censorship. Publicity would cripple censorship, bringing its shaky moral basis and actions from under, and book censorship, write letters to the censors concerned. Premier Leslie Frost is chief Ontario movie censor since he heads the Finance Department which is responsible for censorship. Write to him about LA RONDE and THE MIRACLE. Write to Revenue Minister McCann about banned books. If enough letters are sent, he will have to disrupt red-tape inertia. Letters suggest active votes.

And finally learn about censorship by reading books such as Morris Ernst's The Censor Marches On, or The Commission on Freedom of the Press report on Freedom of the Movies (by Ruth A. Inglis). Best of all, smuggle in a copy of Scott Wood's Heavenly Discourse and look up what he has to say about censorship. In one of his essays, all of which takes place in heaven, Rabelais, Mark Twain and Margaret Fuller, 19th century American writer and critic, discuss the topic:

"RABELAIS: The more you prohibit, the more curious they will be. To prohibit is to arouse thirst. My book has been on every bookstall for 300 years and never corrupted anybody. If they like it they are already corrupted. If they do not like it, they are not corrupted. Did you ever know of anyone who was corrupted by it— or by a drama?

"MARK TWAIN: My friend, it is one of the great books in the world, but it would have been destroyed by a modern censor. Yet you and Villion made the French language, I have found deep wisdom, keep satire and rollicking humor in your immortal book."

"MARGARET FULLER: So have I. Much is not of our day, but I skipped what offended me. I never felt that because strawberries grow out of manure, I must eat the manure also."

Three of these books are still banned from Canada. The fourth, The Naked and The Dead, just came off the banned list last fall. Heavenly Discourse is a collection of essays, commenting on God and man. Sanctuary is William Faulkner's notorious novel to which the new Requiem for a Nun is the regenerated sequel. Balzac's Droll Stories is a lusty classic, a series of tales of Renaissance days when life was gayer and freer.

Graham To Discuss Imperialism Today

"Joseph Chamberlain and his Imperialism" will be the topic of Mr. G. H. Graham, at a joint meeting of the Modern History Club and the Graduate History Club, tonight at 8:00 in Brennan Hall. Mr. Graham is Rhodes Professor of Imperial History at Kings College, University of London.

At present he is writing a sequel to his book Empire of the North Atlantic at Princeton University. One of the most eminent historians of today, Prof. Graham is a graduate of Queen's University, with post-graduate degrees from Harvard, Cambridge and Berlin Universities.

Professor Graham lectured at Harvard for several years, then returned to Queen's where he was professor for ten years until 1945. He received a leave of absence during the war and for a while lectured at the Naval College in Victoria, later entering the Army Historical Section for the remainder of the war.

After the war, Prof. Graham received his present appointment to the University of London. He has taken with him a distinguished record as an able lecturer and speaker.

The raised sticks of the Blues indicate that Captain Ernie Frey has just tied the score late in the third period in last night's Laval-Varsity hockey game which the visitors won, 5-4. Shown in front of the goal is Phil Arrowsmith with Jack Wheldrake off to the right. Goal scorer, Frey is partially hidden at the left. The win boosted the Laval team into first place in the league.

SPS Teams Split In Hockey Playoff

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Sr. SPS ran wild in the second period yesterday to beat Forestry A's, 7-4, and eliminate the woodchoppers from the Jennings Cup hunt. The Skulemen move on now to face Dent A's in the quarter-finals on Wednesday.

Smith led the Engineers with three goals, all on nifty solo efforts. Raftis had a goal and an assist as did Beatty. For the Foresters, Ross picked up a couple of points, one on a beautiful scoring rush and the other on a play that he set up for Swartzman.

Beatty gave SPS the lead at 3:05 but Ross raced back on the right wing to get it back quickly. Both goalies looked weak as the teams exchanged another pair of goals. Smith rushed all the way to give Skule a 2-1 lead at 7:15 but Lindsay fired home a Tomkins pass to tie it again at 10:55. Hookings of SPS was sent to the cooler then for tripping but there was no scoring. Beatty from Raftis put SPS ahead once more but Clark of Forestry just beat the bell, blasting in a loose puck at 19:57, leaving the first-period count at 3-3.

Skule started in where they left off as they took a two-goal lead in the first five minutes of the second. Sullivan from Burley got one and the other came from the stick of Smith on a breakaway. Swartzman took a pass from Ross on the way in to put Forestry one closer.

Two goals in 45 seconds in the sixteenth minute put the game on ice for Skule. At 16:12, Raftis scored on a nice passing play with Cooper and Beatty. Then at 15:57, Morish put Smith in the clear and he had plenty of time to beat McBride, the Forestry goalie. After that SPS was able to hold off the Forestry drive, even though Greenan spent the last two minutes in the sinbin with a tripping penalty.

In one of the most thrilling comebacks of the hockey season, Trnity A's came roaring back in the second period of yesterday's hockey play-off to down Jr. SPS, 3-2. The Skulemen reistered a pair of first period goals and seemed to have it wrapped up but the Buttery team came on and on to tie it up and Gay Dalgish shot the winner, with a couple of minutes to go.

There was no scoring in the first stanza until Butch Bowden, who played almost the whole game on the Trinity defence, received a boarding penalty. While he was off, George Jamieson got things rolling at 12 minutes with an assist from MacAlhone. A minute later, it was turnabout, MacAlhone scoring from Jamieson.

Dave Harley got one back early in the second and Pete Stewart tied it soon after. From then on, it was a sustained rush both ways. After several close calls at each goal, Dalglish popped in the winner on a screened shot from the blue line.

Trinity A's now take on Jr. Vic game in the semi-finals on Thursday.

Track

SPS' first relay team won the interfaculty 4-lap (620 yards) relay yesterday by nearly half a lap, in what may go on the books as an interfaculty record. The race was first held last year, and there is no offiical record yet.

The SPS team of Larry Yeigh, Earl Fee, Clint Husband, and Eric Kofmel finished in 1:09.4, well ahead of the Meds entry running with it. A Trinity team anchored by John Dashwood, came second in 1:12.2, in front of SPS' second team.

Jack Wall of Meds won the 50-yard low hurdles in 6.2 seconds, one-tenth of a second off the record. Murray Gaziuk and Earl Fee tied for second, and Jim Bassingthwaighte came fourth.

In the novice two-mile, Trinity made a clean sweep. Pete Crabtree won in 11:35, and John Harris was second, Gaunt and Thompson took third and fourth respectively.

The open two-mile will be held today at 5 p.m.

Sportswoman

The University of Toronto Women's Badminton quartet walked away with the honours in the Intercollegiate meet at McGill over the week-end with a total of 34 points. McGill placed second with 20 points, while Queen's followed in third spot with 16 counters. Toronto's four didn't lose a match in the entire meet and their position was never contested.

The Toronto co-eds won all the finals events. Daphne Walker, I UC, downed Helen Forbes, Queen's, in two straight 11-0 matches. Liz Russell, III UC, defeated Barb Delong, Queen's, 11-4 and 11-3. The Varsity doubles team of Anne Greey and Daphne Cross were successful in topping the McGill duo of Sheila Smith and Ruth Laffoley.

Bluebells Beat Sr. Mac 43-12 In Return Match Intermeds Lose 20-16

By JOAN HAGGERT

After a week's respite the wheels of intercollegiate girl's basketball began rolling again at Ryerson gym, last night, with the Blue-Belles coming off even Stephen with the McMaster squads. The first game of the evening saw Varsity Intermediates lose 20-16 and the Seniors swamped the Mac girls 42-12.

In the opener the Intermediates came literally to blows with the McMaster Juniors in what could be called a free and easy fashion. This gang busting style manged to keep the referees busy on the whistle end of the game—they handed out an average of six fouls a quarter. The score at the end of the first half provided proof positive of the type of game being played; the Maroons led 7-6.

The next quarter saw a definite upswing in the playing calibre and saw Varsity take over the lead for the first time. In the last quarter the girls began to get into the swing of things with some fine checking on both sides, but Mac managed to pull ahead of the Blues thanks to the sharpshooting of Barb Ross and at the end of the final whistle the score read 20 - 16 for the Hamiltonians.

Barb Ross provided the highlight of the evening with her long shots netting 15 points for the victors while Claire McMullen chalked up six for the Varsity gals. Outstanding on defence were Carmen Taylor for Mac and Jean Martin for the Blues.

On the Senior side of the picture the outlook was much brighter as the Blue gals proceeded to run a hard fighting Mac squad ragged with their lightning like passes and dazzling shots.

Varsity led all the way with the score reading 18 - 6 at the end of the half. The Blues really poured it on in the last half netting 24 points to Macs 6.

Alma Hatch played her usual sterling game, hooping 12 points in a razzle dazzle fashion which had the Mac guards shaking their heads in wonder. Freshie Shirley Roberts put in a very good account of herself both offensively and defensively while Mary Macdonald and Mary Lewis shone on the defence for the Blue-Belles.

For McMaster, Dorothy Burton was outstanding, netting five points while Ev Veale's three counters made her runner-up in the Mac scoring race.

Varsity: Hatch, Roberts, Dobson, Mooney, Wallace, Walker, Sarles, Capel, Wade, Lewis, Macdonald, Chipman.

McMaster: Burton, Veale, Baillie, Howie, Maguire, Bryans, Gardner, Hender, Pond.

Sportshoes

There were three varied basketball games recorded on the intramural front yesterday resulting in a close win, a one-sided win and a tie.

The one-sided win came in the major's group one; St. Mike's Seniors trounced Sr. UC, 52-29. The Mikemen went ahead 12-2 in the opening minutes but the Redmen closed the gap to 20-14 by the end of the period. From there on in it was a runaway as the winners piled on the points. Bob Warne and Fran O'Connor scored fifteen apiece to spark St. Mike's uneven victory.

In the close game Trinity dropped a tight 36-34 decision to Pre-Meds. The winning basket came with ten seconds to go in the game as Tile of the doctors put in a shot. A disputed basket may cause the Buttery Boys to dispute the decision which means a lot to them in the interfaculty race.

The tie game came in minor league action as IV Mechanicals tied PHE B, 12-12. Hersh and Macfarlane were big guns for the engineers and the flax-edders but neither team untracked themselves in the dull contest.

Junior Vic Wins Upset St. Mike's With 2-1 Victory

Junior Vic ousted St. Mike's A from interfaculty hockey yesterday with a 2-1 upset victory. The Victsters went ahead 2-0 in the first period and hung on to their lead despite the Mikemen's best efforts.

Mason scored from Bond and Jardine at the six minute mark to give Vic their early lead. Then after several dangerous rushes by St. Mike's Hinder scored from a scramble with one minute and 10 seconds left in the period. The only reason St. Mike's didn't score was Burnett who played sensationally in the Vicsters' nets.

At the start of the second the Mikemen once more turned on the pressure. It finally paid off with a goal by Cole from Duffy at the 6:50 mark of the period.

Harwich hit Copeland of Vic with a vicious check. Seconds later Harwich cross-checked Copeland and was thumbed into the sin-bin. He didn't like the decision and started swinging at referee Bowden who tossed him out of the game.

The Mikemen yanked their goalie for the last faceoff but as they were shorthanded it was no use to them. Grossi, St. Mike's goalie was outstanding for his team, stopping many tagged shots. Dale looked good for Vic both on defence and on several rushes.

McGill Win Cdn. Squash

McGill retained the Intercollegiate squash championships at Montreal over the weekend. Toronto trailed in second place and the other entry Western, placed third. Each college enters a five-man team and each player plays one entry from each college.

Varsity Captain Rick Gaunt won both his matches. He downed Martin Luxton of Western in three straight matches, 15-4, 15-6, 15-6. He had a lot more trouble with Hammy Quain of McGill but downed him 10-15, 15-8, 15-10, 10-15, 15-5.

The other three Toronto wins came when Varsity's last three men each downed their Western opponents. The Blues, Clive Cameron, Tom Dancy and John Walter seemed to find the Redmen much tougher opposition than the Mustangs as Gaunt was the only one to down a McGill squasher. Varsity's number two man, Gil Toppin, had bad luck in the draw and lost both of his matches.

Captain Rick Gaunt, undergrad champion at Hart House, will be playing Jack Libel, a grad for the Coventry Cup sometime soon. Gaunt will also represent Varsity in the American Intercollegiate championships early in March. He is also going to play on the Canadian team which should play Cambridge squash team when they arrive in March.

Campus Show

All-Varsity Revue

By JACK GRAY

Two or three things stick in my mind after seeing last night's performance of The All Varsity Revue for 1952. One is that you invariably get a beter show when you can draw on talent from the entire campus, rather than from the limited sphere of a college or faculty. And a second is the very pleasant recollection of seeing several faces I have noticed before this year, performers who have increased very much their ability to entertain since they first hit the boards at Toronto.

I'm not clawing away at the Thesarus looking for superlatives to strew in producer Jim Guthro's path, but I don't think there is any argument about the fact that The All Varsity Revue is the best campus show this year. Particularly in the first half it had the things you look for in a Revue—the more or less impertinent survey of contemporary events, pace, brightness, wit and good humor.

In a few lines, I'll get around to some of the things I didn't like. But first the bouquets.

A good big one goes to the orchestra, one of the best I've heard at a campus show in three years. And a special part of that goes to trumpeter Harry Hamilton for his work in Ellington in Colour. The work done by Dave Powrie on the set design was excellent. His sets for Philosophy on the Open Market, Afro-Cuban Rites and Varsity Ski Lodge were the best. And while I'm out flower-gathering I think a special mention is in order for two individuals, Patricia McDonough and Bob Jackson, both of whom turned in outstanding performances.

Jackson, whom I seem to remember first in a Vic show last year, has become a fine entertainer, with a sure sense of timing and the ridiculous. His little piece on the lecturer (Lecture Hazards) was better than its companion piece on the student, but both were funny and well done. Jackson has improved each time I've seen him. If he still has some time to put in and continues to get better at next year's All Varsity Revue he'll have them weeping in the aisles.

Miss McDonough, who popped up in St. Mike's Good News last year, turned in two character pieces which I liked. By far the toughest was her assignment in The Freshette Blues where for nothing at all she created a very amusing performance.

The 1952 version of the AVR opened with a bang and whooped its way through to the intermission. I'm not quite sure what happened after that, but in the second half the show lost much of the pace and drive that gave it its initial punch. The first half alone was worth the price of your ticket.

Registration Day exhumed a couple of tunes I seem to recall hearing before. But with some new and revised lyrics it had life and gaiety.

The skits in this year's AVR were uneven. Probably the best was Philosophy on the Open Market, written by Bert Stone and directed by Ben Wise. Philosophy and civic government and horse racing all came in for a ribbing. One thing that this, and other, AVR skits had, which campus shows generally have lacked this year, was quite a bit of topical humor. It went over well. Good performances were turned in here by Jack Weisdorf and Dave Armstrong.

The Lad With The Push Cart, written and directed by Bill Freedman, almost turned out to be a startling satire of Christopher Fry's Boy With A Cart. But not quite. It started well, but Freedman lost his original motive somewhere in the first few lines, and it went to pieces. Honorable mention in the Brave-Try-Division.

Jim Guthro's Peter Piper Paper Picker had some good moments, but was pulling some of its gags off the bathroom floor. Special Event, scripted by Stone and directed by Wise, had its moments too, but like Push Cart it gets relegated to the Brave-Try circle.

A large part of this year's AVR was the two production numbers, Afro-Cuban Rites, and Ellington in Color. In both numbers there was imagination and an attempt to try and get above the usual college show production number level. But neither was a success. Rites was in two parts, Primitive and Mambo. I think Cynthia Barrett is giving a college show too much to handle in her choreography. Although there was some fine dancing from Arline Patterson and Francis Chatkin, the meaning of the movement got garbled and the effects were soon lost. I think this same criticism can be levelled at the Ellington number, although it came through more clearly. The best part in both numbers was the music, and particularly Chester Smith's scoring of the Ellington.

On upsetting thing was the costumes. We have seen some excellent costume work recently in campus shows, but the AVR costumes suffered in almost every number where they were important. Among things that might be watched in future are materials, to suit the purpose, and color. Some of the color combinations were unholy.

People that should be mentioned: Judy Godfrey, for the Ladder throw-in; Gerry Reding, who turned in a lot of music and a pile of lyrics, some of it good, some of it bad—too much leaning on the ballad side; Syd Weingartner for his outstanding rendition of the Philosophy song; Bob Gordon for a much-improved piano routine; and stage manager Mike Thompson and his assistant John Soulsby who kept the backstage wheels oiled. There was also a chorus line which the audience loved—but it wasn't that good.

This year's AVR had its share of trouble before the campus finally got a chance to look at it. I'm glad we did. It stands as the best argument for continuing the All Varsity Revue in years to come. It is a production, which in spite of the rough edges, producer Jim Guthro and his large cast can well be proud of—and certainly the best of this year's crop of college shows.

Calamity Jane Pays Off

Last night we saw a real campus show—not to be confused with all the college and faculty revues which descended upon the campus in the pre-Christmas blizzard. For the All-Varsity Revue contained more of the verve and vigour of college life than any show we have seen this year.

Perhaps we doubly enjoyed the show because it nearly didn't come off this year at all. And after last year's February blank, we had begun to look forward to an all Varsity effort with a special enthusiasm.

However, the quality of most of the other campus shows this year filled us with grave misgivings as to the AVR. How could the campus produce one more original show, when it had been such an effort (in some cases, a rather wasted one) to keep the college revues going?

In darker moments, we wondered whether the AVR wouldn't be wiser to collect the best material (admittedly it would have had to be rewritten) from the other college shows. At least, the scripts and cast would have been at the producer's finger tips.

However, the Doubting Thomas in us has been silenced. Despite its unevenness in quality, the AVR had more sparkle and wit than most of the other revues combined. Somehow it managed to gather together much of the liveliness, and especially satire, that we have missed in the other campus shows.

At this point we will stop poaching on our reviewer's territory. For us, the really important thing about the AVR is that at last it seems to stand a chance of becoming a campus institution.

Within all the eddying whirl of extra-curricular activity, we would like to see the AVR become a rock of tradition somewhere well in the middle of the stream. And shows of the calibre of this year's AVR, will help to make it an indispensable part of undergraduate life.

Via Media

In a recent column in "The Globe and Mail", Mr. Frank Tumpane suggests that the peculiar phenomenon of the hatless student is an example of the unrevolutionary spirit of the university undergraduate. Referring to a Varsity editorial this fall, which complained of the rampant conservatism on the campus, he pointed out that the modern student was even too conservative to revolt from his revolutionary hatlessness. Even the pressure of cold weather could not make him cover his brow—like the rest of the citizenry.

Perhaps if Mr. Tumpane had had more opportunity to observe campus inhabitants he would have been struck by the number of ear muffs which appear in profusion with the slightest downward flicker of the nearest thermometer.

No one has yet attempted to assess the significance of the undergraduate earmuff. We wonder, however, whether this is not a perfect symbol of the via media. The contemporary undergraduate is not just too conservative to revolt against revolt. Rather he adopts a compromise in the earmuff; in this way he avoids the more basic issue of hats or no hats.

ISS Seminar

Gravyboat to India

The following article by Harold Nelson presents some penetrating criticism of the proposed India seminar. The opinions expressed are not necessarily those of The Varsity.

"Oh, to be in India
Now that the monsoon is there."
(With apologies to Robert Browning)

The latest word around the University is that the International Student Service (or World University Service) is planning to send 40 Canadians to a seminar in India this summer. That is provided WUS can find $65,000 for the seminar.

Apparently every student who feels he stands a chance at being accepted is applying for the trip. And why shouldn't they apply? Just think what a marvelous experience it would be to fly to India, meet strange people, eat strange food, get strange diseases. Wow!

The best part of the whole trip is that the lucky applicants won't feel that they have been sent on money obtained from their poor fellow students who have given up movies or beer to save money for Asian Aid. WUS officials plan to raise the necessary $65,000 by asking donations from business men.

However this raises the minor question of why any hard-headed businessman would give WUS money to send a group of university students to India. One of the reasons why the businessmen will be asked to give is apparent in the WUS explanation that $65,000 is less money than it costs to train a fighter pilot! India is teetering between Communism and democracy at present — if 40 Canadian students from a middle-of-the-road democracy go to India it may help to swing the balance in our favor. Therefore the hard-headed businessmen can look at their donations for the seminar in the light of the money being an investment in the fight against Communism.

This is a fine way to raise funds, but it provides a poor background for a seminar aimed at encouraging understanding.

When the students apply to go to India, they will be asked why they want to go on the seminar. This question and the companion question why should the students be sent, are the $65,000 questions. The answers submitted to the judges should be interesting, especially to an ethics professor.

If the students are honest, the first answer most of them will give is that it would be a grand trip. This might be called the practical reason for wanting to go.

Another answer which most applicants will give, and a few will give honestly, is that they want to know more about India for the sake of peace, brotherhood, or some other ideal. This they will hope to obtain by spending four weeks in a country where only the better educated persons can speak English and where they will live in a camp which will have an atmosphere completely foreign to that of India.

The judges, when considering the applications will have a tough time deciding how sincere students are in giving an idealistic reason for wanting to go to India. Most of the applicants will be influenced by both practical and idealistic reasons in applying. Another problem which the judges should consider is whether the students applying for the seminar are capable of benefitting from the month in India. Very few students on this or any other Canadian campii are capable of the objective mature approach needed to compare two cultures as different as that of India from our own.

One can only guess at what effect the students going on the seminar will have when they return to Toronto. Most likely they will be much more vociferous in telling the campus about India's problem and explaining her difficulties than the Indian students at Toronto have been. In four weeks they will be able to abstract general principles about India and Indians which will not be cluttered with the complications that would arise from a study over a longer period of time.

One will be able to tell a student who has returned from India by his cheerful greeting in some quaint Indian dialect, his habit of moaning Indian songs, while drinking, and his passion for sitting cross-legged around the campus spinning wool. Some seminarites may not go to these extremes, but there are always a few non-conformists in any crowd.

The normal, unfortunate stay-at-homes will pass the seminarite by and tolerantly explain to strangers "he's an Indophile, went to India, you know. Never been the same since."

This might be an exaggerated picture of the results of a seminar, but, like most statements there are elements of truth in it. Because most of the students "go overboard" for the land in which they are studying, their statements tend to sound as one-sided as a Pravda report of the Korean War. This apparent lack of objectivity colors every statement they make and as a result it is questionable what kind of influence they exert on the campus.

But like good Christian gentlemen, nothing can dismay them. And so a bon voyage to India. And don't forget your copy of Pogo.

OUR READERS WRITE

So Much For Marx

Editor, The Varsity:

I have plenty of work to do without taking time off to write letters to The Varsity, but when I came across Miss Endicott's article entitled "Class Education and Critical Thinkers", I came to the conclusion that Miss Endicott was not only unreasonably critical but not a thinker—I was just a wee bit fed up with the old "party line." If Miss Endicott didn't realize that the President of our university had stressed the non-lucrative education in the humanities in his speech only because the humanities were not being balanced with the "practical" courses, she has missed the whole point of Mr. Smith's address. I suggest that she re-read, or probably read, at least a few good articles on this controversial speech.

Certainly we are told that we have, and we do have a responsibility to the community as a whole, and some knowledge of the humanities is necessary if we are able to make our best possible contributions to the development of our society. But here Miss Endicott asks "how can one be successful in one's job and still be responsible to the community?" Has Miss Endicott got a one-track mind or does she think that everyone else in a capitalistic society has? Perhaps I have been lucky, but I have never met a person, especially not in the competitive "dog-eat-dog" fields of business who didn't have at least some genuine interest in the welfare of the rest of the people in the community. The two million dollar surplus over the T.G.H. fund-raising campaign objective is proof of a widespread humanitarian feeling in Toronto alone, and don't tell me that the sick are the only people who receive any sympathy. The much-criticized monopolies and exclusion politics of big business are only one aspect of our capitalistic system. The abuses are few in comparison with the co-operation of the "helping hand" policies among the majority of business men who gave rise to the big corporations which have been largely responsible for the establishment in the United States, for example, of the best standard of living in the world today. Russia included—way down on the list. Miss Endicott quotes Karl Marx to illustrate the "dog-eat-dog" aspect of capitalism. More poeple read the Bible which says: "Love thy neighbour as thyself", a creed better to follow than any economic cure-all theory.

Financial status is not made the criterion for entering University either. Nor is it because "those who come from the higher income groups will be less critical of the important institutions in our society" that we must pay fees to the University. A ridiculous idea if I have ever heard one. Does Miss Endicott not know about the scholarships, bursaries and the college loans which are rather liberally handed out to deserving students? Not every student with a good academic standing can get one of these yet, but I'm willing to bet that we will have university education free, with academic standing as the only criterion as soon as, if not sooner than could be brought about by a change in our social system which might be in the form of Communism, and all this without revolution. Komrades. I myself am working my way through college, having a good time and getting plenty out of my course, all because our good old capitalistic system provides me with a good job every summer — no pull. If a prospective university student is really "deserving" he'll find a way to go to college without too much trouble.

As an alternative to a radical change in our social system Miss Endicott suggests that instead of continuing in Canada the present cold war and anti-Soviet feeling, Canada and all the other countries disarm and prosper upon peace-time industry. Professor Lorne Morgan's pamphlet "The Permanent War or Homo the Sap" won't provide a practical answer to the above suggestion, but Miss Endicott should look at it—it is guaranteed to make even pessimists crack a smile. Practically, Miss Endicott, who makes the first move for disarmament—Joe? I'm laughing. Adolf Hitler's promises of non-aggression didn't come to much, and the "veto", walk-outs and stalling tactics of Russian delegates to the U.N. Assembly and at the recent Korean truce parleys don't give us much to work on if we are now to believe that Russian attempts to end the War and thoughts of future aggressive moves are genuine. Maybe, as Miss Endicott says and as I disbelieve, Mike Pearson's policies are "to blame for the atmosphere of cynicism and apathy" of Canadians; but just between you and me, Miss Endicott, I prefer these horrible conditions to the benefits of Siberian heaven. Maybe I hear and read the wrong things, huh?

As for the scandalous cheating exposes in the U.S., I would hesitate to blame the situation on student anxieties caused by the Korean War and conscription. "Cribs" were devised long before the Korean conflict emerged. The scandal as it has just recently been discovered by the newspapers.

Miss Endicott is enjoying (I presume) an education made possible by the capitalistic society, and I am sure that she doesn't really believe that More cow students have the advantage of her.

Hart House Debate

DEFEAT STATE MORAL CONTROL

Warden Supports Nays As Government Tumbles

Hart House debaters decided last night that the State should not be responsible for the morals of its citizens. The motion was defeated by a vote of 33 to 18.

Speaker Elmer Sopha later described the debate as very good with a fine serious tone throughout.

Warden Ignatieff of Hart House spoke to the House for the Opposition "breaking a custom of long standing", as he himself described his action. The Warden described the traditional character of his office as being "cloaked in absolute objectivity — a sort of sphinx-like objectivity which holds no opinions on any matter of public concern".

Warden Ignatieff stated that "Public concern with the mere externals of morality and legislations can only deepen the illusion that people are moral, offer false security and protect and perpetrate hypocrisy".

"In any advanced society morality is primarily a concern of the individual conscience," Ignatieff said. "Too much interference by public regulation or dependence on the morals of Society as a whole only leads to the deepening of the gulf between Law and mores on one hand and actual human behaviour on the other".

In moving the resolution, John Barton, Trin., stated that we are "living in a lark age, an age of moral decline and corruption".

Discussing corruption in governments Barton pointed to "The maelstrom of matted mink to the south". Barton asked members to be aware of "the signs of a coon coat capital to the north" also, and suggested that there is corruption in the Canadian government as well. He quoted dishonesty in the Liquor Control Board of Ontario, "one of the vilest forms of corruption".

Barton stated that the modern church no longer governs the morals of the majority. "The State is the only potentially effective organ (for governing public morality) that we have," he added.

Guest speaker Rev. Emlyn Davies of Yorkminster Baptist Church stated that "there is confusion of thought between the rightness of action and the morality of the individual". A person may be legally and morally innocent under our present system, he added.

A Prime Minister may take the responsibility for practices, Davies said, "but no Prime Minister can be morally responsible for anyone".

State responsibility for public morals leads to the "belittling of the individual", Davies stated. "No man can be good unless he has the freedom to be evil," he said.

"We are moral children," said Dave Gauthier, II UC, speaking for the resolution. "The State must help us until we are morally mature," he added.

Morry Kertzer, Law, stated that "moral judgment is relative to the particular situation" and as such cannot be effectively controlled by the State.

"The Government of Canada has neither the right nor the power to infringe on the liberty of thought and feeling," Kertzer concluded.

"The nature of morality is influenced by the social climate", said Reg. Taylor, grad. "To the extent that the State can control the social climate, I think it is fair to say that it should," he added.

P. Giles, Trin., called morality an entirely individual affair based on motive. If the State controls ethics "a man is neither moral nor immoral —he is amoral," he said.

An earlier resolution asking the House to send a letter of sympathy to the royal family and one of congratulations to Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth, was carried unanimously.

The Vic Men's Common Room (top) is rapidly approaching the condition of the Junior Common Room (bottom) as it appeared last year when it was closed for a week, but the JCR is again trying for the title of messiest-looking common room. Rio And Edinburgh Assemblies Reported Today By Syd Wax

A report on the Edinburgh and Rio international student conferences will be given this afternoon by Syd Wax, "foreign minister" of the National Federation of Canadian University Students. He will be speaking at 4 p.m., in Room 11, University College.

Wax represented Canadian students at both conferences in his capacity as Chairman of the NFCUS International Activities Commission.

The Edinburgh conference held early last month, had representatives of 25 national student unions from Europe, North and South America, Asia and Africa. Many of these unions were non-Communist and had found it difficult to work with the Communist-dominated International Union of Students.

At the conference there was widespread opposition to the formation of another strong union, to rival IUS, according to Wax's earlier report. However, the delegates did agree to the erection of a weak secretariat, destined purely as a co-ordinating administrative body without executive powers.

One of the main topics of discussion at Edinburgh was the Student Mutual Assistance Program (SMAP), a program of technical aid to underdeveloped countries. For example, the British National Union of Students is sending a team of experts in student affairs to give advice to students in West Africa.

At Edinburgh, NFCUS was mandated to investigate the possibility of student identity cards in North America. These cards, used in some European countries, entitle the bearer to such benefits as cheaper meals, lower train fares, and free admission to cultural events.

The Rio conference, sponsored by the Brazilian national student union, was designed to set up a Pan-American student union. Wax attended it as NFCUS observer, along with NFCUS President Jean de Margerie, Laval, but left before the conference ended. However, he described it as very political in nature. Many of the South American countries, he explained, were represented by Communist, anarchist or socialist splinter groups, rather than by a representative student union.

When he left, Wax said the trend at Rio seemed to be towards a Latin-American, rather than a Pan-American, union. Since that time de Margerie—who stayed in Rio till the end of the conference, —has returned to Canada, and has conferred with Wax at the annual NFCUS Executive in Ottawa last weekend. It is expected that Wax will be able to give a complete report on the Pan-American conference.

Lectures Try To Better Inter-Canada Relationship

The Gray Memorial Lecture in honor of two Varsity students who believed in better relations with French Canada will be given this year by the Hon. Onesime Gagnon, Quebec Provincial Treasurer. M. Gagnon will speak on "Cultural Developments in the Province of Quebec — Minorities' Rights and Privileges under the Education System" on Monday night at 8:15 in Convocation Hall.

The Duncan and John Gray Memorial Lectureship was established by George Gray, school inspector in the Ontario Department of Education, in 1945 in memory of his two sons, to promote their ideal of a united Canada. In the spring of 1940, John Gray, then a student of Modern history at the University of Toronto, worked on a typical French farm on the Ile d'Orleans, under the auspices of Visites Interprovincial. Later in the season he was joined there by his father and his older brother Duncan, a graduate of Toronto. All three were so impressed with the kindness and sincere hospitality shown them that John decided to devote his life to bringing about better understanding between French and English Canadians, to the promotion of a more united Canada.

John Gray, a pilot officer in the RCAF, died on active service in 1944, leaving his estate to found a scholarship in University College. His brother also died during the war. Their father, knowing of his sons' ideal founded a clearer understanding "to foster a clearer understanding of contribution that the French Canadian element of our poulation has made and is making to Canada in the hope that with wider knowledge a sounder Canadian citizenship may develop." The foundation is used each year to bring a distinguished Quebecker to give a talk on French Canada. It is administered by the Department of Modern History under the supervision of the President of the University.

This year's lecturer, M. Gagnon, is the provincial treasurer of Quebec. A graduate of Laval and Oxford Universities, he has received an honorary degree from Bishops University, as well as from his own university of Laval. He has practiced law in his native province since the 1910's, and has been active in politics for more than twenty years. He was elected to the House of Commons in 1930, and served as minister without portfolio in the Bennett government in 1935. Since then, he has been associated with the provincial government in various capacities.

This is the fifth in the series of Gray lectures. The first was given in 1947, by the Rt. Hon. Louis. St. Laurent, then Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Seek Applicants For Next Editor

Applications are being accepted today in the Women's SAC office, University College, for next year's editor of The Varsity. Any student, graduate or undergraduate, in attendance at the University may apply. However, the constitution of the Students' Administrative Council suggests that applicants should have worked on The Varsity for three terms prior to application.

According to the SAC constitution, the editor is personally responsible for every aspect of the paper. "In fact, this means simply that the editor must choose a masthead which is capable of carrying out the various departmental responsibilities", said Varsity Editor Barbara Browne. "No one person can check every item and every headline every day", she added.

"More directly, the editor is responsible for the editorial page—it is his or her special interest. Here again, however, the editor does not do all the actual work," she said.

"In the final analysis, as leader and as co-ordinator of all departments, the editor is responsible for everything in the paper", she concluded.

The final deadline for applications will be next Monday at noon.

VIP's Will Attend Laval Celebrations

Quebec, Feb. 20—Two outstanding Canadians, His Eminence, James Charles Cardinal McGuigan, and Prime Minister Louis S. St. Laurent will take part this week in the four-day celebrations which will mark the beginning of the centennial observation of historic Laval University, their alma mater.

The celebrations will bring to this Ancient Capital more than 2,000 former students of the oldest French - Canadian institution of learning on the North American continent.

The first stage of the celebration will open Thursday and will be highlighted Saturday night when the Prime Minister will address a banquet at the Chateau Frontenac.

On Friday afternoon, honorary degrees will be conferred on a number of outstanding Canadians. Mr. Justice G. Lacroix, chairman of the Old Boys Association and official delegate of alumni from Canada and the United States, will play tribute to Laval at the afternoon ceremonies.

Saturday will be devoted to the meetings of the Old Boy's associations and class reunions. Saturday's events will be climaxed by the dinner at which the Prime Minister will be the guest speaker.

The sports festival organized in connection with the centenary celebration will be held from Friday to Sunday. On Friday evening the Boston College hockey team will clash with Laval and other events include a skiing expedition to Lake Beauport, a French-Canadian dinner, crowning of the Festival queen and a visit to points of interest in this Ancient capital.

This week's events will mark the opening of a 10-month celebration marking the granting of the Royal Charter to Laval a hundred years ago.

During this period, outstanding educationists from all parts of the world, scientists, writers, philosophers, will attend the various sessions. The events will have a historical, religious, academic, social and artistic nature and will cover all phases of Laval's outstanding contribution to French Canadian culture on this continent.

Laval University was the issue of Quebec Seminary which was founded in 1663 by the first bishop of New France, Msgr. de Laval. Teaching at the university level, however, dates back to 1640, when students at the Jesuit College bean their studies there. It was recognized as a civil institution on December 8, 1852, when it was granted a Royal Charter by Queen Victoria

Harvard University, which was founded in 1635, is the only university in North America whose history goes back further than Laval's.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

It is only natural to feel skeptic when approaching QUO VADIS (Loews). The publicity has been overwhelming and the critics have also emphasized that this is the colossal-est of them all; that it is the most expensive film made ($7 million), and other awesome, frightening things.

In the light of all this hullaballoo, my review of QUO VADIS is in the nature of a minority report. It stinks all the way through of money. The two leading principals stink without having any connection with money. The story is corny and ponderously overbearing. But I liked QUO VADIS very much.

For one thing, the gigantic, lavishly-poured-on spectacles are exciting to the eye. And even more, unlike most previous spectacles, they are integral parts of the story. So when Marcus Vicinius (Robert Taylor) and legions of soldiery march into Rome to accept Nero's accolades, the big sweep of thousands of extras filling the huge square all makes sense. The burning of Rome is even better. Technicolor's gaudy redness is used to advantage here. One shot of the milling faces of the panicky mob is a swirling impressionistic triumph. And the climactic Roman circus when the Christians are offered up as sacrifices to Nero's lust is a rich dose of violence, bestiality and terror. You just aint seen nothing like it.

Because the MGM production staff has thrown the whole kettle of mulligan stew at you, the lavishness tends to drown out the human actors. In the case of Robert Taylor and Deborah Kerr as the barbaric Roman officer and the Christian slave who makes a new man out of him, these two were not drowned out enough. Woodenly they emote through this whole business as if it were a Young People's skit at a Sunday School Christmas concert.

But matching the hammy production pound for pound is young British actor Peter Ustinov as Nero. Ustinov rolls his eyes, quivers his nostrils, lips, chin, and even sings terribly in a masterful performance. Even among a thousand extras, Ustinov's exaggerated acting stands out.

In fact, the strength of QUO VADIS that helps you excuse its excesses, is the predominantly British supporting cast. Leo Genn is the smooth, wily, intelligent Petronius. In his Roman cloak and toga, he is as urbane as if he were in his study clothed in pipe and smoking jacket. Genn has some of the best lines (and there is wit, too, in this grab-bag of MGM millions). His deathbed (?) oration is a bright speech that makes you prick up your mental ears. This is welcome at this stage of the film, since your ears had early given way to the steady assailing of your optic sense.

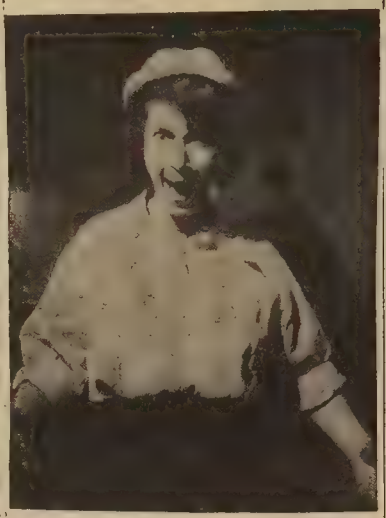
Finlay Currie is a huge Scottish version of the Big Fisherman, Peter. Abraham Sofaer is a gentle ingratiating Paul of Tarsus. Buddy Baer is a huge, muscular Christian bull-killer. Felix Aylmer (Polonius in HAMLET), Nora Swinburne (the mother in THE RIVER), Norman Wooland (HAMLET'S Horatio) are others present.

Seductive evil is Poppaea's forte supposedly, but Patricia Raffan's version is of cold snake-like deadliness. Much more passionate as well as sympathetic is Italian actress Marina Berti as Petronius' slave Eunice. This one is really a nice warm doll.

In a very minor role can be seen red-head Adrienne Cori, who was one of the three adolescents in THE RIVER. She is among the Christians just before they go into the arena to get the works from a pack of hungry lions. (If you thought FABIOLA was exciting in its arena scenes, wait till you see them magnified ten times and in Technicolor in QUO VADIS.)

For some strange reason, perhaps the Shakespearian influence in our lives, the British accents of Ustinov, Genn and company sound much more authentic as Roman or Christians, than the flat Midwestern twang of hero Taylor. Taylor is a nice-looking guy all right and he takes the whole thing very seriously but somehow you expect him to lead the women westward or some such thing any minute.

The other weakness besides the two principals is the unimaginative and saccharine treatment given to the scene of religious symbolism with Peter and the boy Nazarius and the message from God. The final scene with Peter's staff flowering is of the same key. We are reminded of the ludicrous dressing-up given to Ave Maria which marred Disney's FANTASIA, an otherwise exciting experiment.



In the three-hour length of QUO VADIS, the dull corny bits about Christianity winning out constitute only a small part. The rest is barbaric bravado, and suits anyone in a circus mood. And even in the Roman arena the Christian slave overpowers the bull to put the skids under Nero. It is strength and brutality not sweetness and light that wins out for the Christians.

There is no getting away from it, along with its $7 million of colossal circus, QUO VADIS makes a satiric comment about mankind so far. Without realizing it, of course. It's an engrossing and entertaining film.

There have been some beefs sounded on the campus again about special prices. This time in reference to QUO VADIS, of course. I discussed this point with one theatre manager who said that in his case, prices were raised for particular pictures because they were "special audience" films. An example is THE RIVER. It would not make much money in the neighborhood circuit. So money has to be taken in at its first-run showing to pay the high rental. Other more mass-aimed films can pick up the shekels as they make their local rounds.

Good Godfrey!

W. J. Blackhall, a graduate of the University of Toronto, won the senior division of the Hart House 30th Annual Exhibition of Photography. His picture "Fantasia", was termed by John J. Lawson, one of the judges, as "a very delicate treatment of a snow landscape". P. Miller won the K. B. Jackson Trophy in the junior division, and the Hart House award for the colour section went to J. B. Stears.

Feature of this year's judging was an electrical apparatus belonging to the Toronto Camera Club. This consisted of a number of light bulbs. For each picture, each judge turned on one to four light bulbs, the total number of bulgs turned on being the total number of points for that picture. The judges were John J. Lawson, of the Toronto Camera Club, Professor A. F. Coventry, and F. E. Moffatt, a Toronto artist and photographer. Lawson commented on the black and white prints, while Professor Coventry critized the colour transparencies.

Honorable mentions were won in the senior division by C. B. Bowyer, H. B. McDermid, C. W. Millburn, and H. Sumberg. In the junior division they were won by I. A. Ford, J. S. LeGallais, and J. D. MacGowan. J. S. Barton, A. M. Fallis, R. H. Gaunt, J. G. Hooper, D. A. Smith, D. A. Sprott, and R. R. Tasher obtained honourable mention in the colour section

Lawson considered all the photos accepted by the judges as representing "good examples of contemporary photography". "Those winning honourable mentions in this exhibit would have a good chance in any international salon," he said. He described photography as "one of the hobbies that give most to the individual directly".

Professor Coventry said that the colour transparencies will be displayed in light-boxes in the art gallery.

A second criticism of the show will be given by one of the judges at 6:00 p.m., Wednesday, February 27. Women of the university may view the exhibit on the two Wednesday and Sunday afternoons of the show, which will last till March 2.

Use Elizabethan Stage For Richard II Play

"Richard II will be staged as I have never done Shakespeare before," said Robert Gill, director of Hart House Theatre, yesterday. Gill is using the Elizabethan idea of a permanent set, and the curtain will be open from the time the audience enters the theatre until the end of the play.

Gill hopes that his technique will achieve intimacy between the audience and the players, as it did in Shakespeare's day. The set, designed by Jean Bannihr, who did the set for "A Phoenix Too Frequent" this fall, "approaches and equals the Elizabethan stage", Gill said, and uses the balcony structure.

Changes of scenery indicated by lighting, Gill said, which will be extremely difficult because of the complexity of the set. Gill said that an Elizebethan set was almost essential for Richard II because of a stage direction in the scene at Flint Castle, (Act III, scene III) — "King Richard appears above on the walls." In this scene the king and his companions must at times be separated from the enemy camp, and the balcony will be used to achieve this effect.

The title role in Richard II was the most difficult to cast, Gill said, because of the growth and development of the character, who only gradually, through adversity, achieves the kingly characteristics he should have had from the beginning.

The entire sequence concerning the Duchess of York and the Duke of Aumerle (Act IV, scene I) has been cut, Gill said, for dramatically structural reasons. He explained that this scene is rarely performed, both because of the time element, and because this sub-plot is irrelevant to the main movement of the play.

Gill said he considered Richard II one of Shakespeare's important plays because it is essentially about one thing—kingship, and the belief in the divine right of kings, which is a recurring theme in the play.

The delay caused by the performance of the All-Varsity Revue for two days this week will have no serious effect on the play, Gill said. He added that because of the complicated set,

Model Council Meets For Final Discussion

Tonight at 8 in Cartwright Hall, St. Hilda's College, United Nations Club will hold its first Model Security Council meeting of the year. The Council will have at least three separate resolutions on the question of annexation of the Suez Canal by Egypt.

First will be a resolution by Egypt demanding the immediate withdrawal of British gassisons, second will be a resolution by the United States requiring some form of four partite agreement for defence to run at least until the expiary of the British-Egyptian treaty and thirdly, it was learned last night that France will be submitting its own resolution.

The French delegate to the Model Council, Dave Trent, I Trin. said, "We believe that the American resolution will not recognize fully the problems of Colonial powers." He pointed out that "more than one middle and Near East power recognizes that the stability of its government depends upon the existence of foreign troops in the area ready to quell uprisings."

From comments of the various delegates received today it appears that there is a possibility of a veto on tieher side.

Guild Presents War Fantasy

A fantasy on the futility and stupidity of war will be presented tonight by the University College Players Guild. The play—"Aria de Capo" by Edna St. Vincent Millay —will start at 8 pm. in the UC Women's Union.

Cesar Franck's Sonata in A Minor for piano and violin will also be on the program. James McManamy, III St. Mike's, will play the piano, and James Cole, I Music, the violin.

Members of the UC Music Club will be admitted free to this performance, as wel as the Players Guild members. Admission to others is 25 cents.

RAMARKRISHNAN

The Gentleman Stayed

By ADELE KREHM

In 1948, a young economics lecturer at Madras University, India, was awarded a scholarship. John Ramarkrishnan came to Canada for one year of postgraduate study with the aid of the Vincent Massey Scholarship but found he needed at least two years to complete requirements for a Ph.D.

He decided to take another M.A., this time at the University of Toronto. In 1950 he was given the S. Hillman Memorial Award. At the same time Ramarkrishnan was appointed as an assistant in the department of Economics for one year.

In India, university students have fewer privileges than Canadians but nevertheless work harder, noted Ramarkrishnan. There, they are imbued with a strong sense of nationalism and have a desire to build up their country, he added.

Ramarkrishnan is a Christian but he found little religious intolerance in South India. The only intolerance in the predominantly Hindu country, is in the northern part where difficulties arise from political and economic differences. Ramarkrishnan was born in Madras where his father is minister of a Church of South India. This Church is unique in that it is a union of Anglicans, Methodists, Presbyterians and Congregationalists.

"Throughout history you can see we are not a warlike people and although the British have praised Indian troops, we have never tried to conquer another country for over 2,000 years," commented Ramarkrishnan.

He has noted several distinguishing features of Canadian and Indian University students. When a student finishes high school here, he has a better grasp of the different branches of study and a more practical outlook on life.

Canadian students are not bookworms but can work hard and work themselves up in the world. In Canada a student can even work his way through college, he said.

However, in India, when a student graduates from high school, he is "at sea" and has no practical grasp of the world. Those who are fortunate enough to have the money, can continue their education, but those who cannot afford it go into clerical work. High school graduates are none too eager to do unskilled labor because there are so many uneducated people to provide cheap labor.

An amazing amount of leadership arises from Indian girls in political groups. At present there is a woman holding the post of vice-chancellor (president) of a university; an ambassadress; a woman holding a portfolio in the federal government and one woman as governor of a province. Uneducated women in India are far behind the women of Canada, however.

Ramarkrishnan mentioned one way in which the students try to build up the country. Practical girls' groups go to the small villages to aid the poor. These girls wash the babies, teach the mothers health and hygiene, and teach them to read and write. They even teach the women how to make themselves more presentable to their husbands.

This year Ramarkrishnan was awarded the Warren K. Cook Fellowship. He is primarily interested in teaching economics at an Indian University but may go into government work which needs trained men. John Ramarkrishnan hopes to complete his thesis on industrial relations this year so that he can go home as soon as possible and help to build up his country.

UBC SUICIDES

Milton Revamped

In the interest of the University of Toronto's much discussed remedial English classes The Varsity is reprinting the following column from The Ubyssey.

As expected, the usual number of students flunked English 200 this year. The main reason why students take the count on English 200 is their inability to master Paradise Lost, Johnny Milton's long-winded epic.

In other years this fact has not bothered the hard-boiled (three minutes) English department. But this year after the Christmas exams the department became slightly troubled over the fact that 67 boys let their razors slip into their Adam's apples the morning after receiving their English marks.

They were slightly more disturbed when 36 girls committed suicide by drinking caf coffee straight because their English marks showed their respective I.G.'s were lower than a dashhound's* belly.

Finally seeing the light, the English department has decided to make the course easier by bringing Paradise Lost up to date. Next year here is how Milton's masterpiece will look.

Cheating Football Team

Once upon a time there was an educational institute called Heaven Tech. Now this college had a pretty good football team, the Angels. In fact, the Angels were undefeated in the local universe and had the loudest, most enthusiastic cheering section in the neighborhood (can you imagine 3,000 rooters all playing "Hit That Line" on their harps?).

Well, the team was sailing along fine until the whole backfield was caught cheating on exams. The four, Satan, Belial, Beelzebub and Mammon, were not only kicked off the team, but their school sweaters were taken away from them and they were told their services would be no longer required. The disgruntled four immediately enrolled in the University of Hell where the entrance exams were much easier.

Satan, the quarterback, calls the team into a huddle and explains the situation. He suggests an off-tackle smash at Earth. The fullback, Beelzebub, gets up on a soapbox and says it's going to be a long, tough dash to Earth, and asks who is going to have enough courage to try the broken-field run.

Timing his cue well, Big Hero Satan jumps up.

"I'll be the Lone Ranger," quoth he, the buttons popping off his shirt, "but on one condition: no one else can volunteer now that I am the fair-haired boy."

All the ex-Angel swoon over Satan's bravery.

"Oh, you big brave boy," they scream, "going down to the Earth, home of income taxes, Christmas exams, and sloe gin, all by your teensyweensy self. Imagine that, and with Eve running around down there clad in a fig leaf original. How brave can you get?"

Apple Salesman

Displaying his best Pepsodent smile, Satan mounts his pitchfork and is off in a cloud of hellfire and brimstone. Landing in the approximate vicinity of Hollywood and Vine he spies with his little eye Eve, who is wandering around looking for a bargain sale.

Satan takes the appearance of A Serpent (using mirrors), and, doing a dance that would put Gypsy Rose Lee to shame, attracts Eve's attention. He gives her the gears about how good those Okanagan apples on that tree are. Eve, not realizing that Satan is the original door to door salesman, falls for his line. She sinks her molars into an apple and the Garden of Eden lights up like the head pinball machine in Harold's Club.

Eve, not exactly stupid (not exactly, but pretty near), realizes that she has done wrong. But determined that no "peroxide hussy" is going to get her Adam, she persuades Adam to gulp a Kelowna Special, too.

Adam relents, Eve unties the knot in his arm, and the rest of us have suffered ever since.

And this is no applesauce.

P.S.—The whirring noise you hear in the background is one Jonathan Milton stirring restlessly in his grave.

*Purists and Easterners spell this word "dachshund" and pronounce it more or less like "dock's hoont." The more plebian of us, however, are allowed by Webster's New International Dictionary (1950) three alternative pronunciations, "doks hoond, dash hund, or dash und." —Ed.

Press Youth To Support Colombo Plan

Reverend Roy de Marsh urged Canadian youth to write letters to the government of Canada asking the government to continue the Colombo Plan. Rev. de Marsh addressed the Timely Topics group at the Hillel Foundation last night on the topic "South-east Asia and India—a challenge."

"Canada's one year commitment of $25 million to the Colombo Plan expires in March and it is unrealistic to suppose the government would appropriate another commitment without knowing it has the full support of the Canadian people." said de Marsh.

Rev. de Marsh is the general secretary of the Student Christian Movement on the campus and is also the chairman of the Co-ordinating committee of Canadian Youth Groups. The purpose of the CCYG is to promote intergroup activities on the campus.

The conditions in Asia are providing a basis for a social revolution Rev. de Marsh said. "The object of this revolution is social justice for a suffering people who know that people in other parts of the world are living in comfort", he added.

"Communism has succeeded in capturing and directing revolutions to its own ends in the past 50 years and today communism is succeeding in saying the things the people of Asia want to hear," commented Rev. de Marsh.

It was decided at this meeting that the SCM and Hillel both appoint committees to investigate the possibilities for working together and holding one joint meeting each year to which they would invite some outstanding speaker to address the groups.

...eature Cannibal Saga ...n Melville Anthology

...ING PORTABLE MELVILLE, Edited by ...ay Leyda, MacMillan's, 1952, $2.95.

...elville more than once looked ...n himself and cursed his fate ... he should, in all likelihood, go ...n to posterity as a 'man who ...d among cannibals'. Taking a ... at the tremendous interest in ...ville today—he is subjected to ...re studies than any other Ameri... writer—it would appear that he ...d hardly have worried about the ...ression he was going to make ... posterity.

...The past year alone has seen the ...ication of three important books ...t him—Melville's Early Life ...d Redburn (William H. Gilman), ...rman Melville: A Biography ...een Howard) and The Melville ...e (Jay Leyda) as well as a very ...ssful stage adaptation of his ...e tale, Billy Budd by L. O. Coxe ...d R. H. Chapman, and, finally ...e production of an opera, Billy ...dd, by two such distinguished ...ists as Benjamin Britten and ... M. Forster.

...None of these current tributes to Melville's genius give the slightest support to his worst fear about himself, and only if he were to return and pick up a copy of The Viking Portable Melville would he ever get the impression that posterity was emphasizing his pot-boilers and adventure stories at the expense of his more important works.

Protesting that Moby Dick can be purchased for 25c at any corner store, the editor of The Viking Portable Melville has included only Father Mapple's Sermon in his selection and given the first 340 pages of this 750-paged anthology to Melville's early tale of adventure among the cannibals, Typee. So, too, the Melville Portable contains more letters of the author in question to his friends than any Portable we've seen yet. These are followed by the usual excerpts from other works by the author,—in Melville's case, Bartelby, The Confidence Man, Israel Potter and the long narrative poem Clarel are all represented in part as well as some of his poems. Most readers will be familiar with the Portables and will have decided long ago whether or not they liked the broad but piecemeal selection which this series offers.

For our part, we have always liked our reading matter whole and this probably accounts for the fact that when we put down the Portable Melville, the selections we remembered were the ones that we had been able to read complete Typee, Hawthorne and his Mosses, and, best of all, Billy Budd.

Billy Budd is the tale of a Handsome Sailor, an innocent, unfallen Adam on the H.M.S. Indomitable whose active good-natured innocence makes him the victim of motiveless malignity on the part of the Master-at-Arms, Claggart. Claggart, 'with no power to annul the elemental evil in himself', accuses Billy Budd of inciting mutiny in the presence of the ship's Captain. And, even as Adam was imperfect in his natural state and fell, so, too, a natural imperfection of Billy Budd's, 'an occasional liability to a vocal defect' is the cause of Billy's fall. He becomes excited, and, unable to protest his innocence vocally, strikes out with his fists at Claggart and kills him.

Billy Budd is shortly hanged at the yard-arm for his fatal act of violence and the rest of the story is taken up with the conflict in the Captain's heart over the immediate necessity to hang Budd in accordance with Naval Law and his personal awareness that Billy is, of all people on board ship, the most innocent of human beings. Claggart, depraved according to nature, has been struck dead by an angel of God, but 'the angel must hang'.

Here Melville's simple tale of Billy Budd becomes a vehicle for presenting the Christian paradox and analogously the expulsion of natural depravity is only accomplished through the crucifixion of an innocent over whose fate an understanding father (the ship's Captain) is powerless. Readers who pick up Billy Budd and find the setting and the nautical terms unfamiliar and uninteresting will, if they finish the tale, appreciate Melville's insistence that he was not just writing one more romance or tale of some monumental hero, and that he needed 'plenty of sea-room to tell the truth in.'

...Chino Prison Freer

...RISONERS ARE PEOPLE, by Kenyon J. ... Scudder, Doubleday Publishers, 1952, $3.50.

Kenyon Scudder lacks a dramat... story-telling style and conse...ently, Prisoners Are People will ...obably not march into the best-...ller class with the same ease that ...onald P. Wilson's My Six Con...cts did last summer. Powell was ...ainly interested in presenting ...rug addiction to the public as a ...edical and psychological problem, ...hich could not be solved by ...rusting addicts behind locked ...oors. Scudder is not interested in ...he type of criminal but in all ...eople who break the law and find ...hemselves in prison.

Working in the state of Californ... Scudder took over the develop...ent of a new experiment in treat...g prisoners like people at the ...alifornia Institute for Men, at ...hino. Carefully selecting desir...le candidates from San Quentin, ...oups of prisoners have been sent ... Chino durin the past decade ...here they are given just about ev...y freedom available to the aver...e civilian and where all the trap...ings usually associated with a ...rison have been abandoned. Chi... has no armed guards and few ...cked doors. Prisoners have no ...umbers and are allowed to wear ...othing of their own choice. Of ...e 9,000 inmates who have pass... through Chino, only 290 have ...ttempted to escape, and over ...ree-quarters of these have been ...pprehended.

Scudder believes that the men ...ho pass through his hands should ...turn to society better men than ...hen they first entered prison. The ...hino plan is based on the concept ...hat there can be no such regen...ation except in freedom. The suc...ss of the Chino experiment has ...d far reaching effects, for it ...arked the beginning of penal re...rm in a state that was second to ...ne in its backward methods and ...humane treatment of convicts.

Today California is near the top ... the list in prison ratings and ...cudder's account of this progres...ve experiment is written in the ...pe that other states and nations ...ll inaugurate a system of penal ...form which will treat prisoners ...e people.

Moore's Book On Lawrence Describes Him As "Romantic"

THE LIFE AND WORKS OF D. H. LAWRENCE by Harry T. Moore. THOS. NELSON, 1952, $6.25.

Claiming to be 'critically . . . the fullest survey yet made of Lawrence's writings,' The Life and Works of D. H. Lawrence attempts the three-fold task of providing an informative account of the man and his works, and interpreting and evaluating his contribution to modern literature.

Lawrence enthusiasts will probably approach this work by Harry Moore with the same eager anticipation that they picked up Richard Addington's Portrait of a Genius But . . . and Witter Bynner's Journey With Genius during the past two years in the hope that here, at last, is a definite book on D. H. Lawrence. Many will again be disappointed, for Moore's work, although it is a very thorough job and attempts to present Lawrence's life and work as one, often gets bogged down in endless descriptions of Laurence's short stories and in the details of his various wanderings to and from over five continents.

Moore presents Lawrence as a latter-day Romantic—"he had had the Romantic temperament—anti-intellectualism, the fierce love of nature, the tendency to be 'armor-our of the far,' the belief in individuality, the extreme sensibility"—and throughout the book rightfully emphasizes Lawrence's awareness of the struggle in existence between death and creation rather than his much publicized and misinterpreted writings on sex.

"When the darkness" Lawrence wrote, "of which I am an involved seed, and the light which is involved in me as a seed, when these two draw from the infinite sources towards me, when they meet and embrace in a perfect kiss and a perfect contest of me . . . then I have peace. It is not of love that we are fulfilled, but of love in such intimate equipose with hate that the transcendence takes place."—this is the Lawrence which holds Moore's attention and certainly the one which will make him live in the minds of generations to come.

Many readers will feel that Moore has neglected an important part of Lawrence's later life in refusing to give much time to Lawrence's relationship with his wife. So, too, Moore quotes various sources regarding Lawrence's treatment of his friends and his outbursts of temperament, but makes no attempt to present a coherent picture of Lawrence's personality. If anything Moore stresses Lawrence's ideas and has written a rather academic study of this fiery figure.

Immigrant Returns Cheering America

IMMIGRANT'S RETURN by Angelo M. Pellegrini, MacMillan Co., 1952, $4.50.

In the fall of 1913, an Italian family of peasants clambered out of the smelly hold of a freight ship to be surrounded by a bewildering huddle of immigration officers on Ellis Island. Among them was little Angelo Pellegrini, nine years old, and to him everything in America was unbelievable—from the ham-and-eggs breakfast in New York to the lumber camp near Seattle where his father worked.

Thirty-six years later, Angelo Pellegrini was again in New York, this time leaving for Italy. He was now Professor Pellegrini of the University of Washington and was returning to the land of his birth on a Guggenheim Fellowship.

The result of nine years' poverty in Italy, thirty-six years of observation and development in America, and a three month excursion through his native land is a biographic look at both countries which ends in three cheers for America, only two for Italy.

Pellegrini is not "troubled by a feeling of inferiority, (feeling) that his humble origins are an obstacle to the advancement of his own interests". He has rather cultivated the influences of his Italian heritage and blended them gratefully with his "Americanization". The middle road attitude has given him the ability to estimate both ways of life with unusual objectivity

This objective approach is evident both in his approach to estimating the spiritual nature of each country and in biographical attitudes. The reader is spared tedious accounts of the author's life. What is given is significant and interesting and treated with humour and terseness. Pellegrini uses only a couple of pages to provide necessary personal background which less thoughtful writers would find inadequate . . .

"We own our own home—that is to say, our mortgage—and a Studebaker car for which the final payment was made ten years ago. Among our modest possessions are the usual gadgets which make the expatriates and the esthetes despair of our material civilization. These include a bathtub, a porcelain toilet bowl, a telephone, an electric stove and frigidaire, hot and cold running water, a vacuum cleaner, a waffle iron, an automatic washer, an electric iron, a radio and phonograph, recorded Bach, Beethoven, and the rest, an electric coffee percolator, and thermostatically controlled central heating. To date they have not in any way interfered with our esthetic development. Should we ever discover that they are messing up our spiritual life, we will burn the place down and move across the street into a wilderness of maples and alders where we will construct an outdoor privy and read Thoreau."

The author has some interesting comments to make about the American university: "My college days were at once the major disappointment and the major inspiration of my entire educational career." The inspiration came from several professors who were both scholars and teachers. The disappointment came from those who were merely specialist scholars. After deploring the limitations of his first year "Teachers", Pellegrini says: "During the first year at the University I did my hardest thinking in the athletic pavilion, usually with my wrestling coach astride my back, pressing my nose into the dirty- sweat-drenched mat."

Ave Atque Vale

By ANNE CARNWATH
BOOK REVIEW EDITOR

Acta Victoriana's third issue contains the results of their Literary and Photography contests. A centre inset of glossy paper presents seven prizewinning photos, all very interesting, and all expertly arranged. Charles Rea's two prizewinning poems, Town and Country and I Saw The Wine-Dark Sea of Homer give the poetry section some merit but the prize-winning fiction is bound to raise a certain amount of controversy among Acta readers. Graeme Ferguson's A Yellow Ceiling will be either violently disliked or else wholeheartedly embraced by discerning admirers of Mr. Ferguson's technique. Our own opinion is that Mr. Ferguson has so long objected to the intrusion of literary conventions in the field of film art that he has decided to repay the compliment by bringing camera techniques to bear on literature. We weren't particularly impressed with B. Easson's Grey Noon of Madness, but enjoyed Moods of Sye and thought M. Beacock handled her material with more facility than Easson did.

Going beyond the Poetry and Fiction, this issue of Acta has a very well written article by Jim Bird on Pogo, an uneven essay by Dave Peddie on Drama, a smooth review of The Inspector Calls by Ricky Arnold, and, finally an editorial by John Finlay with which we take issue — it's not up to his other two editorials and slightly detracts from consistent high quality of this issue as a whole.

Ed Maynerick

Ed Maynerick, a second year man with the Blue basketballers, one of Varsity's best ball-handlers, will be in action at Mutual Arena tonight. Ed possesses a deadly set shot, and is a steady team player.

Blues, Rochester At Mutual Tonight

The Basketball Blues play the second of their series of Wednesday night games at Mutual Street Arena tonight, against what will likely be the best college basketball team to be seen in Toronto this year, the University of Rochester. Rochester beat the Blues by a narrow margin last year in the Mutual Street game, providing one of the best finishes of the season.

Varsity Blues, Rochester

Rochester this year rates as one of the best small university teams in the States. They have defeated Colgate and Buffalo, both of whom have beaten the Blues, and defeated Varsity by a considerable score in December.

Their star is a sophomore by the name of Armstrong, a six-foot-fiver who has scored close to thirty points in nearly every game this year. Top returnee from last year's team is little Bill Secor, who has an average of 16 points a game. Fans will remember his tricky ball handling and sharp checking in last year's game. As a team, Rochester has averaged 73 points a game this year.

Top scorer for the Blues at this juncture is Lou Lukenda, with 167 points. Lou gets most of his points after grabbing rebounds, being a very rugged man to contend with under the basket. The Blues have been changing their style of attack these last few weeks, stressing much more quick breaking, with long passes and rapid fire exchanges in the enemy end. The personnel is somewhat faster than it was previously, when they would work the ball around slowly and shoot up or drive in on the basket.

The preliminary, which will start at 7:30, will have Eaton's Junior Execs playing Etobicoke Collegiate, one of the TDIAA's top teams this year, as last year. The Junior Execs beat Vic last Saturday at Hart House.

Student tickets for the games are on sale at Hart House for 50c but all tickets sold at Mutual Street are one dollar. If the turnout at the last game is any indication, there should be plenty of seats available.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

Though the Blues earned a split of the two-game weekend series with Laval, it is a safe bet that they are glad to have seen the last of them for this season. Though in second place, they have looked like a far superior team to the league-leading Montreal Carabins in all the games the Blues have played with the two teams. They are just as fast, appear just as well-coached, and are better defensively. They are not a hard hitting outfit like the axemen from McGill; they play real hockey. But any spectator at the games here Saturday or Monday could tell it was no picnic scoring goals on them.

Laval is in second place, one point behind Montreal, and three points ahead of Varsity, but assuming Carabins beat McGill in their four-point game being played at Verdun tonight, the Quebeckers haven't a chance. Varsity can cop the cup if they win both their remaining games with Montreal and both of those with McGill.

This peculiar state of affairs is owing to the fact that Laval has played all its games with Montreal, and won only one. They have lost one to McGill, have one left which they will probably win, but this will still leave them one point behind the Carabins.

So the Blues, in third place, are the only team which can catch the leaders. But if Montreal were good enough to beat Laval three times, they must be better than they have shown here. They have been notorious prima donnas for as long as we have been watching them, and can look like two completely different teams in two games.

* * * *

Laval put on a party for the Blues when they went down to Quebec last year, getting all of them dates and treating them to a dance. This year the second time down, they threw a stag (free beer, etc.) for them at the Laval COTC. Altogether they have earned the reputation of the best possible hosts in the Toronto players' estimation.

Saturday, they were all taken to the A-Nite. Most of them had never seen a basketball game before. The majority brought girlfriends with them, left Hart House early to do the town.

* * * *

This part should be bordered in black.

Joe Kane, who dented the boards at the arena with his head in the game with McGill last month in one of his famous lunges at opposing puck carriers, is through with hockey. Carried from the ice with his forehead one splotch of blood, he sustained a slight concussion and had about 20 stitches, he can't remember how many.

Sr. Vic Edge Trinity B's

Despite the surprising showing by a fighting B team from Trinity, Senior Vic managed to win yesterday's hockey play-off, 3-2. It took a third period goal to beat the determined Trinity team who had come from under a two goal disadvantage to give the Viesters a scare. The Scarlet and Gold team now moves into one of Friday's semi-final games against either Senior Skule or Dent A's who square off at 1:30 today.

Vic led off with two goals in the first period from the sticks of Fenning and Koughan. Early in the second Trinity came back fast with two goals by Gray and Fisher. Scrivener assisted on both of these. The third Vic goal and the winner was fired by Gibson.

Fenning served a couple of penalties for Vic while Koughan and Gibson did time too. Andison got the only sentence for Trinity.

Sportswoman

HOCKEY

POT I and Vic II fought a fast hockey battle at the arena yesterday noon which resulted in another 1 to 0 shut-out for the Physots.

Breta Fredrickson opened up the play in the first period, when she drove the puck past the Vic goalie to score the only counter of the contest.

The POT crew monopolized the puck in the second frame, keeping the puck in the Viv zone throughout the period, but the Vic goalie was on her toes and the Therapists failed to score.

The third period saw plenty of breakaways for both sides, but none of the shots went home.

Breta Fredrickson and Molly Bark played well on the forward line for P and OT, while goalie, Joan Wickware and Joan Gore were mainstays of the Vic defence.

VOLLEYBALL

PHE II girls' volleyball team defeated UC II 51-36 in the first game of a double-header last night at the Lillian Massey gym. The half-time score was 38-15. In the last half U.C. soared up to within 4 points of PHE, but the Phys. Edders pushed them down again to take the game.

In the second game, St. Hilda's II downed Med I, 49-29. Daphne Cross for St. Hilda's played a superb game.

WortmanWins

Charlie Wortman added to his string of interfaculty track wins, winning the open two mile yesterday in 9 minutes, 57:5 seconds. Maj Crawford was second in 9:59, and George Webster third, only a step behind.

Webster set the pace most of the way, Wortman taking over with a spurt with 200 yards to go. Crawford caught Webster in the last 50 yards. All runners were within about five yards of each other right through the race.

Pitching Sportshoes

In major league basketball Law A whipped Forestry B, 33-15. Torrence was the game's leading scorer, throwing in ten points for the lawyers. Macdonald added 8 and Rosen got 6.

SPS VI ran wild against Vic V's, piling up a 53-22 count. Among the high scorers for Vic were Ottaway who hooped 17 and Turner with 15. Deucars had 8 and Lewis 7. Vic's big gun was Manson who got 9 of the 22 points.

In the minor league, Vic Snowmen took III Chem, 36-13. Shirer led with a 16-point total and Lepper had half that.

Intercoll Mat Championship Here Friday

Coach Kirk Wipper yesterday announced the Toronto line-up for the Intercollegiate wrestling championships that will take place in Hart House Friday and Saturday. The only spot still open is the intermediate 137 pound class which will be decided to-morrow.

The senior competition will see Queen's, Guelph, Western, McGill and Toronto enter. The intermediate class has only three entries, Guelph, Western and the Blues.

Defending senior champs are the McGill Redmen, and Toronto are defending their intermediate crown.

Joe Goldenberg and Tom Hatashita are the only Seniors who were on last year's Senior team. Bill Chykaliuk, Orie Loucks, Gil McCormick, Larry Slitch and Ernie Dryden were all on last year's chamuionship Intermediate team, most of them intermediate champions.

Varsity should find it rough going in the senior competition but the intermediate team look to be the best in the league. Western seniors are much improved over last year. The Mustangs lost 21 to 18 to powerful Bowling Green from the States which was a very surprising showing.

Here is the line-up of Toronto wrestlers who will try to bring the grappling crowns to Hogtown

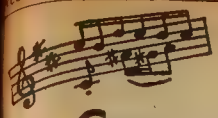
Whoopee they dood it again. The girls Intercollegiate badminton quartet brought home the laurels from Montreal last week-end for the second year running. The competition this year proved to fall in the same regions as last, with the McGill four causing the most resistance. This meet was arranged and re-arranged within an inch of its life. Originally scheduled for the 14th and 15th of February, the date was finally set for all day Saturday, the 16th, which means that plans for evening shindigs were limited to a banquet.

* * * *

The Intermediate basketball team will meet a squad from Newmarket Collegiate tonight at 5:30 at the OCE gym. The girls have played three tilts so far this season, winning over St. Clements Girls School and splitting two games with McMaster Juniors.

* * * *



The Robinhood girls are limbering up in anticipation of an exhibition meet at McMaster on the 26th of February. Gals from OAC, McMaster and Toronto, sporting bows and arrows, will stage a friendly war. This is the first archery programme since the Intercollegiate tourney in the fall. At that time, OAC retained top spot for the third consecutive year with the authoritative tally of 1600 points. Varsity placed second with 1252. Jean Steckle of OAC again proved to be the outstanding archer in the University field when she copped 472 points for her team in the autumn meet. She is expected to hold her own again in the contest next week. Toronto's Mary MacDonald, who tied for second place last fall, is the U of T's top contender.

The Varsity club is looking for new faces. Any experienced archers are invited to spend their Thursday lunch hours at the Drill Hall on St. George St.

If you happen to be a skier interested in racing, the place to be on the 2nd of March is Collingwood. Downhill races will be run off in the morning, while the slalom competition is slated for the afternoon session.

Each faculty will be represented by a team of four girls who will participate in both events. See your ski reps for further particulars.

Concerts Conclude With Trinity Choir

The last in this year's Wednesday afternoon series of concerts in the Music Room of Hart House will be given today. The performers are the Trinity Choral Society, in their first appearance outside their own college since their inception 5 years ago.

According to their tradition, the program will consist entirely of English music. There will be a large proportion of Elizabethen music and madrigals, as well as some folk-songs.

The mixed choir has about 30 members, and is under the direction of Eric Rollinson. He has directed the choir since its founding in 1947. Since then the choir has given a concert in Strachan Hall.

The concert starts at 5:10, in the Music Room. All members are invited to attend; no tickets are required.

Send Coed Rep On Debate Tour

A final year student at St. Michael's College, Anne McGinn, is the first woman to be sent on a major tour by the University of Toronto Debating Union. The six-day tour to the United States began last Sunday under the auspices of the Students' Administrative Council.

Other women have been sent on Minor tours by the UTDU but never before on an extended tour or to the United States.

Miss McGinn has debated all through her university career but still found time for hobbies. Her main hobby is singing and she practices at least two hours a day. After graduation she hopes for an operatic career and failing that, television work, she said.

During high school, Miss McGinn entered some of her oil and water-colour paintings in the art show at the Canadian National Exhibition. "I have also written volumes and volumes of poetry," she said.

'I really don't know where my interest in debating came from, since neither my parents nor my two brothers have ever debated," said Miss McGinn. At present she is the president of St. Joseph's College Debating Congress and is one of St. Mike's women representatives for the UTDU.

For four summers Miss McGinn has worked in the Rockies at Banff Springs and Lake Louise and watched the making of the motion picture "Canadian Pacific" which was filmed in Banff.

During her four summers at Banff and Lake Louise, she added another hobby to her collection. Here she began mountain climbing and made most of the major climbs. She also climbed Mount Edith, the initial climb for the Alpine Club membership, but unfortunately no one from the Alpine Club was along to verify the climb.

This debating tour will send Miss McGinn to the University of Detroit, University of Michigan, Michigan State University, Notre Dame in South Bend, Indiana, University of Chicago and Loyola.

On the tour, Miss McGinn and her debating partner will take the negative position on the topic: Resolved, that this house deplores American leadership in foreign affairs.

Rio Trip

Recently a Toronto student went on a long trip—all the way down to Rio de Janeiro, in Brazil. He was Syd Wax, Toronto's student council president, and the Canadian students' "foreign minister." The reason for his trip to the Land of the Cocoa Bean was an international conference, designed to organize a Pan-American Student Union.

In paying most of the expenses of the trip, the Brazilian student union explained it wanted to add a North American outlook to their conference.

Today Mr. Wax, in an open meeting of the SAC External Affairs Commission, will discuss the meeting and its results. In order to pave the way for him, we have delved into a bit of Pan-American Political Science.

What's Doing?

Caballeros, ponchos and revolutions. That's the South America which we nortoamericanos accept as part of the gay mad ways of the Latins.

We may hear that these Latins occasionally run riot with "anti-capitalist, anti-imperialist" battle cries. But about South American Universty students we hear nothng.

The mass social and economic depravity of the European rule was a tremendous stimulus for revolution, and for a time, the establishment of democracies. But these were never very deep-rooted democracies within the young nations.

Speaking before the Peron era in Argentina, Union Civica Radical leader Alvear deplored the slumping of democracy:

> "One of the saddest developments is a certain youth movement compounded by a mixture of innocent good faith and the treachery of subversive agents; a youth movement which is undermining democracy by following the perverted theories and ideals of those who have transformed popular revolutions into brutal dictatorships; a youth movement that is identifying itself with the intolerance, persecution, falsehood, cruelty, and despotism of the regimes of force and violence. Formerly there was strong national reaction to such things. In our country the consciousness of our own liberty, which was achieved at the cost of rebellion, blood, and heroism . . . had established that tradition of democracy (but) the people have found that every time they express their will clearly . . . action is taken advantage of . . . and the present attitude of indifference and skepticism . . . disarms courage, undermines character and weakens valor."

The United States, when it turned its lascivious eyes southward, didn't grasp something the Latins had quickly learned — that top-dogs have all the fun, and if you don't come out on top, just stage another revolution — in the name of freedom of course. At any rate, the Americans some years ago reversed their colonizing tactics and adopted the "good-neighbour" approach which has been only partially successful.

The Nazis understood South American psychology well and kept an eye on these subversive youth movements . . . many of which were within the universities. Said a Nazi directive in 1933:

> "It is particularly important that all possible forms of propaganda be brought to bear on university students and that their sympathy be won to National Socialist ideas . . . the students, especially in Latin America, have acquired an evergrowing political influence and it is imperative that we exploit this influence in favor of German propaganda in foreign countries . . . gain the sympathy and support of university professors, because they naturally exercise great influence on the students and usually are easily bribed."

As the Latin Americans went on alternating revolutions with wars between neighbours, the Nazis carefully filtered into communication, transportation and economics of the hemisphere. The United States wrung their hands and nattered about Pan-American alliances. And finally with Allied economic pressure brought to bear, the German putsches didn't quite come off.

In the meantime, Peruvian Senor Ravines was being coached in Moscow on the "Yenan Way", with Chile as the designated field of experimentation for brother Stalin. "Fundamentally," say its originators, "The Yenan Way does not take into account only the working class. We think in much wider terms which touch on other social sectors . . . in view of the menace of fascism, millions . . . are disposed to fight on our side. . . . But it is not only fear of the loss of liberty that clears the way for us. We can play on the ambitions of thousands of politicians, who have come from the petite bourgeoisie . . . who have not been able to reach high positions. They will come to our camp as servants of expediency."

South America with its wide divergence of politicos, its revamped class system, and incidentally its potentially great wealth is a tremendous goal for communists.

It is also a titivating goal for the Estados Unidos Totalitarios del Sur, for the Peronisti, the Varaists and all the other right-wingers which stretch from the Madgellan Straits to the Yucatan Peninsula.

Many of today's "leaders" have gained the top via the army, others like Peruvian Haya de la Torre (University of San Marcos) have emerged from the colleges.

Without sounding too soap-operaish, we wonder which force is going to rouse our mad Latins, and break down the individual country barriers or the cultural snarls and come up holding the South American bag? Right, left or middle wing?

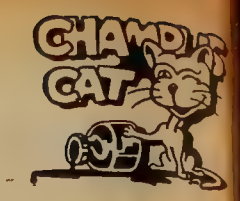
By tuning in to the South American campi we may find out.

OUR READERS WRITE

Bluebirds On Horizon

The Editor, The Varsity

The Varsity is to be congratulated for its story and editorial revealing the facts about the U of T Peace Council. It has become quite obvious that the present executive does not care what happens to the peace council as long as it closely approximates nothing.



By proposing amalgamation with the UN Club and then not doing anything about it—they excuse themselves from holding any meetings. In this way they attempt to stymie any campus discussion of peace. By the same manoeuvre to reform an amalgamated club is prevented.

Therefore, those of us who are anxious that discussion of any action for peace continue must act outside the Peace Council.

To this end a meeting will be held as soon as a room can be obtained. To it all students interested in discussing the problem presented by an inactive Peace Council are invited, especially those students attending the SCM discussions on Peace, ad the students in Camfor. The undersigned will be responsible for chairing the meeting until a chairman is elected who can then call for discussion of an agenda.

Don N. Anderson,
IV Meds.

Time Rings On

The Chairman
The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir:

It is with some misgivings that we read the criticisms bein levelled against the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in regard to the CBC Time Signal. Suggestions have been put forward that the Dominion Observatory Official Time Signal is too long. Further, it is claimed that the twenty-six short dashes followed by ten seconds of silence constitute an insult to the intelligence of the Canadian public.

These arguments Sir, do not deserve to be taken seriously. They stem, we feel sure, from those irresponsible elements in our society which will apparently stop at nothing in their headlong destruction of our way of life. To them, nothing is sacred and no tradition, however glorious its past, can meet the insatiable lust for what in their ignorance they consider to be modern.

The CBC Time Signal is a symbol of Canada herself. In Great Britain they have five short dashes. In some American States they have three, and in other States they have no short dash before the hour. But in Canada, in Canada we have twenty-six short dashes followed by ten seconds of pure silence preceding the long dash which marks the hour. This, Mr. Chairman we feel to be not only a unique tribute to our own individuality, but a reaffirmation of the faith we all hold for what is truly our Canadian way of life.

Daily at 1 p.m. the Signal rings out across the land, binding together every Canadian in a custom no less typical than the symbol of the Maple Leaf itself. We must adhere to what is our own, clinging to those customs which have withstood the test of time. We must respect our background, governed always by the judgement and caution of our forefathers, resolute in our traditions and ever suspicious of change merely for the sake of change.

The CBC Time Signal is part of our way of life. We do not wish it changed.

Yours truly,
R. W. Shepherd

No! Mr. Ali Tayyeb

Editor, The Varsity:

Please publish this, our repudiation of the remarks attributed to Mr. Ali Tayyeb concerning our experience at the Ontario Department of Education and at the Ontario College of Education.

The paragraph in The Varsity for Feb. 13 is a complete distortion of the facts. It pretty well verges on vandalism. We guess it is one of the time-old and crazy tactics, though luckily with evanescent effects, of flashing into prominence and cheap popularity, by a gross misstatement of the actual facts by a slanderous tongue. It is we, who, as part-time students at the Ontario College of Education and part-time visitors to different educational institutions with a view to studying their actual instructional and administrative functioning at close quarters, can speak authoritatively on the benefits that have accrued to us from the well-planned, well-knit and at times rather heavy programmes lined up periodically by our "hard-taks", but none the less affectionate counsellors, viz. Mr. Louis S. Beattie and Dr. Charles E. Phillips. In living up to these arduous programmes, we had to make tremendous efforts to emerge from the routine into which a long span of service behind us had put us, and we showed wonderful adaptability to the new student-life. Simultaneously and naturally, because of student-nature being the same, irrespective of age, we had a revival of an irresistible propensity to truancy, which impelled us to the decision not to remind our counsellors to fill us up for a certain day for which no programme had yet been lined up. On how soon our hopes would be frustrated! There would be a ring, and a simultaneous shudder would run through the guilty conscience of the two of us; we knew one hundred percent that it was from one of the counsellors. And there it was. "Now boys, to-morrow I guess you have no programme at the Ontario College of Education; so visit this school and that." And to check us up, we invariably found that information as to our visit to an institution had travelled faster than ourselves.

To mention a few more benefits:—

(1) In spite of the soundness of the academic system of Pakistan, of which we are rightly proud we found from the graduate classes we attended that there was much to learn. We derived benefit and inspiration from all of these courses.

(2) We have been able to study intimately in the Ontario College of Education the Industrial Arts and other educational activities.

(3) The Ontario College of Education library has all along been so liberal to us that we feel we have been an exception to the rule of limiting the number of books and the period for which they can be borrowed.

(4) If at all we some times managed to give the slip to our counsellors, students as we are, there was Dr. Minkler to pick us up in his car and bring us face to face with the teaching situations in schools in the rural areas.

(5) Whenever we went out of Toronto, Mr. L. S. Beattie and Dr. Charles E. Phillips managed things so that the visit was not only beneficial but also that we were properly looked after.

(6) Mr. L. S. Beattie and Dr. Charles E. Phillips who are normally two busy persons, snatched time from their leisure, discussed things with us for two to three hours at a stretch, with a view to finding out what Canadian practices we had observed or might observe could be fitted into the Pakistan educational system. Their common remark, "We want you to make the most of your stay in Canada," would help us get over the fag results from heavy programmes.

We are ashamed at the distortion of facts by Mr. Ali Tayyeb and we look upon it as a sabotage of the most beneficial Colombo plan.

A. Mohammad

Missed the Target

The Editor, The Varsity:

Frankly, I'm very disappointed. With Shirley Endicott's article, that is. Used to be when some one from the LPP Club made a nice broad sweep you could always count on being stimulated and provoked. Not so anymore, it seems.

"Financial ability the criterion for entering University" . . . really, Shirley, the minister's daughter who sits behind me in lectures and the shop foreman's son who sits next to me got a good snicker out of that.

Students come to University because "it is the right thing to do" . . . check with a science faculty man, check his time spent on the books, check how much extra-curricular activity he can take, and then ask him if he is "doing the right thing".

"Trading with the Soviet and Red China" would reduce university fees . . . really Miss Endicott!

And then there is that rather bit having to do with something Karl Marx said and something about responsibilities to one's Board of Directors and something about someone always making money out of the bad things in our society. Surely, Shirley, your argument would have been much stronger if you had stuck to one point and proved it with examples and documentation.

Somehow I get the idea that modern society has mellowed Miss Endicott and there are no real targets for breast-beating. There remain only the old targets which were exposed and expressed so ably by your predecessors—the fee fights, the campus prejudices, "the dental combine."

Somehow I get the idea that party politics have changed since that instead of boring from within, the new idea is to bore persons.

Ah me. I wonder if there is provocative Champus Chat coming up.

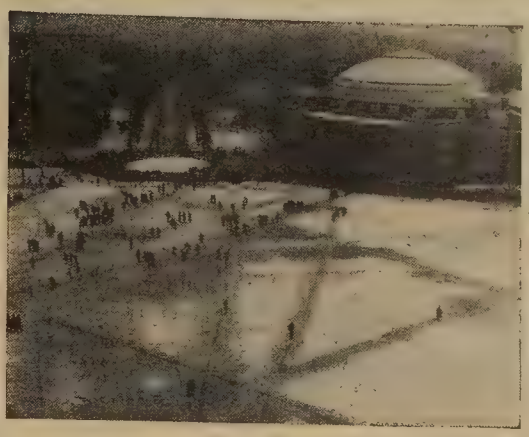
Finds Hotbeds Of Reform In S. American Universities

Wax Report On Meeting In Edinburgh



The Student Help for Asian Relief and Education program on this campus is a good example of the Student Mutual Assistance Program outlined by the National student unions which met at Edinburgh during the Christmas holidays. NFCUS International Activities chairman Syd Wax told 23 students who came to an open meeting of the SAC External Affairs Commission that NFCUS was leaving the SMAP program up to the International Student Service. He said that the complete and extensive program of ISS on the Canadian campi meant that NFCUS would be setting up a second similar organization if NFCUS attempted to carry out a SMAP program.

The Edinburgh conference did not assign SMAP projects, Wax said, but rather the various unions volunteered to carry out projects or else elected to carry on projects which they had undertaken at the Stockholm conference.

The delegates at Edinburgh, Wax said, felt that a new international student union should not be formed. He said that the delegates thought that it was bad enough that the leaders of the International Union of Students had formed an eastern bloc to control the union at Prague.

However, Wax felt that there were still possible cases of co-operation between the non - IUS unions and IUS. He said that in the field of international student relief there were two organizations competing in India and South East Asia. In an attempt to unite the two organizations three seats are being held on the World University Service for the IUS leaders, according to Wax.

Wax explained the four Canadian resolutions for unity were defeated at Edinburgh because the other delegates did not want to create a united front of non-IUS student unions. He said that the delegates felt that each student union should approach IUS independently.

The years may come and go, but every year the same paths are ploughed across the front campus by students who, disregrading the fence as every other obstacle in their path, hurry by the shortest route to their lectures. Above is a birds-eye view of the front campus, just as it may appear today at noon. For as the students come, work, and graduate, their habits through the years remain the same.

Student Exchange Is OK By Brazil, —Wax's Rio Report

Brazilian students are willing to send a dozen students to Canada as part of a student exchange "at the drop of a hat", according to SAC Syd Wax.

Yesterday, Wax gave a report of his recent trips to the Edinburgh conference of western student unions and to the conference of American students which was held in Rio De Janeiro. NFCUS chairman Joan Presant called the meeting to order although only 23 students turned out to hear Wax's speech on the two conferences.

Speaking on the Rio conference, Wax said that Canadians must realize how vital political and economic issues are to South American students when considering their activities. He said that in South America the university is not primarily a training ground, but is the centre of political and economic reform and is the stronghold of liberalism and freedom in each of the Latin American countries.

The delegates were supposed to sit in five commissions meeting in the morning and afternoon, and then assemble at 9:00 p.m. for the plenary sessions, which usually lasted until 5:00 a.m. Often the delegates would show up during the morning sessions of the committees wearing bathing trunks, Wax said, and would suggest going for a swim.

The five committees never were able to present reports before the plenary session as just before motions were to be presented from the committees, according to Wax, a bloc of student sfrom Panama, Uruguay, and Argentina stalled the conference. Wax said that after sitting on the five commissions this bloc of delegates launched a fiery attack on their hosts, the Brizilian student union, and charged the Brazilians with only inviting anti-communist and pro-Catholic delegations to the conference.

Later they disbanded the conference. An information centre was established in Cuba by the delegations from Cuba, Panama, Honduras, and Costa Rica. Wax said that all of these delegations, except the Costa Rican, were communist.

The Rio conference started off, after an agenda had been adopted, by each delegation giving a resume of the student situation in their country. The delegates were so directly involved in the politics of their countries that they looked to the conference for aid in their political struggles against the dictators in some of the countries. Wax said that at one time Canada was almost talked into backing the underground movement in the Argentine.

The South American student unions are not interested in the "refinements" of international student co-operation, Wax said, but are interested in the basic fundamentals of education such as problems in illiteracy. Wax described the primary and secondary school system in Canada at the conference. Some of the Latin delegates expressed surprise at there being laws for compulsory attendance at school, and Wax said that for them a system of truant officers is something to be aimed at for the future.

Council Seeks Students Needing Financial Aids

The Students' Council is looking for students who need financial assistance to go through university, but haven't been able to get a bursary, or else whose bursary is not sufficient to cover their needs. The council is also looking for students who have been forced to leave the university for want of money.

This search is connected with a SAC investigation into last fall's rise in tuition fees. The investigating committee is probing the possibility of asking the administration to reduce the fees.

In order to get actual cases of financial need, the council has asked any students in that position to fill in a form, to be obtained at the SAC Office in Hart House.

"This form is not an application for financial aid", stressed Bud Trivett, II Law, chairman of the investigating committee. "It is only for our statistics," he added.

The names of any students who do fill in the form will not be known to fellow students on the investigating committee, he explained. The only person who will know is SAC Secretary - Treasurer E. A. Macdonald. Those who register will receive pseudonyms; their names and addresses will be kept on a separate secret list.

The forms include the information regularly requested on a bursary application form, such as name, address, age, course and father's income.

However, the committee has added a few other pieces of information it wants: these are the cost of the year's education for the student, the work he has done during the summer and the money received, and the revenue from any part-time work he may do during the school term.

"Through this form we hope to find out just how much financial difficulty the university gave the students by raising the fees," Trivett explained. "From all evidence, the university needed the increased revenue badly. The question is whether or not the student needs it more."

The University's Publicity Director, Ken Edey, said recently that at the time of the Massey Commission the administration had tried to find students forced out of college for lack of money, but without success.

Masthead Meeting

The regular masthead meeting will be held this afternoon in the editorial office at five. All masthead members are requested to attend.

RCI Lecture This Saturday On Science And Humanities By President Sidney Smith

Dr. Sidney E. Smith, President of the University of Toronto, will lecture before the Royal Canadian Institute on "Unity of Knowledge: Science and Humanities" this Saturday evening. The Royal Canadian Institute is a society which holds popular science lectures in Convocation Hall on Saturday evenings. The lectures which are open to the public are usually on popular topics.

Dr. Smith has previously commented on the General Course, "I would advise that many of the students who now register for honor courses should register in the General Course, affording as it does a foundation in three areas—the humanities, the social sciences, and the natural sciences, the specialization to be found in most honor courses is not necessarily the best for students."

Dr. Smith also touched the topic of the humanities as dealt with in science courses. "That there are some professional teachers who dispute the thesis that the humanities are essential to higher education, but who nevertheless demand courses that are tailored to fit the peculiar professional needs of their students."

Praiseworthy attempts to graft a humanist tree on a professional tree have resulted in some universities with such hybrids as Medical English, Engineering German, and Pharmaceutical Latin, and have weakened the offerings of their Arts faculties," continued Dr. Smith.

He concluded, "In taking steps towards a greater liberalizing of professional education, we must not do so on the assumption that a student in, for example, Engineering is not capable of assimilating an Arts subject; nor should we assume that the humanistic part of his his course is an addition of secondary importance, at which he need not spend much time and in which he must on no account be failed."

Dr. Smith may elaborate on some of these points and perhaps comment on others that are pertinent in his talk Saturday.

Cite Benchers At Hart House On Law Issue

Following the lead of the University College Literary and Athletic Society, Hart House Debaters have gone on record as condemning the policy of Ontario Benchers regarding graduates of the University of Toronto Law School.

In the course of the private business before Tuesday night's debate, they passed a motion as follows:

WHEREAS: it is the declared purpose of this University to foster a Law School designed to meet the changing needs of law in Ontario;

AND WHEREAS: a leading Toronto newspaper has brought this matter before the attention of the reading public of the Province generally;

AND WHEREAS: various other college organizations (to wit: the UC Lit) have, within the past few weeks entertained discussion on the issue of the University of Toronto Law School;

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED THAT: at this propitious time, this House goes on record as having condemned the discrimination exercised by the Benches of the Law Society of Upper Canada against the students enrolled in the University of Toronto Law School.

Champion Copies Free On Campus

Students arriving to school bright and early yesterday morning found a replacement for The Varsity lying in the customary spots. This was the Champion, voice of the World Federation of Labor Youth, a paper which was technically refused the right to sell on the campus by the Students' Administrative Council.

Champion Editor Kari Levitt, said that the permission was refused because the SAC will not allow papers to be sold on the campus. Because of this, she added, the Champion will be distributed regularly and sold near the campus to avoid breaking University rulings.

"We feel," commented the Editor, "we should service the students and in order to do this properly we must distribute the paper free of charge."

The Champion is a bi-weekly publication and is printed and edited in Toronto. Varsity students can expect to see it regularly from now on, she implied.

Prefer Negotiation Above War At Radio Forum On US Policy

"There are two ways of settling a dispute — war and negotiated settlement. Is there any possibility of the second method being implemented by the United States?" asked Elmer Sopha, II Law, on the Varsity Radio Round Table last night. The discussion subject was "Are we being misled by U.S. foreign policy?"

"The Soviets are more amenable to change than was Hitler," said Dr. Craig, lecturer in history. "And changes have been shown recently, for instance the USSR policy regarding atomic weapons has shown signs of changing. And this suggests a way out of our present dilemma which American foreign policy is providing."

Dave Rose, IV UC, felt that this was the logical outcome of the American policy of Soviet containment, which has been the strong point of the U.S. foreign policy since the Czechoslovakian coup.

Shirley Endicott, IV Vic, said the key feature of the policy has been the cutting off of the East from the West and arming for war. She added that following this policy could lead only to war.

According to the panel most of the foreign policy of the States was tied up with the treatment of Red China. "The U.S. created the classic error of misunderstanding revolutions in its handling of China and consequently drove her into Soviet arms," said Sopha. Miss Endicott claimed this policy had gone even so far as to include suppression of news from China and distortion of historical fact. She quoted an aide of MacArthur in support of this argument.

Rose felt that this was not the case. He added that most Eastern governments were oligarchies and that while the Chinese Communists may have seemed the only people who could have implemented the agrarian reforms so badly needed in China he felt the present day complexion of things there convinced him that the present government was not in the interests of the people.

"The new technique of 'brain washing' negated any claims that China may have made in that they were willing to co-operate with the West," said Mr. Craig, and used the ludicrous reception that the British information service received in China as a supporting argument.

This was the sixth of the current series of Radio Round Table discussions sponsored by the SAC and aired under the title "Of Minds and Men." Next week's discussion was announced as being "Censorship—Protector or Profligate."

Inactive Peace Council May Have Substitute

A new "peace council" may be organized on the campus.

On the initiative of Don Anderson, IV Meds, a meeting is being planned "to call together people who are dissatisfield with the present situation." Anderson was referring to the long inactivity of the University Peace Council.

In a letter in yesterday's Varsity Anderson asked "all students interested in discussing the problem presented by an inactive Peace Council" to come to a meeting at which he will chairman and to decide on future action. He said he has tried to arrange for a room in the Medical Building for Friday but so far he has not been successful.

This was no preconceived plan Anderson pointed out. At the meeting a permanent chairman will be elected and an agenda discussed.

The idea, Anderson declared, followed as a result of a recent Varsity editorial criticizing the present Peace Council.

Anderson said he was "working for some form of discussion for peace" and stated he would try to organize a "peace council as it used to be." He added that it was not his intention to form two "peace councils" on the campus since the Caput would not recognize both.

Referring to the proposed amalgamation of the United Nations Club and the Peace Council, Anderson said "it doesn't meet my ideas as to how peace should be discussed on the campus. There is room for both a UN Club and a Peace Council."

Anderson, former president of the student Peace Council, was unseated last March when a group of students, mostly Engineers, took over the Council executive. "Though I disagree with the present leadership," he said, "I would be satisfied if I saw them take at least some action."

Dennis Bishop, present Peace Council president, could not be contacted for comment. However, according to Anderson, Bishop is planning an executive meeting this week. Anderson declared that unless the Council becomes active plans for forming the new peace group, whatever its name, will continue.

Doctor Dunlop Denies Interference At Ryerson Didn't "Gag" Students

In spite of Ryerson student charges that he had "gagged" a student-sponsored campaign to replace present Ryerson buildings, Education Minister Dunlop said Tuesday night that neither he nor his department had had anything to do with orders to cancel the campaign.

Over the past month, Ryerson students have been running an active campaign to bring the need for new buildings before the public. Yesterday they were to have presented a brief explaining the need to Dr. Dunlop. The brief was also to have been published in their student newspaper, The Ryersonian.

However, Tuesday, Principal H. H. Kerr instructed the students to stop the campaign, and to kill the publication of the brief, according to one of the newspaper staffers.

The students say the orders came from Dr. Dunlop. But the Education Minister said Tuesday he didn't even know a student was coming to present him with the brief. Someone from Ryerson had asked for an appointment, he said, but he had thought it was one of the staff. And he also said that, although he was unable to give the student an appointment for Wednesday, he had offered to see him next Monday.

One of the faculty members in the journalism department — Ted Schrader—said yesterday that officials of the Department of Education had advised Principal Kerr to call off the drive. But Kerr refused to comment on the charge that Dr. Dunlop had intervened. He did say, however, that the students were "spending too much time" on the campaign, and that they should be using it for studies.

Schrader explained that the special issue of The Ryersonian containing the brief had been cancelled so that it would coincide with the presentation of the brief to Dr. Dunlop.

The brief outlines the difficulties of the present site, stressing crowded conditions, poor ventilation, lack of sports accommodation, deteriorated buildings, and fire threat.

In their brief, the students ask the Province to put up new buildings on the 79-acre Wood Estate, on Bayview Avenue north of Sunnybrook Hospital. The land was bequeathed to the University of Toronto for use as an educational institute. At present it is used by the Ontario College of Art and the Forestry Department.

Wiring so old the blueprints have been lost, chipping plaster, the din of machinery and throb of passing cars are all mentioned in the brief.

Ryerson's main building was built over 100 years ago, and has been in constant use for a century. Other buildings on the property are temporary structures built by the RCAF for use as barracks during the war.

"The large number of students in the poorly-constructed classrooms creates a serious ventilation problem, often mitigated only by opening the sole window in the classroom", part of the brief reads. "In some cases, one room is heated by opening the doors into an adjoining room," it adds.

Although there is an "excellent" gym, the brief reports, there is only one locker for every ten students. There is no playing field, and the rugby, soccer and other teams must seek accommodation off the campus.

"During heavy rains, water leaks around the windows and through the roof. Doors leading into the food building won't stay closed no matter how often they are repaired. Timbers are rotting in the food building, and last year the floors sagged two inches. Plaster is falling in great chunks," the brief continues.

Completion Near In Forestry Plan

Toronto — "The first requirement toward placing Ontario's entire forest area on a sustained yield basis—a forest resources inventory—is close to completion," Timber Management Chief F. J. Sharpe, Department of Lands and Forests, stated.

"The basic data necessary to produce the completed inventory will be obtained from photographs taken in the course of the province-wide aerial photographic survey now in the final stages. Since this has been going on for five years most of the information is already in hand," he said.

"The next step," Mr. Sharpe declared, "will be the establishment of District forest management units. District forest three-type maps and volume estimates will be drawn up from the aerial survey photographs. These will permit the division of each of the twenty-two forest districts into workable management units which can be administered as separate entities. Each entity will be managed to produce a sustained yield of raw materials for the woods industries dependent upon them."

"Management foresters assigned to each district," he said, "will see that harvesting operations are governed by the ability of the respective management unit forests to produce, on a long-term basis, the sizes and species of trees desired by the wood-using industries. Each management unit will then have a definite plan for the orderly cropping of its timber resources in perpetuity. This system of district management units will provide each District Forester with accurate field data on which to base decisions as to what and how much cutting may be permissible in any year and in what part of his district."

"From experience already gained in forest management in the Petawawa and Kirkwood Forests where management units have been functioning experimentally for several years," Mr. Sharpe concluded, "we are already confident of the success of this province-wide management plan."

Hart House Nominations End Tonite

Tonight at 6.00 p.m. sharp nominations for 11 committees in Hart House will close. Last night at 6:00 p.m., closing time, there were only two that had their full quota of nominations completed. These were the Glee Club committee, and the Camera Club committee. One, the Table Tennis committee had no nominations whatsoever.

Major committees such as House, Library, Music, Art, and Debates all had barely half their quota of nominations in. In each of these there are eight to be elected, and only four to five have been nominated so far. These are the ones which anyone on the campus can enter by filling out the application forms in Hart House. Similarly any students at the University can vote in the election of these committees if they have an ATL card.

In some of the minor committees such as the Chess Club, the Amateur Radio Club, the Camera Club, and the Glee Club committees, nominations are made from the club membership, and only those with a membership card are eligible to vote.

Notice as to the functions of each of the Hart House Committees is posted on the bulletin boards in Hart House. Procedure for the nominations, electioneering and regulations regarding posters and advertising are also there.

The days of the elections will be March 5 and withdrawals from nomination will be accepted until Friday night at 6.00 p.m.

All-Varsity Adieu

Above is the stage of Hart House theatre, occupied by the entire cast of the All-Varsity Revue. The photo was taken during the curtain calls for the most successful and according to the critics the best of the campus shows this year. The Revue cast seem sorry that after the monthbs of rehearsals and the threats of cancellation the show is closing down after so short even if so successful a stand.

Engineering Society Under Fire; Skule Debaters Attack Today

"Today at 12:00 noon in room 2034 of the Wallberg Building, the SPS Debating Society will open fire on Skule as it is today," said chairman Geoff Hyde of the Debating Club.

A debate, "Resolved that the Engineering Society places too much stress on 'Society' and not enough on 'Engineering'", will be held then. Guest speaker for the occasion will be Douglas Sherk, president of the society.

In a statement, Sherk said that "Student life about school is definitely lacking in one respect, at least: There seems to be interest only in social activities (not necessarily too much, but only), and no obvious interest at all in professional engineering. Of course, maybe the executive has been too busy to give it a proper helping hand; the new post of Director of Professional Relations should help.

"It seems to me that more importance and encouragement should be given to the presentation of technical papers and the obtaining of good films and speakers, in the hope that the average Joe Skuleman will get to be a professional engineer, not just a dance-going note-taker when he is still a student."

Supporting the resolution are Geoff Hyde, debating chairman, and Norm Kissik, Chemical Engineering Club Chairman. "It's high time Skule got back to engineering. Things have gone too far when a debate on sex outdraws a good speaker on a technical subject," said Geoff Hyde, for the affirmative.

The negative speakers, Morley Marks and Fred Smale, said that four years at Skule with nothing but technical training would quite likely result in a student regarding a technical speaker more important than sex, but said that they doubt sincerely if this would be better than the present attitude.

Victoria Club Is Kaput Funds And Friends Fail

The Victoria Music Club yesterday disbanded their Glee Club. At an open meeting of the Music Club, Alex McPherson, Vice-President in charge of the Glee Club, moved the following motion: "Resolved that the Glee Club be disbanded, with proviso that they support an All-Varsity Mixed Choir if one is formed."

Music Club President, Warren Hughes, IV, said Dean Bennett had requested the dissolution of the Glee Club last year. However, it was decided to give a Glee Club concert this December and the participation in an Inter-Varsity Choral Festival this January. The January meeting of the Students' Administrative Council voted $100.00 for expenses to the January Concert.

Business Manager Roy Shatz, said that the Glee Club showed an operating deficit of about $120.00. "We lost approximately $30.00 on the Inter-Varsity Choral Festival", he added, "Even with the aid of the SAC grant." The Glee Club also lost money last year, Shatz said. Although he could not give the exact amount of the deficit. In the past two years he continued the Operatic returns have paid the Glee Club's deficit, this has left the Music Club with net profit of about $14.00. "This is a dangerously low figure", he added. A constitutional amendment passed at the meeting provided that the first Vice-President would in future be jointly responsible for ticket sales with the Business Manager.

Since the Victoria College Union controls the club constitution, this amendment must be ratified at the March VCU meeting.

"The Glee Club was formed in 1949 by the Music Club to accommodate the influx of the post-war students who wished to sing. Enrolment in the college has since declined", said Hughes, "As has interest in the Glee Club."

"There have been only 28 active members in the Glee Club this year", McPherson said. He pointed out that the All-Varsity Mixed Chorus, the Hart House Glee Club and the Vic Bob Revue would provide an outlet for students interested in choral singing.

Cancel Debate

The University College Debating Parliament has been postponed, again. Literary director Al Strauss said yesterday that the UC Lit had found it impossible to hold the debate on the topic resolved "that Canada is a figment of the imagination" as the Chemical Club will be holding a dinner in the Junior Common Room today.

Originally the debate was scheduled for Thursday, February 14th. It was cancelled because of the death of King George VI. Strauss said that the debate will be held on Thursday, February 28th.

Debaters Arrested Still Win

...ecial to The Varsity

Montreal welcomed University of Toronto debaters Tuesday by arresting them on suspicion of a clothes theft. The team consists of John Medcof, IV UC and Jim Jerome, I St. Mike's.

However after being detained a short time they were released, according to Medcof, the release came after he showed police his Ontario Young Liberal Association card.

Medcof and Jerome are representing the University of Toronto in debates with McGill and Montreal Universities in the Intercollegiate Debating League.

Following their release from the pokey, the Varsity team went on to defeat University of Montreal with a unanimous decision. Toronto opposed the resolution that the state has a responsibility for the cultural level of its citizens. In the bilingual debate French speaking Montreal students Felix Quinet and Phillippe Gelinas opposed the Toronto team.

Later the same day, Toronto lost to the McGill team, Judy McFarlane and Jerome Smith, while defending United States world leadership.

Weekend

Want to chuckle with Charlie Chaplin? The Weekend committee of the External Affairs Committee has arranged two weekends at the Hart House Caledon Farm at which Charlie Chaplin films will be shown.

On March 1st., students from the Ontario Veterinary College and MacDonald Institute (Home Economics for women) at Guelph will be Toronto's guests. The next weekend will be with Waterloo College (a University of Western Ontario affiliate).

Both weekends include square dancing and discussions groups. Weekend committee chairman Dorothy Liberman said that about twenty Toronto students will go on each weekend and that the cost would be $4.00 per person. She has arranged transportation to the Caledon Hill Farm.

Neat Trick Dep't

Sopha on the air and Sopha in the Chair caused considerable comment yesterday. The duality came about when at the same time he was acting as the Speaker of the Hart House debate, Elmer Sopha, II Law, was also speaking on the CKEY Round Table program, "Of Minds and Men."

Explanations by Ernest Lewish, II UC Radio Round Table committeeman solved the mystery. "Of Minds and Men" is taped on Monday evening at 8:00 p.m., and broadcast on Tuesdays at 10:05.

AVR Returns Unsure

The number of tickets sold for the All-Varsity Revue were about 2,200, said Marvin Goodman, business manager of the AVR. He does not, however, know the total cost of the show, and therefore cannot estimate whether or not the show broke even.

E. A. Macdonald, secretary-treasurer of the Students' Administrative Council, said that the house was full for every performance except the Saturday matinee. This is, as far as he can recollect, similar to the situation at the last Revue, two years ago. Macdonald considers this year's AVR the best show attempted in the undergraduate entertainment world.

Campus Profile

Prof. Northrop Frye

By PEARL PARNES

Northrop Frye, Professor of English at Victoria College and one of the foremost scholars on the campus, likes Toronto. He doesn't know very much about it; when his wife commented on the dubious architecture of the city, he was surprised and said he had never noticed, and probably won't now. But "Toronto's the world's best town to mind one's own business in".

When he is writing, he wanders about the city and scribbles notes in crowded restaurants. "There's security in a place that leaves you alone. I could jump on a table in a crowded restaurant and begin to sing, and nobody would pay any attention. People won't join in, but once you realize they won't respond, you're thankful for it." Which is one way of looking at Toronto's famed coldness.

Reverend Frye was born in Sherbrooke, P.Q., and was brought up in Moncton, N.B. He was among the last group of students lucky enough to enter University from Grade 11. He had taken a business course, and was entered in the novice class at an international typing contest in Toronto. And, since his fare had been paid as far as Massey Hall stage, he decided to stay, and entered the University of Toronto.

The "terrible old Pass Course" was the only course he could enter, but he soon switched to Philosophy and English. After receiving his B.A., he entered Emmanual College, and graduated from Theology in 1936.

But he had decided along the way that he wanted to teach English. Back in Moncton, he had been lucky enough to be in High School the one year Palgrave's Golden Treasury was on the curriculum, and Milton and Marvell, among others, woke him up to literature. Then Moncton built a new library, and imported a complete edition of George Bernard Shaw's plays, and the young student devoured them, prefaces and all.

He had never been a brilliant pupil, and spent most of his primary education "comfortably near the bottom of the class". However, by the time he graduated from the University of Toronto, he had won a Royal Society Fellowship to Oxford, where he received his M.A. in Honour English.

Professor Frye has some comments to make on the recently notorious state of English among students. "In order to get some sense of the excitement of poetry, you have to have a decent knowledge of English grammar. The Remedial English course is an attempt to fight a crumbling standard in secondary schools." He feels that the American system had hit rock bottom and is now climbing out again, while Canada is still skidding. "You judge a tree by its fruit, and if a student is illiterate by the time he gets here, something is obviously wrong."

Ideas are words, believes Prof. Frye, "You don't have ideas first and then words. The interest of educators is not in the bad grammar of the students—you can fix that. The problem comes in the lack of ideas, and of the will to say anything. You can develop ideas by putting words together."

Prof. Frye feels that the intellectual climate of the time is hostile to independent thinking. "In the depression, people had a powerful motive for questioning. Now youngsters are in a state of 'wait and see'. And the educational system has increased the tough spot the student is in by not giving enough concreteness in the actual tools of his thinking, which are words."

The author of one book and numerous articles, Prof. Frye intends to write a whole shelf of books, a flexible shelf with bookends to accommodate any number. His work on William Blake, the poet, called "Fearful Symmetry" was published in 1947, after being completely rewritten five times. Last year he was sent to Harvard on a Guggenheim Fellowship, to work on a study of the Faerie Queene, and Shapespearean Comedy. His interest in symbolism led him to study the whole question of allegory. Regarding the question of obscure symbolism, Mr. Frye feels that if a poet is deliberately using personal symbols to cover his tracks, he's probably a neurotic.

In 1937 Prof. Frye married Helen Kemp. "We were two of thirty six members of the class of '3 that married within a few years. As my wife puts it, we were 'two of 36 hearts beating as 18'." Prof. Frye returned from London in 1939, landing in Toronto the day the Soviet-Nazi pact was signed, and joined the staff of Victoria College. He is a member of the C.C.F., feeling that they are a very good thing for the country. But he is not politically active, and "not even an official heretic!"

ISS Seminar Forms Ready

Application forms for the International Student Service seminar in India are available in the Hart House office of the Students' Administrative Council.

Forty Canadian students are being sent by ISS to the seminar in India, along with forty South East Asians, and forty students from other countries.

The application forms ask for information about the student's academic record, knowledge of foreign languages, and travel experience. Approximately one-third of the form is devoted to one question: what is the applicant's special interest in the International Summer Seminar in relation to the character of the work at which he aims upon graduation.

The form is to be filled out in duplicate. One copy is to be sent, with a photograph attached, to the International Student Service of Canada, 93 St. George St.

Earlier this month, ISS officials said that while the $65,000 needed to finance the seminar was a long way from being realized ISS still hopes to raise the money and has not yet been forced to consider the possibility of changing the plans for the seminar. One hundred and twenty students in all will participate in the seminar: 40 from Canada, 40 from South East Asia, and 40 from "other countries".

Rehearsing for the world premiere of Lister Sinclair's play "Socrates" are undergraduate Ivan Thornley-Hall, and graduates Dave Gardner and Donald Glen playing the parts of Phaedo, Agathon and Crito. This third production of the Jupiter Theatre opens tomorrow night and runs until March 1st. Student tickets will be sold for $1.00 and $1.50 for Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday nights.

"King Richard II" Monarch Deposed

Shakespeare's RICHARD II has been called his best "history play" but it would be described by Polonius a "tragical historical" play since it is something of a mixture. The first half of the play deals with the banishment of Bolingbroke and his return to power.

After Bolingbroke returns from his banishment he wins all Richard's enemies to his side; then turns on Richard's friends, while the king is away quelling an uprising in Ireland. Thus when Richard returns he finds that Bolingbroke holds the balance of power.

From this point which occurs in the middle of the play the action of Richard II deals almost exclusively with the subject of kingship and the character of the deposed monarch. Until the return from Ireland Richard is seen as a cold, flippant king, given to following poor advisors. After the usurpation by Bolingbroke he is seen in a different light.

He becomes more sensitive through his suffering and resigns himself to death in a noble fashion that one would not have expected from one so precious.

Mozart's The Magic Flute Great Allegorical Spectacle

A large proportion of Toronto opera-goers who will see Mozart's "The Magic Flute" at this year's Opera Festival will be seeing this opera for the first time. Various considerations, most of them economical, have made this unique opera one of the most seldom-performed of the world's great masterworks. "The Magic Flute" was written by Mozart in the summer of 1791, at the instigation of his friend and Masonic lodge brother, Emmanuel Schickaneder. This Schickaneder was, in one of his capacities, a sort of 18th century Cecil B. DeMille, who ran a theatre on the outskirts of Vienna.

Among the attractions he provided for the Viennese public, oriental extravaganzas were among the most successful. His idea seems to have been to get Mozart to compose some music for such a spectacle, which was to include a virtuous queen, an evil necromancer, love, sorcery, and a considerable menagerie, all in an Egyptian setting.

"The Magic Flute" was the result of this enterprise, and externally, it has the marks of what, in 1791, corresponded to "Quo Vadis." Somewhere in the course of the composition of the work, however, Schickaneder and Mozart seem to have had a brilliant idea.

Instead of the conventional virtuous queen, they made the Queen of the Night into a coldly, terrifyingly evil figure. Sarastro, the necromancer, became the high priest of an order devoted to "reason, labor and art"—a thinly-disguised portrait of the Masonic order to which both belonged.

The opera became an epic, describing the trials of Tamino and Pamina, who seek the exalted condition of priest and priestess of the order. The end of the opera is no longer the conventional "prince marries virtuous queen's daughter."

Instead, prince and princess together pass through the trials of fire and water, and are solemnly received into the order by Sarastro, who proclaims to an awesome musical phrase that "the rays of the sun vanquish the night, and shatter the power of evil."

Schickaneder got more than he bargained for. He still attracted the crowds who came to see the chariot drawn by lions and to listen to Papageno's corny jokes. With his elaborate allegory on church, state and freemasonry, he also drew an intellectual audience, who saw through the Egyptian facade, and listened to what was musically and verbally the embodiment of the philosophy of the Age of Reason.

Mozart's music was written just before his untimely death in the autumn of 1791. He abandoned the growing complexities of his Italian-opera style of "Cosi fan tutte" (1790), and composed music of a profound and moving simplicity. It is in the same spirit as the little motet "Ave Verum Corpus," and the "Lachrymosa" from the Requiem, both written about the same time.

In spite of a libretto that is, by general agreement, third-rate hackwork (it seems to have been written partly by Schickaneder, partly by Mozart himself, and in some instances cribbed from another work), the "Magic Flute" became one of the most admired of operas. Its musical influence can be seen directly in the works of Weber, and indirectly even in Wagner's, almost 100 years later.

Performances, however, have been rare, not only because of the elaborate settings required, but also because it demands a large cast of highly qualified singers.

The Opera Festival performances of "The Magic Flute" will be on Feb 22, 23 and 27, and on Mar 1. This is a rare opportunity to see a work you will have very little chance of seeing again.

Helpful Hints For Costume Girls

Ah, who will sing the praises
Of the girl
With the punctured tongue.

One of the more specialized jobs among those that are confined to the posterior of the stage is that of the Costume Minstress. This might not be an important position in a company that sticks to modern plays, where costumes are unnecessary, but in those groups that try to do period and classical drama the Costume Mistress is very important. In Shakespeare she literally comes into her own, for the costumes are usually very ancient and very complicated and the number of actors almost unlimited.

In such plays the Costume Mistress overcomes that bug-bear of back-stage workers—unsungness. Costumes are noticed and praised (even when they are wrong) but it is a long hard pull and many Costume Mistresses have never survived to hear their own praises sung. This applies even when costumes are not new "creations", but are rented from those depositories of sack-cloth and rags, the Costume Company. Some sweet innocent new-comers to the field have disappeared into the confines of such establishments and never returned, although their clothing has been seen on stages afterwards.

In the creative field of this job the Costume Mistress must combine the activities of seamstress, color expert, diplomat, pincushion and a small whirlwind. Miriam Sprinter of this campus has proved a success at all these particular chores and has the added distinction of being able to take notes and smile at the same time.

There are a number of rules that must be adhered to: (1) Never swallow pins, nor stick them into your tongue, for it will either bloody the costume or hold up a fitting. (2) Do not pin costumes to the actors. Remember before everything actors are sensitive and they may resent it. (3) With rented costumes always check for holes in the least likely places. The theatre might lose its licence.

Student Music At Wymilwood Sunday Night

The annual Wymilwood concert of new compositions by students will be held there this Sunday at 9:00 p.m. The performers will also be students at the Faculty of Music.

Sunday's program will consist of five works or groups of works by four composers. There will be a trio by Chuck Wilson, four songs by Paul McIntyre, five piano preludes by Ted McGarrigle, a string quartet also by Paul McIntyre, and a piano suite by Don McFadden.

This concert will be the fifth annual concert of student compositions to be held at Wymilwood. The concerts have been described as "a musical complement to Acta Victoriana"—an outlet for the creative activities of the undergraduate body.

The Wymilwood concert will be the second concert of student compositions on the campus this year, since Hart House held a similar concert earlier in the season. Two of the same composers will have works representing them at the coming concert.

Rochester Topped 54-53 Before Meagre Crowd

By MAL CRAWFORD

A crowd of only about 500 people saw Varsity pull the upset of this basketball season, as they edged the Rochester Yellow Jackets in the last few seconds of play, 54-53, at Mutual Street last night. Ed Brennan and Ray Monnot were the heroes, sinking the tying and winning baskets. It was without doubt the fastest game the home fans have been treated to this season.

The Blues saved their best ball for Rothester, who boasted a ten-game winning streak until last night. Their new fast break showed to startling advantage, and the checking was fierce.

For the first few minutes, Rochester's reputation seemed to have the Blues pretty well cowed. Rochester opened scoring on the first shot when Place sunk a one hand jump shot, and ran the markers up to 7-0 before Oneschuk sunk a thirty-foot set shot to start the Blues off. Rochester built up a lead of 14-2 before Varsity found that these guys could be checked the same as anybody else.

Then the Blues started to roll. Binnington, Huycke, and Brennan, when he came on at the end of the period, brought the score up to 20-13 at the end of the first period. Huycke was shooting up more than he has in the past, and Brennan and Binnington, both of whom having been far below their last year's form in previous games, found the range on several running shots.

Jim Armstrong and John Hummel, both 6'5", kept Rochester ahead with their rebounding, a department where the Blues usually have an edge. Armstrong, leading scorer for the team, showed a lovely hook shot from dead in front of the basket, disdaining the use of the backboards.

In the close checking second period, the Rochester scoring machine was held to seven points. Every time they dribbled the ball once too often (which they did quite often for a team of their class) the Blues would come up with it. Varsity shot mostly from well outside; not till a couple of minutes from the half, when Monnot went on, did they score two in a row from under the hoop. Monnot hooked one and Lukenda pushed in a rebound to tie it 26-26. Armstrong scored a free toss to leave it 27-26 at half-time.

The lead changed hands seven times in the third period. Oneschuk put Toronto ahead 28-27 to begin with, and Binnington beat the horn ending the period to give Varsity a lead at 41-40.

Armstrong opened the fourth for the Yellow Jackets but Glover and Maynerick scored two quickies and Toronto was in front 45-43.

The lead continued to fluctuate, and in the closing minutes Rochester, ahead 53-51, ragged the ball to keep possession. Lukenda stole the ball, passed to Brennan who scored the lay-up to tie the score. Armstrong fouled Monnot with five seconds to go, and Ray coolly sank the first one. The Blues waved the second, and hung onto the ball to secure the win.

Apart from the return to form of Brennan, Huycke, and Binnington, the improvement of Steve Oneschuk was the most noteworthy item of the night. Steve checks well, has a good shot, and has acquired the confidence which was nearly all he needed.

The Blues play McMaster in their first league game with that institution at Hamilton this Saturday.

NEXT WEEK . . . . Western

Eaton's Junior Execs beat Etobicoke CI, 48-33 in the preliminary.
Toronto—Monnot 10, Lukenda 10, Brennan 8, Huycke 8, Binnington 7, Oneschuk 4, Glover 4, Maynerick 2, Wilson 1, Fawcett.
Rochester—Armstrong 12, Hummel 10, Evangelista 8, Secor 8, Schiff 7, Place 4, Payne 4, Cristo, Sarro, Texter, Hoffman, Clarke.

Dents Trounce SPS 5-1 In Hockey Playoff Upset Meet Senior Vic Friday

By JIM PROUDFOOT

In one of the roughest games of the year, Dent A's also provided the upset of the year as they slapped down Sr. SPS yesterday, 5-1. After they got their first goal, Dents were in complete control. They outskated and outfought the Skulemen, all the way through. Bill Young netted two goals for the underdog dentists but every man had a share in the stunning victory.

Referees Tilson and Ryan had trouble at times from keeping the game from becoming a real bloodletting. They handed out 8 minor penalties, 5 to Skule and 3 to Dents, and sent Wilson of SPS to an early shower in the second period when he got rough with the officials.

The game started off at a breath-taking pace. Skule ran into a rash of early penalties but threw up an effective defence at these times. After five minutes, Burley went off for charging and he had no sooner returned when Raftis was sentenced for slashing. When he got back, Raftis wasted no time in getting another penalty, this one for elbowing. As Locke got Dents' first penalty, Skule began to press. At 15:50, Hemmrich broke out of the Dents' end, cut across the goal front and then pushed it ahead to Murchison who caught the far corner to give them the lead.

Mulligan took an early trip to the cooler in the second fram but Dents turned the tables by scoring while short-handed. On a fast play, Young slapped in a pass-out from Hurton. After this, the engineers made their bid and had the dentists hemmed in for minutes on end but they couldn't solve the defence. Then Smith took a penalty for Skule at the ten-minute mark. Soon after, Young moved in quickly to knock in a loose puck. On the same play, a fight broke out which ended up with Morris being thrown out of the game.

When that blew over, Murchison served time for Dents on a slashing charge. Afterwards, Hurton sewed up the win for Dentistry when his long shot from the point fooled the Skule goaler. Hookings received a delayed tripping penalty and in the last minute, the team exchanged goals. For Dents, Martinello backhanded in Johnson's pass and Wilson got Skule on the scoresheet at last on a three-way passing play with Smith and Raftis.

The slate is now definite for the semi-finals. Dent A's on the strength of this win take on Sr. Vic, Friday afternoon. Today, two Group 2 teams face off in the other half of the semi's with Trinity A's meeting Jr. Vic.

SPS Beats UC In Junior B-Ball

By DOUG. McENTEER

The Jr. SPS team turned the tables on Jr. UC yesterday in major league basketball, winning a hard-fought game 33-31 in the main gym. Three weeks ago Jr. UC were the top team when they came out on the high end of a 40 to 39 score. Each of the two games between these teams was very close, with UC coming from behind in the final period to tie the game up, and provide a very exciting climax, before a winner was decided.

In the first game SPS led 17 to 14 at the end of the first period, (having led 14 to 4 midway through the period, and they were ahead 29 to 27 at the end of the second period. Then UC made the score 40 to 32 in their favor with about four minutes remaining in the game, and then started ragging the ball, successfully holding off the SPS stretch-drive to win 40 to 39.

In their second encounter, yesterday, Jr. SPS led 16 to 3 at the end of the first period, and 24 to 15 at the end of the second. UC again came from behind in the third period tying the score 31-31, with less than a minute left in the game. This time it was the engineers' turn to win the close decision, which they did, 33 to 31.

These teams are now tied for second place in their group standing, each having won three and lost three. Hence they will have to meet again in a group play-off game; and on the basis of the two games they have already played, their next encounter should be very thrilling. Dents A, with four wins and one loss, are leading the group; and Jr. Vic. is in last place.

Hockey Jayvees Play OAC Today

The Toronto JV's of the hockey variety face an ominous task when they step on the ice at four this afternoon to play the OAC Aggies. Should they lose today they may be kissing the Intermediate championship good-bye for the first time since the end of the war.

As all rabid fans know, the Aggies pulled off a surprise win over the Blues in Guelph exactly three weeks ago today. To add insult to injury, the cads won the contest by a wide 7-4 margin. Now if the OAC boys defeat the Blues today, and it's quite possible, they have only to down Western and Waterloo once more to salt away the title. However, if the Blues win today, the two teams might end up in a tie for first place which would force a playoff.

The spearhead of the Aggie machine is winger Jack Reeves who only managed to score 4 goals against Varsity in their first meeting. He is backed up by a pretty fair defence and goalie Wynch who shone at times during the previous contest. Other Aggie players whom the JV's will have to look out for are Tolleavan, the McLean brothers and "Sherlock" Holmes.

The JV's have three well-balanced forward lines with Yeo, Dies, Bodnar, Holden and Co. The defence have had some lapses but are quite capable of creaming any incoming Aggie players.

Sportswoman

HOCKEY

POT II downed the PHE II hockey team by a 2 to 1 score at the arena yesterday. Mary Bowden started the Therapists off on the right foot in the first period, when she netted two goals. Gloria Pegg retaliated with a lone counter for the Physeds.

For POT, Mary Bowden and Cathy Faunt were outstanding on the forward line, while Carol Wilbur upheld the defence. Abbie Mulholland and Mary McKellan tried hard in a losing cause.

VOLLEYBALL

In the first volleyball game last night at the LM gym, POT trounced UC II 52-27. The Therapists kept the upper hand throughout the tilt with the score 23-16 at half time. Irene Tyla gave an outstanding performance at the net for POT, while Jean Elder played a spectacular game from every position for UC.

The second fracas saw St. Hilda's I defeat their top rivals PHTE I 34-25. The play was close throughout with many long volleys.

Intermeds Win 46-24 Over NCI

The Women's Intemediate Basketball team came out on the right side of a 46-24 tally, when they downed Newmarket Collegiate girl's team at OCE last night. The Varsity crew gave a much improved showing over their Monday night's performance against McMaster Juniors.

The girls displayed some terrific checking throughout the game and the play was much closer than the score indicates. The Newmarket girls kept Toronto guessing in the first half with the score at half time, 34-20 for the locals.

The Intermeds started to roll in the third quarter when their shots just couldn't miss, and the Newmarket gals failed to keep them from under the Maroon net.

The fourth quarter saw the Intermeds increase their lead to put the game on ice.

Peg Stoddart and Nancy Fleming were high scorers for Toronto, with 12 points apiece, Stoddart copping all hers in the first half of the tilt. Joan Elliot was next with 10. Ira Karlla and Mary Jane Godfrey turned in terrific checking performances. Joan Mitchell led the Newmarket attack with 10 points while Joan Widdifield and Jean MacDonald each accounted for 4. Yvonne Johnston fought hard on the guard line.

The Newmarket squar is th protege of Roseanna Kelly, who coached the Varsity Intermediates last year.

Pitching Sportshoes

There were a couple of games in minor league basketball yesterday. Vic Smoothies took a thriller from Pre-Meds IIB, 32-29. The Victsters showed an evenly balanced team although Mehuish netted 12 points and Anderson got half that. For the doctors, Barrington and Schaw hooped 9 apiece. Finlayson added 4.

The A team from II-year Pre-Meds fared a little better, beating the Vic Hustlers, 42-17. Margulies had 11 points for Meds while Barkoff and Charendoff swished 10 each. Big man for Vic was Kennett with 7.

In water polo, Law blanked SPS IV, 5-0. Bulk threw in 3 goals, MacDonald and Tory added one each.

Cosexual Combat Coming

The traditional University College-Victoria College student exec-utive hockey game will take place today. The grudge game is scheduled for 11:00 a.m. at Varsity Arena.

The Victoria College Union is expected to dress a strong team. Captain "Big John" Devereaux has some of the finest hockey talent at Vic on his executive. "Big John" is most likely depending strongly on his shifty centre star, Graeme "SAC-appeal" Ferguson.

Also expected to play for Vic are Alex "Gigi" Gigeroff, Marion "Stop that puck" Barker (goalie), Audrey "Stonewall" McKim, and "Doughty Doug" Melhuish.

The University College team will have David "Three Star" Rose and Marg "Hey Rube" Fleming as co-captains. "Little Joe" Goldenberg, "Peaceful" Al Strauss, and "Chuckling Charles" Hanley are expected to form a strong defence for UC. Earlier it was thought that "Boom Boom" Joan Presant would join this stellar aggregation, but "Boom Boom" said last night that "she does not play hockey—".

Fresh from the Canadian weight-lifting championships at the Lillian Massey Gymn, Judy Godfrey is expected to be back in form for a rousing game on the ice in time for tomorrow's session.

Big John Ruboff, of Sunnyside, Ontario, said last night that the odds would be fairly even. However, he gave a sly grin and said that "a few ringers might change the picture." He did not give any further details.

of the illiterates

By C. M. GODFREY

Being a man of science, a Medsman, I have watched with interest the current furore over "illiteracy". (Also being a man of science I looked the word up in a dictionary—"Lack of ability to read and write"—a very harsh word!)

Howsomeever, there are a couple of things I don't quite catch.

Firstly, what is the basis for saying that training given in high schools is no longer "an adequate equipment for work in the University?" Has there been any change in the standards (which Mr. Goldring points out are made up partially by university professors) over the last, say, ten years. And if there has not, which I believe to be the case, is there any cause for alarm? How many students have gone on to do good work in our society in spite of being prepared in Ontario secondary schools?

Secondly, I find the actual test is something of a technician's dream—a technician in English. There is always a tendency when one is in a specialty, be it Medicine, Law, English, or any other subject, to become involved in the niceties of the subject—and expect others to appreciate them. And how can one define "chaos"?

Then too, the report of the university library which was partially published in this paper, was met with much inadequate and shallow thinking by a few of our vociferous undergrads. The figures were not analyzed nor was there sufficient research made, because of the rush to climb on the bandwagon carrying the illiteracy banner.

But these are quibbling points.

What is of more interest to me is the role the lecturers are asked to play. Here I most heartily agree with the suggestion that a "lecture is a personal relation". And being of Meds, I speak with authority. But here I leave the science of education and go to the Art.

Because education, like medicine and most sciences, is made or broken by the Art. I feel the Art of educating at this University is not in too bad a state. I say this because on some occasions I have been so bored by a lecture as to fall asleep; I have awakened to be greeted by the next man to me saying that it had been a terrific lecture. There is a place for boring, plodding lecturers, as long as there is a place for boring plodding people in our society. And as the student body is made of such widely divergent personalities that kind of lecturer will always be appreciated. Some, and realize it is only some, students (with no snobbishness intended), prefer a livelier presentation.

Now, I have a reason for saying it doesn't matter how lectures are presented. It is because of a belief that the urge to learn is not the result of carefully nurtured minds; nor nicely integrated timetables; nor hopped-up lecturers; rather the urge is the result of one magic moment when by ofttimes a chance remark made by a lecturer strikes a chord in his listener — and there is never more question of that student's desire or urge to learn. And given the urge, there is little necessity for formal schooling.

Such a remark occurred during an introductory lecture in a rather dirty classroom on a warm fall afternoon several years ago. The hazy sub could barely penetrate the gloom of the room. The lecturer had outlined the course, which was heavy, and had promised hard work in store. His class, rather blasé Medsmen who had already explored the secrets of the human body, were preparing to put on the face of hardened cynicsm, which is so often necessary when looking as disease and death. The lecturer paused.

"Look at your neighbour", he said. "Look at him be he beautiful or ugly. Then look at your patients, at the people in the world around you . . . and remember, each of us was conceived in ecstasy."

That was a magic moment. One which balanced all the non-productive lectures. There are many such moments on this campus, when we consider the multiplicity of students and lecturers.

Well now, where do I stand? As a man of science I have seen no valid reason for alarm over the present state of "adequate mental equipment". The furore serves as a useful "spur to prick the sides of my intent". As an individual I feel all is not lost, nor even nearly lost, for the undergraduate body of this University.

IMPORTANT NOTES

1. All minor league teams where a group tie may occur are asked to check at Intramural office as to when group tie will be played.
2. All basketball and water polo players are asked to make sure their names are on the eligibility certificates in the Intramural office, so that they may be assured of receiving Physical Education credits. Managers should make sure they have signed the eligibility certificates so that physical education forms may be sent to them.
3. So that playoff schedules may start Monday, March 3rd your co-operation in adhering to above schedules would be appreciated.

Russian Roulette

—Cartoon by Hugh Niblock.

Come Sweet Death

The decision of the Executive of the National Federation of Canadian University Students to retain the questionmark on the Russian student visit till next fall is hardly surprising. But it is disappointing. It would seem to indicate that NFCUS prefers a dead ash to a burning issue.

To most undergraduates, NFCUS is a crashing bore. Despite all the propaganda, all the reminders that positively every student pays his twenty cents worth and therefore belongs, few know anything about its activities—and care less.

Of course, NFCUS lacklustre has been the result, to some extent, of student indifference. Vast and imaginative programs are impossible unless accompanied by loud undergraduate cheers. Or so the argument goes.

Now we are not quite so convinced. Having been thrown a golden opportunity for everlasting fame, the Executive seems to have fumbled the catch. The Russian question fairly sizzled last fall; and the Executive did nothing to intimate its interest. Now, they have come up with a comprehensive plan for investigating the possibilities of the much discussed, almost exhausted visit. Such a plan is very necessary, but the reaction a little delayed.

One of the most unfortunate aspects of the whole delay is the necessity of having a formal referendum taken next fall on every campus. This means that the universities which have already agreed, at least on the principle of the visit, will have to take another vote.

Instead of riding the crest of student opinion last fall, the NFCUS Executive may have waited till the tide has gone out. Was this, perhaps, what they wanted? Certainly, it is hardly conceivable that the same, or even comparable, interest will be aroused a year later. It is interesting to note that members of the Executive include representatives of Laval, McMaster and Saskatchewan—all these universities voted against the Russian visit during this year.

The chief reason for taking another vote seems to be a refusal to revoke last September's vote because the sixteen university votes were taken on rather different bases. The NFCUS executive could have called for a referendum when the issue was alive. We wonder whether the clarity and preciseness of next year's information will not be offset by a lack of student interest—they have voted once and enthusiasm will not reach the same peak on the same issues.

It would seem that the NFCUS Executive is crooning "Come Sweet Death"—to the Russian issue. We can only hope that it will not turn out to be their own swan song.

Alles Wissen, Heisst Alles Verstehen

Editor, The Varsity:

The article of Mr. Nelson concerning the ISS Seminar in India printed in issue of The Varsity must for many reasons not be allowed to pass by unanswered.

The basic question put forward throughout the article by Mr. N. is, why the seminar must be held at all? In his opinion the chief reason for the undertaking seems to be the necessity to save India from Communism for Democracy and, on the side of the students, to spend a nice summer vacation in the strange land of jewel-laden maharajas and holy rivers.

These are merely secondary reasons. If Mr. N. were right, the seminar really should be called off, and the fighter-pilot should be trained instead with the $65,000, because such procedure would be by far more appropriate to the poverty and hopelessness of our moral and spiritual existence.

But we are not quite so far gone. "We" means in this case that generation which all over the world some years ago rose enthusiastically from their school benches, put on the khaki-brown or field-grey uniforms to defend their countries or fatherlands, the generation which returned from the battle-fields, the field-grey ones disillusioned and stunned about the real causes of their leaders, and the khaki-brown ones victorious but soon to see how the peace was lost again by their leaders. All this had happened once before. We do not want to go the same awful way a third time; if heaven will give us another chance it certainly will be the last one.

What then are our tasks? We must free ourselves from the disastrous legacy of hate and distrust, from the fatal force of national and racial superiority and inferiority complexes, and, in general from the currents of thought which have ruled the world in the last decades. Briefly, we must get rid of the spiritual and moral mischief done by the previous generations. Go and read those books in political economy, government and especially international affairs in every language, and you will see the diabolic and false logic, disguised under the mask of science which dares condemn whole nations because of one man, and one man because of nationality or race. We must free our minds from these poisonous successors of Northcliffe, Goebbels and Hearst. The day will come when the political deadlock of today is solved again, either by sword or by persuasion, and then we must not stand with empty hands, obsolete songs of hate still stirring our minds. We are to find a concept of how peace may be secured and where to find a way possible for all of us, without thrusting one back in disaster or pushing him into the economic or political abyss. If we do not have such concept at hand when the moment comes, we shall land again in Treaties of Brest-Litowsky or Versailles, Agreements of Yalta or Potsdam, devices which will lead us all in a last catastrophe fully deserved.

To form such concept of our own, one in which there is no room for notions like inherited enemies, dictated treaties, supremacy of races or nations, we cannot rely alone on the text-books written more or less with bias, have only dealt with the problems of the last 30 years war from 1914 on. We must go and find out things ourselves. We have to meet other people and to discuss with them, and to try to see their points. We shall try to acquire our knowledge, concerning the problems of other people, wherever possible through our own eyes and ears, and not through the pens of those who cannot free themselves from the psychological and material ruins which they have helped to bring about.

Yes, seminars like this must be held whenever the financial situation will make it possible. They are one of the most efficient means to assist us in our aspirations for mental independence. Young people from all over the world will live together in one house, they have to get along with each other and they will see that only one thing is needed to live in peace: good will. There will be speeches and discussions, and understanding of the problems will be much easier, as it will be held at a spot where you only need to go outdoors and to look around to get an actual demonstration of the problems. Maybe, after five weeks, one of the students may go "overboard" for the host country. But that, indeed, might not be, as Mr. N. seems to feel, the worst result. In fact, even if the objectivity should suffer under it, which is by no means certain, it is still a very desirable result. That is what we lack so much in the world, fondness for each other, fondness which will overlook the little weaknesses of others because it knows that it cannot claim to be flawless itself.

There must be such a counterbalance of youthful enthusiasms in order to make up for the dangerous stupidity of those who never learn that they are not the only ones who may claim to be images of the Lord, and who walk daily in the temples to thank their God as the Pharisee did, that they are not as bad as their neighbor. Indeed, the objective, mature approach, which Mr. N. demands as prerequisite for selection, is a fine thing, but it is just what students ought to learn. There are other things which are of importance. An open mind and willingness to accept new facts and draw the necessary conclusions, even if they destroy some old and dear convictions, and an ability to represent things and principles which we stand for. If they come back as Indiophiles maybe their opinions can silence those of the strong and slightly hysterical voices of the Asiatophobes and bring about a new, sound synthesis of attitudes in policy. We need the philoi, the friends, more than ever today, because the power of the philoi, the ones who are afraid, of each other is stronger than every word of true objectivity.

The ISS has chosen India as the place for the seminar to be held. They could hardly have found a better spot, for an activity such as this. It shows a bold awareness of the real problems this world finds waiting at its doors. At last the time has gone by where the feuds and pacts among the European powers determine what is a world problem and what is not. The strife over Alsace Lorraine has become an anachronism, just as the contest over Transylvania and all the other "big" problems of Balkanized Europe. The Orient is shaking off the centuries-old chains laid on it by the Occident, and the nations of the world face the problem of readjusting the over-aged pattern of distribution of power and influence to the true facts. They hesitate and delay it; the ancient colonial powers will not give up their supremacy. Are we so blind that we do not see that the sparks and flames of another world struggle, having nothing or little to do with Communism, are burning already from Morocco to China?

The problem of today is not the problem of Russia but the problem of the East and its new relation to the West. No country is more appropriate than India to discuss and observe the new situation which we will all have to face in its entire and fateful weight in not too long a time. India has assumed the leading role in the march of emancipation from the West. She has made it clear to us that she will not go our way, but that, on the other hand, her ways will not necessarily be incompatible with ours.

If we want peace in the world, we have to find out about this way of hers and her followers. Let us go there to learn and understand her attitudes, and to agree in free discussion how each of our nations can live its own life, and yet, at the same time, be the other's brother, caring for his needs and sharing his difficulties.

'Need Savoir Faire' Skule Debate Decides

Skule spirit has dwindled because the Engineering Society has failed to lay enough emphasis on engineering principles, said Geoff Hyde, IV, in the SPS debate yesterday. The resolution that "The Engineering Society places too much stress on Society and not enough on Engineering" was defeated by a vote of 27 to 4.

Hyde, supporting the motion, explained that Skule spirit can only come from common interests, and that the main interest shared by Skulemen is engineering. He pointed out that the Society had sponsored only one technical meeting this year, and blamed the poor attendance at "Skule Night" on the principles of the Society exemplified by this.

Employers want engineers with personality and savoir faire, said John Smale, II, opposing the resolution. Skulemen want social events, he claimed, and don't want to spend their one or two free nights a week at technical meetings.

Smale claimed that the Engineering Society had lost interest in helping engineers to become the socially well-developed men "who get the job".

Skule spirit doesn't come from dances, said Wally Emon, IV, speaking from the floor. Emon maintained that until initiations and the practice of the traditional tie fights beween Skule Freshmen and other faculties is restored, there will be no revival of Skule spirit.

Speaking for the negative, Morley Marks, II, pointed to the excellent social tradition of the cannon, the chariot race, the Lady Godiva Memorial Band, and Ajax the Skule Mule. He added, as examples of Skule spirit, that Skulemen had entered the Float Parade, and canvassed for SHARE. Marks recommended that the Engineering Society should institute a course in "Human Engineering".

The Engineering Society should help the individual student achieve professional maturity, said Norm Kissick, IV. He recommended that the Society should arrange more technical meetings with outstanding speakers, publish technical papers in a quarterly Toike Oike, and sponsor and support post-graduate research and student seminars.

Doug Sherk, President of the Engineering Society, explained that the Society executive finds it "can't do anything" because of the lack of interest of the members. "We don't want to hit people over the head; we want to interest them honestly," Sherk said.

The Society has not lost interest in the students, Sherk said, but the executive has had to do all the work themselves because no one else would help.

TWO WEEKENDS AT CALEDON PLANNED

Students interested in going on either one of two trips to Hart House Caledon Farm being sponsored by the Weekend Committee of the External Affairs Committee, should apply at the Students' Administrative Council office in Hart House. Weekend committee chairman Dorothy Lieberman said yesterday that 10 co-eds and 7 male students are needed for the weekend of March 1 when students from the Ontario Veterinary College and MacDonald Institute at Guelph will be Toronto's guests.

The second weekend is planned for March 8 with Waterloo College (an affiliate of the University of Western Ontario).

Vic, UC Ice Debate: UC Ringers—Too Late

By JOE SCANLON

The Victoria College Union shaded a hard-fighting University College Literary and Athletic Association and Women's Undergraduate Association team 6-5 in a tight, action-packed, close, thrilling, sensational and dramatic hockey game.

The dull affair saw ringer Ian MacDonald score three goals for the Redmen and women (no communist slander here) but still go down before Vic's (excuse the expression) cosexuals.

Coach 'cold hands' Rose didn't dress Joan 'Boom Boom' Presant, 'Sizzling' Sally Hogg and 'Mighty' Mary Lewis. The Viesters dressed all their girls mainly because it was rather cold in Varsity Arena.

The scoring opened with the first goal. This marker came at the eight minute mark of the first period when Lodge from Andrews put Vic in the lead. Two minutes later Andrew from Hudson gave Vic a 2-0 lead. An anonymous character called Beauregard in the UC goal persisted in skating down the ice and chatting with Vic's blonde goalie Joan Dancy who claims that despite Connie Smythe's entreaties she won't replace Rollins.

Two minutes later MacDonald scored his first goal to make the score 2-1. Then Devereaux put one in from Andrew as three Vic players roared down the ice at three mph leaving the Redmen sprawled all over the ice. Several players found the only way to stop was to hit the boards.

To the background of 'Kazillaka' and the 'Old Ontario Strand' the referee Bill Angus skated around the ice taking pictures. Obviously a Vic fan, he didn't seem to notice when the Scarlet and Gold had ten or twelve players on the ice.

File got a two-minute penalty, (leaving Vic with only a four-woman advantage) with one second left in the period. He stayed in the penalty box for about fifteen minutes. The score was 4-2 Vic at half time.

Bell replaced File in the sin-bin halfway through the last period. Judy 'Eyes' Godfrey replaced the anonymous ringer in the UC nets to start the second. Sitting up on the net and rolling her eyes at the puck she restricted the Vic team to two goals.

The game ended with twenty-two players on the ice dashing around after the puck. Credits for chivalry go to Ed File who was seen assisting Carol Hopton to her feet after an upset.

There were five goals scored during the second period during which Vic hung on to their lead to win the victory. After the bell had been ringing for several minutes to end the game the teams gathered in the centre of the ice

Canada Satellite Marxist Thinks

A working class society has produced a "science of history" which will mean that in the future man will be able to control history, according to Vic Hopwood, guest speaker for the Labor Progressive Party club yesterday. Hopwood said that it depends on how people see the world and act whether or not the capitalistic system, which is capable of producing World War III, dominates or whether the working people can maintain peace. He explained that if peace is maintained the imperialists will fail in their efforts to dominate the world.

Hopwood, a graduate in philosophy from this university, was speaking on the topic "Historical Materialism."

Hopwood said that Canada became an independent imperialist country but then, of her own volition, became a satellite imperialist country to the United States. He said that the Canadian capitalist sold out the national interest in the country in the hopes of reaping some of the benefits of the American exploitation of other countries. Canada, according to Hopwood is probably the most highly monopolized country in the world.

War and economic conflict arise, according to Hopwood, out of the difference caused by an economic system where the products of a working society are owned privately while the productive sources are social (i.e. a factory involves the co-operative efforts of hundreds of men).

In contrast to this practice, he cited Karl Marx's maxim "From each according to his ability—to

Professors Duel On 'Universality'

Although there is an aspect of conditioned reflex reaction in the response to every symbol, the whole thing is getting to be too much loose talk about drooling dogs, Professor Northrop Fry said last night in a heated discussion with Professor E. S. Carpenter on "The Universality of Symbolism." Professor Fry was refuting Carpenter's case against universality.

The meeting was arranged by the Victoria College Liberal Arts Club with Professor J. A. Irving as Chairman.

Professor Carpenter pointed out the "acknowledged ambiguity" of symbols which helped put his subject in the world of the unknown. Sometimes the colour green means "magic," he said, and sometimes it means jealousy. Jealousy, on the other hand may be portrayed by yellow, which may also indicate cowardliness . . . "as in the yellow stripe in the Campbell tartan," Carpenter added.

Symbols are the same only where basic personality structures are the same, Carpenter said. He cited exceptions to symbols commonly considered universal. The deluge myth he attributed less to the fact that most parts of the world have been below sea level and more to childhood toilet training.

Asked if happiness was not usually symbolized by lightness and lack of weight, Carpenter replied that this was true except in the case of people who delighted in darkness.

Defining a symbol as the power of communication in art with no definable limits within human society, Professor Fry added, "I don't define, I refine". He believes that man is one species and that the idea of unity of mankind is an idea worth considering for itself despite his diversity of cultures.

"What is involved in the concept of man?" Fry asked. "One thing involved is women," he said. Thus we have common driving human forces: sex, hunger, thirst, etc. Fry used these universal functions as the basis of unity of mankind.

Feature Wrestlers, Swimmers In Championships At A-Night

Four Intercollegiate championships will be decided at Saturday's Athletic Night at Hart House. Senior and Intermediate Swimming and Wrestling crowns will be awarded during the proceedings. The program will be rounded out with Grey Cup movies, games, swimming and dancing; both square and round.

The wrestling championships will get underway Friday afternoon with the Senior preliminaries. This starts at 2 o'clock with no admission charge. Friday night the semi-finals take place in both classes with the finals being run off at the Athletic Night.

Weigh-ins start 9-11 to-day on the Hart House scales. At last night's checkup all the Blues were within two pounds of their weight; so none of them should have any trouble making their limit. Tommy Hatashita was elected Senior captain and Leon Smith Intermediate captain at last night's practice.

Western, McGill, Guelph and Queen's are in the senior group and Western is the intermediate opposition. Mentors Kirk Wipper and Jack Amos feel that their charges should make a good showing against this opposition. The scoring system will award six for a fall, four for a draw, and one for a defeated finalist. Charge for Friday's semis is 50c — the same cost as the Athletic Night.

The wrestling draw took place on Wednesday and Toronto fared very well. Inexperienced intermediates Ned Grossberg and George Vestos both received byes into the finals. Bad luck boys are Doug Hamilton, Paul Phelan and senior captain Hatashita, who, providing he wins his first bout, must face defending champion Fujamagari in his second. All these Blues must fight three bouts to win their weight class.

Over in Hart House pool Saturday night, Coach Kress McCatty and assistant John Stulac will be cheering on the Toronto swim team. The Blues will take on Toronto and Western for the Senior crown. Only Western will oppose the intermediate swimmers but invitation entries from Royal Military College and McMaster will fill out the intermediate program.

"In the Senior competition it is expected that McGill will give the most trouble. It looks like Western are out for the intermediate crown," said John Stulac last night. McGill has two powerful men in their team. Backstroker Mingie and breaststroker Koppin are the two Redmen who might ruin Toronto chances.

"We expect to gain our points in the freestyle and relay events," added Stulac who feels confident that Toronto can take the Senior crown.

RMC and McMaster have six entries each in the intermediate class. There will be two scoring records kept, one as a dual meet between the Blues and the Colts and the other as a meet record of interest only.

Senior points will see the medley relay scored 6-3-0; the freestyle relay 8-4-0 and the other events on a 5-3-1 basis.

Law Briefs

The University of Toronto School of Law Club continues with this issue of The Varsity, the third in the publication of a weekly series of "Law Briefs." These are designed to bring to other students some aspects of the law, and to dispel from their minds notions of mustiness, inspidity and uncompromising rigidity with which the study is allegedly (and so erroneously!) associated.

WHAT'S YOUR VERDICT?

Mrs. McGillicuddy lived with her husband in a house owned by O'Toole, and let by him to Mr. McGillicuddy. The flooring of the kitchen became out of repair, Mr. and Mrs. McGillicuddy threatened to leave, but stayed on, upon a promise by O'Toole that he would repair the flooring. No repairs were made, and one day Mrs. McGillicuddy fell through the flooring and hurt herself.

She brought an action against O'Toole for damages.

Should she recover?

For the Court's verdict, turn to page 7.

Subtle Stokowski Terrifies, Thrills

For better or for worse, the Toronto Symphony Orchestra became a Stokowski orchestra last Tuesday and Wednesday. The famous conductor took hold of the orchestra and and positively seemed to knead it into new and constantly-changing shapes.

All the tricks of the Stokowski trade were in evidence—the extravagant crescendos and diminuendos, the sensuous dwelling on cadences, and the tight control of dynamics (though not always a rhythm). These things are very familiar to everyone through records and radio; but to see and hear them happen to the poor old TSO was a little short of soul-shattering.

Characteristically Stokowski began his program with three adaptations of 17th and 18th century music; a suite from the works of Purcell, a Vivaldi concerto grosso, and Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor. Again, there is no need to mention what happened—everybody has heard these things at one time or another.

I hope I am not more hidebound than my neighbors at the symphony. I frankly admit that what Stokowski did with this music was incredibly thrilling, and I applauded sincerely. However, the thrill I got was from seeing a house on fire; there was a little horror mixed with it.

There is something a bit terrifying about a man that can take the great, austere Passacaglia and Fugue, one of the greatest of all organ works, look it calmly in the eye, and turn it into a lush virtuoso piece for orchestra, impose his own climaxes, his very language on it.

There was no imposition on Wagner's Prelude and Love-Death from "Tristan", which concluded the concert. Here the music and Stokowski's playing of it agreed, and the result was Wagner at his most sublime.

The other work on the program was a new work to Toronto—Edmund Rubbra's fifth symphony. In listening to the unfamiliar music, one forgot about the conductor and concentrated on the music. Although composed since the war, it is in no sense avant-garde.

It is in fact very tuneful, normal-sounding music; the tunes often have a peculiar turn to them that is more than a little reminiscent of Cesar Franck. The orchestration, also, like Franck's is by turns subtle and blatantly brassy.

Leopold Stokowsky is the model of a modern virtuoso-conductor. He plays on his instrument like any virtuoso, and has the same control over it. What he plays, and how how he plays it, is his own in a very personal sense; no one but Stokowski could do it, and perhaps few would care to if they could.

Trinity Choir Shine With English Songs

Of the three college choirs that have given concerts on the campus so far this year, The Trinity Choral Society is by far the best. This fact made the final Wednesday afternoon concert in Hart House, given by this choir under the direction of Eric Rollinson, a pleasure to listen to.

Neither of the other two choirs maintained as consistently high a standard as did this one, either in musical proficiency or taste. Within the narrower confines of the music the Trinity group allows itself to sing, they succeeded in producing music with polish and grace to it.

The hour-long program consisted exclusively of English music, ranging in date of composition from the late Middle Ages to the present day, with a notable absence of 18th and 19th century music. Eric Rollinson helped in his gay introductions to straighten out the audience on the history of some of the lesser-known composers represented.

Seven of the numbers performed were madrigals in all their polyphonic glory, with as many as six parts in some cases. The enthusiasm of the choir for this music was quite evident in their forceful but neat phrasing and declamation, giving life and color to all the parts, including the inner ones.

The tone of the voices, especially of the sopranos, was characteristic of the sort given by a choir of untrained voices. There is a little less ring to it—more like a group of viols than of violins. The result was quite appropriate to the music the choir sang, since no one tried to force the tone — another matter in which this group superior to the others I have heard.

The preponderance of sopranos over the other voices was a little too great for good balance, except where they divided into first and seconds. However, when the girls divided into two equal groups for "Sweet nymph, come to thy lover", the result was a beauty and exactitude of balance that would be hard to match. The men in "Sweet Kate" was almost as good.

A final note should be added regarding Eric Rollinson's arrangement, in the most drastic modern terms, of the Trinity song. I do not know if the bizarre harmony and key shifts had any deep significance. They did add some rollicking good fun to the tune. By all means let all the colleges sing their tunes in Hart House, if they can get arrangements like this one.

By DAVID PEDDIE

Oscar Wilde's THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST is described as a "trivial comedy for serious people". All too often it is passed over by those pedantically serious people who find in it nothing but silliness and superficiality. But when it is given more careful attention by someone willing to take the play seriously then THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST reveals itself as sophisticated farce that is also a parody of upper-class Victorian England tossed across the footlights with great flippancy as if it weren't the least bit serious. Bernard Shaw, who did exactly the same thing with romantic melodramas, found THE IMPORTANCE too clever and much too trivial.

The play is, however, an elaborate joke at the expense of that famous Victorian virtue which is sometimes called prudery sometimes "sweetness and light", but which Wilde with tongue in cheek calls—earnestness.

John Worthing, a gentleman of great wealth but dubious parentage, is rebuffed in his proposal to the Hon. Gwendolyn Fairfax by that fair creature's mother, Lady Bracknell. His earnest attempt to get round that formidable matron — to the extent of changing his name to Ernest — are stifled until the end of the play when, by a quirk of fate, he finds out who his parents were and is given Lady Bracknell's consent to marry Gwendolyn.

The machinations of Worthing and his friend Moncrieff to win the hands of their sweethearts which make up the substance of the play, are nothing but a series of lies, deceptions and hypocrisies, all decorated with the frills of very witty dialogue. The epigrams, paradoxes and wit, if carefully examined, would provide a catalogue of social comment for and again Victorian society ranging from the responsibility of the lower classes to the fashionable age for London ladies. In the end, due to a happy chance—pure fluke—virtue is rewarded and John—now Ernest—can marry his own Gwendolyn.

The International Players, who presented Wilde's best play at Leaside High School this week, would be advised to stick to summer-stock plays which they understand. Their production of THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST was an uncertain comedy of no intentions. I think they intended to make us laugh but they were not too successful. They killed as many of Wilde's jokes as they could and made no attempt to achieve a single united style and purpose.

The director, William Needles, could not decide whether the play was a farce or a stylized comedy of manners and allowed the actors to switch from one style to another indiscriminately. Actually the play is both, amd the players, if they exaggerate the mannerisms and especially the sophistication, achieve an effect that is much more positive and farcical than the usual tricks of rolling eyes, double-takes and "hammy" timing on jokes. The lines should all be spoken with the same amount of "earnestness" which, for Wilde, is a superficial, hypocritical sort of feeling. This makes it seem as if the people are very serious about what they say and yet don't care so much as a muffin.

Drew Thompson and John Howe, as John Worthing and Algernon Moncrieff, approached it for a moment in their tiff over the muffins. But the latter for the most part was either playing realistically—taking the lines at their face value—or carelessly—without knowing what the lines meant. Mr. Thompson on the other hand commits all kinds of mistakes without anyone noticing. For one thing, he was not playing the part at all; he merely plays each line as it comes along for all that it is worth and in doing so often steps beyond the pale into tasteless vaudeville technique. But he has an ingratiating stage presence that hides many of those faults.

Jane Mallett, who has star-billing and who usually can demonstrate how comedy should be done, was very weak as Lady Bracknell. She seemed to be groping for her lines, going through it all mechanically. Her timing was way off the beat and she did very strange things with her mouth which seemed unnecessary.

Maxine Miller, as Cecily Cardew, was the only consistently good performer. She looked charming and played with right earnestness. Pegi Brown as Gwendolyn had moments when she too was close to an understanding, but her scene with Cecily was far too deadly. It would have been more effective if played politely. Peter Scott in the role of the analogy-seeking Dr. Chasuble was competent but somewhat too self-conscious.

It was all very unsatisfactory for so clever a play.

Keep British In Suez Canal Zone UN Club Security Council Agrees

Motions that British troops should be withdrawn from the Suez Canal Zone and that the canal zone should be internationalized under U.N. protection were defeated last night when the United Nations Club held its final Model Security Council. The topic under discussion at Cartwright Hall, St. Hilda's, was the right of Egypt to take over the defences of the Suez Canal Zone.

The Council was opened by an Egyptian motion that British troops should be withdrawn from the Canal Zone. The United Kingdom refused to recognise the motion and the U.K. delegate put forward another resolution. The Egyptian motion was accepted for discussion after a procedural vote.

The delegate from the U.S.S.R., Ed Lowry, I UC, charged that Britain has violated the treaty by placing 50,000 troops in the Canal Zone to a distance of 80 kilometers instead of 10,000 troops to a distance of 10 kilometers, as allowed under the treaty.

The Chinese delegate, Bob Chiang, said, "my government is sympathetic to both countries, for we have once been a great empire and like the British, lost power. We have also known the presence of foreign imperial troops within our borders." Chiang urged a spirit of reconciliation as he warned that the alternative may be war and the "destruction of us all."

Speaking for Israel, Elliot Whiteman, II UC, charged Egypt with breaking international convention which agreed that "the canal shall never be subjected to blockade. Egypt has refused passage to tankers bound for my country," he said.

When the Egyptian resolution asking for the withdrawal of the British troops was put to a vote it was defeated.

As motion proposed by the delegate from the United States was considered next. This motion recommended "the withdrawal of British troops and the internationalization of the Suez Canal Zone under U.N. protection until 1968." It was defeated six to three with three abstentions.

$50 A Day?—Not Really!

Men capable of earning $50 a day are needed to search wave lengths for Varsity radio. So ran an advertisement in yesterday's Varsity. This does not mean that the students will be paid $50, or at all, but they will gain experience perhaps enabling them to get such jobs after gradution, said Bud Trivett, II Law, one of the students who hope to have a Varsity radio station in operation next fall.

The students are needed to do the mathematical calculations necessary to find a frequency for the proposed station. This must be done before any application for a station can be made. Commercial firms charge as much as $50 a day for doing this, and since it is an operation that can take weeks, it would obviously be too expensive to hire a firm. So the radio committee feels that a couple of students in electrical Engineering, or perhaps ham radio men in other courses could gain experience in this way. There have been several applications already.

A frequency for Varsity radio may be located in a few hours, or it may take weeks, he said. It depends partly where they try to locate it, since some parts of the band are a lot more crowded than others. A suitable part of the band is chosen first, with regard to such considerations as the height of antenna it will require, and then the engineers go to work on that section with mathematical formulae.

The advertisement also asked for a "talented accountant." Considerable bookkeeping will be required to set up what the costs will be for the various things, so that funds can be spread out eveny through the year. The accountant should be someone in Commerce and Finance, or Economics, who is taking accounting.

Like the engineers, the accountant would be unpaid. The idea of the whole project is to train people interested in going ahead in radio in particular, and those interested in amateur radio while in college, in general.

One Man Paradox

Editor, The Varsity:

One man died and the whole world stood still. Or so would seem the wish of many leaders. One man died and the multitudes humbled themselves in reverence, his funeral became a spectacle of pageantry and death.

The role of him who died, victim of circumstance, was scion of imperialism with all its caste, inequality, and denial of the universal brotherhood of mankind. They who praised him professed Christianity with its equality before God and man. He became an idol as they mocked their own religion.

One man died and the paradox of Christianity in theory and in modern practice was revealed.

Clique? Thunderbolt

Editor, The Varsity:

Apparently The Varsity is more interested in suppressing the project of a University radio station than in giving an adequate news coverage. Why? What is the purpose of The Varsity? Is it a newspaper devoted to the interests of the University as a whole, or is it an outlet for the emotions of an unimaginative clique unforgivably lacking in foresight? Why, if The Varsity is interested in covering the issue of a proposed Radio Station, do they not consult those who have systematically checked their sources and obtained authoritative information relevant to the actual issue?

First regarding the question of cost: The University needs no more than a 100-watt station. The Engineering Department estimates the cost of building such a station to be approximately $3,500 - $6,000. The Varsity inquired about the cost of a new and installed 250-watt station and obtained the figure of $30,000. This figure is obviously irrelevant to the present situation.

Now regarding the question of personnel requirements: Queen's University, with an enrollment one-sixth that of the U. of T., has for several years been successfully operating a station with more available personnel than they need to use. This fact alone should be sufficient to dispel any doubts, even those of the overly pessimistic Varsity.

In conclusion may we offer a word of advice to The Varsity? Remember your function. If you wish to give an impartial appraisal of the efforts of the Radio Committee, find out what those efforts are before attempting to check them against other information. In this case the reports have been biased because of a failure to take into account the situation to be appraised.

Marx So-Called

Editor, The Varsity:

Monday's issue of The Varsity carried an article on the lecture given by Hal Proctor on the subject "The Marxist View of the State." I object to the conception of the "state" which Mr. Proctor hold throughout the article. He contends that the state is simply an instrument in the hands of the "capitalists," that the powers of the state are used to the advantage of the small group of people who can class themselves with E. P. Taylor. He claims that the government of this country, the government founded upon democratic principles, is only of use to oppose any change in the balance of power.

I wish to remind those who share the same line of thought as Mr. Proctor that the Government of Canada is controlled by the people. It is the people you see every day on the streets, in the shops, in the factories and on the farms that control the government. The reins of power are not held by the millionaires as Mr. Proctor would like us to believe but are held by those who claim to be citizens of Canada. Any change in the government is brought about by the will of the people. It is the people, the ordinary man of the street type, who has the power to make or break the government. If the rulers of the government are to be only the capitalists then we might as well say that we are all capitalists and that there is no need for reform.

Mr. Proctor says that the people could win socialism if they seized the controls of the government from the capitalists. Who says that the people want socialism in the first place? If the trend were in that direction I am sure that it would not take a revolution to ensure its success.

Instead of blustering about the so-called capitalistic attitude of this country, why will not Mr. Proctor open his eyes and see for himself the democracy in action?

C. S. Black,
I SPS.

AVR Biased

Editor, The Varsity:

Mr. Gray, in his review of the All-Varsity Revue, got so wrapped up in the lighter and more clownish parts of the show that he completely ignored one of the brightest lights in the show, Ray Davidson. Five numbers were sung by Mr. Davidson, and sung very well in my opinion. But that's beside the point since no matter what sort of performance was turned in, an artist of such calibre deserves some mention, and a reviewer who isn't blinded by either bias or ignorance would recognize that fact. So let's give credit where it is due, credit to the clowns, but to the more prominent artists also.

A Magazine To Make You LAUGH

By PEARL PARNES

Back in the days of the post-first-World War period, there sprang up in a number of places on the North American continent, a crop of humour writers. The "Pirge," the University of "Virginia Reel," the "Punch Bowl" and the "Brown Jug" were a few of the magazines that bobbed up in universities across America and Canada. And a group of enterprising young students at the University of Toronto had a casual conversation and gave birth to the "Goblin."

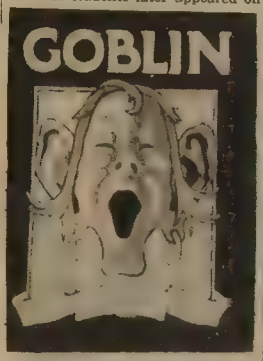
James A. Cowan, now head of the J. Arthur Rank organization here, was the editor-in-chief. There was the odd "arty-arty" magazine being published at the time, with Mr. Justice D. C. Wells, the moving spirit of one, and the Varsity was flourishing three times a week. Life, riding on its Gibson Girl success, and Judge were the two humour magazines of the time. Then Mr.

Mellerdrammer



A young chap whose name is Jim Stollick

She had a complexion
Of cosmetic perfection,
And he died of a bad Painter's Colic.
—Reprinted from the Goblin, 1921.

Cowan and his cohorts rented an office, and financed themselves with the money "none of us had."

They had to make the magazine a success or they would have to start scrubbing floors. There was eyebrow-raising among some of the faculty, but they let the new magazine be sold in the halls of the colleges. And the first issue was sold out in half an hour.

Stephen Leacock, then a professor at McGill, contributed a major article for the first issue (Feb., 1921). "Browning," "Tennyson," "Edgar Allan Poe," and "Squoof Dorwoldsen (a famous and lately diseased Nebraskan poet)," wrote verse "exclusively for Goblin." The first story Ted Reeve, now a famous columnist, ever sold was bought by the Goblin. And Professor A. F Coventry was a staff advisor — it seemed fitting that a professor of embryology should be connected with the new-born magazine.

A convention of college comic editors was staged at one point—"a completely informal and relatively insane affair." About thirty edistature was outfitted in a borrowed coonskin coat, horn-rimmed glasses which were painted to emphasize the horn-rims, and a flattened hat (various students later appeared on tors came from both sides of the border, and the Star insisted on covering the proceedings, which were subsequently invented. A "typical" student of suitably rotund the street attempting to imitate the new vogue). Henry Ford was upset at the time about the morals of college students in America, and the "convention" held a solemn discussion which denounced Ford "for his attitude to college comics," and decided that the Ford car was a greater contributor to immorality because it was the leader in open car seduction.

Then one evening Cowan was responsible for putting out The Varsity. Mr. J. E. McDougall came in from the Goblin office with a serious report on "advice to engineers." They began to "lighten" it a bit, and the famed "Jazz issues" of The Varsity were born. The two comedians did not reappear at lectures for several days.

When the original group graduated from college, Messrs. Crombie and McDougall stayed with it. But it was the amateurish quality that had put it over, and once it was put on a business basis, it failed. The original group broke up and went to work. Most of them are now top advertising executives, and newspaper men. One of the group is the present fire-marshall of Ontario, and most of the artists became doctors. But before its decease, the Goblin had sold on news stands and in universities across the country.

Cowan went to the Star, "at the time when all ho... Grads in English went there in droves." Then he began writing film and theatrical columns. He had acted in Hart House Theatre with Vincent and Raymond Massey, "lousing up the death scene from Romeo and Juliet for Raymond," and used his Hart House background to good advantage. He joined road shows on the management side, and handled English shows on tour across Canada. He worked with Powell and Pressburger (Red Shoes) on their first big success, "49th Parallel," and his present job is a natural to him.

The object of the Goblin was to make people laugh, to have fun without hurting anyone. Their credo was:

With shining gold within the hold,
Home sailed the Privateer.
The GOBLIN'S crew bears home to you,
The challenge: "C'est a rire."

Free Verse

No one under sixteen (or any freshmen) may read this, by order of Dominion Government:
No sound
But the roaring of
The mosquitoes.
(Have you ever tried to write
Free verse? — Well, don't then;
It's Damn hard!)
Not a sound
(As I said before)
But the uzzling
Of the muskeg;
(What that means you will have to guess).
No smell
But that of rotting wood
(Although sometimes I must confess that sometimes there is An odour of pine),
No sight
But thousands (or rather Millions)
Of little stunted
Trees.
That is Northern

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

The Blues not only broke a record Wednesday night—Rochester's record of ten straight wins—but they set or prolonged one or two of their own. For one thing, it was the first time that Toronto has beaten Rochester, at least since Bob Masterson took over the coaching in 1948; it also marks a win string of five victories against no losses on home grounds, though they have lost all their road games except with McGill and Queen's.

But the most notable record was that set by the fans. Only 34 student tickets were sold. Some three or four hundred regular price tickets were sold at Mutual Street, and some of these were probably bought by students, but it still appears that most of the support Varsity gets for their games at the Arena is from adult fans.

There is always a good turnout for the games at Hart House. Yet the best games last year, without exception, were the ones played at Mutual Street. The floor there is full size (one of the very few such courts in Canada), and the seating is adequate—about 4,000 seats. Why there is invariably a turnout of over a thousand at Hart House A-nite games, where the spectators usually have to stand two or three deep, generally to see a scrambly ball game in which the players haven't room to move around, while the best games are played before rows of empty seats at Mutual Street, is more than this columnist can figure out.

* * * * *

For several years now, this University's greatest need, in athletics anyway, has been modern and adequate facilities for its various indoor sports. Students apparently will not turn out to games downtown no matter how much better the games or the seating accommodation. Nor is it entirely a matter of getting crowds to watch.

There is only one gym of practical size for all the basketball played at the University — intercollegiate, interfaculty, and just fooling around. The fencers and the weight lifters all work out in the same room. Any weight lifter who strays from the weights platform is in danger of being impaled on a foil or beheaded by a sabre. There is no seating capacity for indoor track meets, and the track itself, while very good for its size, does not compare with the 220 indoor cinder tracks at American colleges. The swimming pool is excellent though seating here too is cramped.

* * * * *

At Michigan State College, a new field house was built about ten years ago. In front of it, as in front of all of their athletic buildings, stands a sign saying "Erected at no cost to the public; this building was paid for entirely out of spectators' admission charges."

The main part of the building, about the same size as Varsity Arena, contains a 220 cinder track. laid out around a raised basketball floor. The galleries seat about 5,000. In a wing of the same building are (downstairs) the pool, wrestling and other facilities, and (upstairs) a gym containing five basketball floors for intramural games, each about the size of Hart House gym.

While a sports factory like that is not necessary at Toronto, the contrast in facilities is striking to say the least. Hart House was completed in 1914, and has given nearly 40 years of good use.

No one expects that this would be done here immediately. The debt on the stadium would have to be paid off first, for one thing. Nevertheless the erection of a seperate building for indoor sports should be scheduled for within the next ten years.

Aggies Win 7-6 In Overtime Tilt

The OAC Aggies proved that their previous victory over the Intermediate Blues was no fluke yesterday as Hutcheon topped the puck into an open net to give them a 7-6 win in the last minute of overtime. In doing so, Hutcheon pretty well put the title on ice for the Aggies although Western still has a slim matchematical chance.

Since a tie wouldn't help his team at all, coach Jack Kennedy pulled out goalie Bates in favor of six attackers in the final minute. But Aggie wingman Jack Reeves got hold of the puck and shot it down the ice just hitting the goal post. Hutcheon tore down the ice and beat out a Varsity player by a hair to tip it in.

It was a see-saw battle all the way. Murphy opened the scoring for OAC at 1:52 of the first period but Yeo tied it up at 14:45 flicking in a pass from Henderson.

Varsity took an early lead in the second period on two quick goals by Bodnar and Lawson. Then the Aggie pay off man, Jack Reeves, slapped in a rebound, but Henderson and Davison worked a sweet passing play to keep the 2 goal lead. Reeves and Lawson each got another to finish off the scoring in the second.

Early in the third, Hutcheon and Dale notched two quick ones on long shots from the blueline. Then Strapp put OAC ahead from a scramble in front of the net. Davison stickhandled through the three men and hit the far corner to knot it up at 6 all. The fateful overtime followed.

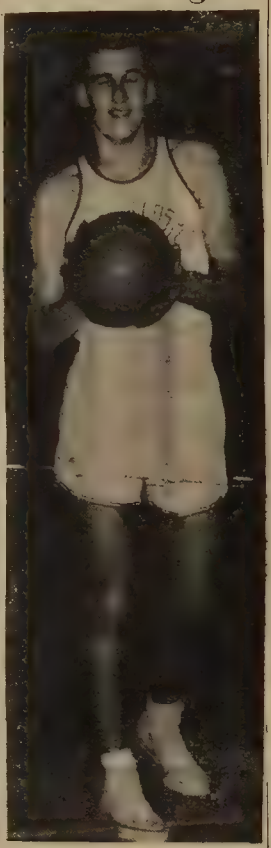
UC Beaten 40-33 In Major B-Ball

University College Seniors ended their basketball season yesterday, dropping a 40-33 decison to Senior SPS. The Skulemen took a first quarter lead which dwindled in the second period to a minus three-point advantage and then recovered to outscore the Redmen 19-9 in the final stanza to win the game.

Johnny Kozmochku played his usual game scoring seven points to spark the Redmen in their losing cause. Ken Brown gave the Skulemen twelve points to lead them to their win. Referees Salsberg and Bederman called 36 fouls in the game which nevertheless was not rough.

Carabins Visit Arena Tonight Needing Tie To Clinch Title

By virtue of their four point win against McGill on Wednesday night, the Montreal Carabins are back in first place, three points ahead of Laval and seven in front of third place Varsity. The Carabins are the visitors at the arena tonight and if they can down the Blues, or even gain a tie, they will sew up the championship. The Blues on the other hand must win all four of their remaining games, two against McGill and two against Montreal.



The Blues have beaten and tied the Carabins in their two previous meetings this season, so the league leaders are far from unconquerable. Varsity has the same record against McGill.

The same Blue team that dropped a 5-4 decision to Laval on Monday night, will line up against the Carabins tonight at 8:15. Don Rope will centre John Adams and Jack Wheldrake. Jack Mackenzie who picked up several points last weekend will play between Phil Arrowsmith and Captain Ernie Frey. This line at present seems to be best for the Blues. Pete Vernon and Al Conboy will flank Norm Fox on the third line.

Goalie Jack Ross will have a defence in front of him composed of Red Stephen, Paul Prendergast, Gerry Fitzhenry and Al Fasan. Fasan, incidentally has been improving immeasurably each game out. A converted forward, the tall northerner is currently hitting the opposition well and also breaking out from his own corners in fine fashion.

Although the Carabins looked weak in their last 9-4 drubbing here a few weeks ago, they cannot be treated too lightly. They currently boast three out of the four top point getters in the league. It is likely that they will be much improved tonight because, as mentioned before, a win or a tie for them would eliminate all mathematical chances of any other team catching them.

Art Binnington

Art Binnington, Blues' six-foot-four center is becoming so good with his set shot that he can score with his eyes closed. Binnington hooped seven points in Varsity's win over Rochester on Wednesday. He hails from Toronto and came to the Seniors from last year's intermediate Blues. Binnington has been steadily improving this season.

Western, Mac In Track Meet At Hart House

Another three-way track meet will be held at Hart House Saturday afternoon, this time with Western and McMaster providing the competition.

For Varsity, ex-Western star Doug Wilson will face his old buddies in the sprint events, along with Eric Kofmal, Clint Husband, Jack Warga, and others. Murray Gaziuk, George McMullen, Mal Crawford, and Jim (if you can spell it, you can pronounce it) Bassingthwaighte, will be in the long sprints. Charlie Wortman and George Webster will probably have it their own way in the middle distances.

McMaster has the best 100-yarder in the loop, Don McFarlane, as well as Wimp Crawford, sprinter, and Koenig, a good quarter-miler.

Western reportedly has a fair bunch of sprinters, and at least one good entry in the long sprints, Jim Duncan.

Women are welcome for indoor meets; all spectators are admitted free of charge.

B-Ball Blues At McMaster Saturday Nite

The Basketball Blues get down to business, in the form of more league action, tomorrow, journeying to Hamilton to play McMaster Marauders. McMaster, like Varsity, lost to Western at London, and have beaten Queen's and McGill, so the teams should be well matched. McMaster beat Rochester Tech (not Rochester U.) last week, and have been having a fairly successful season.

Al Foreman, a local product, Gerry MacTaggart, from Orillia, and Lorne Wriggiesworth, from Toronto, are the nucleus of the Marauders' power.

Varsity is in red hot form, having won five out of their last six games. They have looked better every time out since they began the Inter-collegiate schedule January 25. Varsity will probably start a team of Ray Monnot, Lou Lukenda, Steve Oneschuk, Bill Huycke, and tieher Don Fawcett or Ed Brennan.

on the sideline

By CAROL LOGAN

Tonight at Queen's begins the annual contest for the legal custody of the Bronze Baby. This ugly little replica of a typical fourteen-year-old female goes home with the team that wins the Intercollegiate Basketball Meet. For the past three years her hideous features have blankly watched the wall above Miss Parkes' head in the SAC office, except for a few brief moments "on the road". But for all that, bless her beastly little heart, we loves her and we want her back in the same spot next year.

Varsity's first hearing will be held at 9:00 o'clock tonight. On Saturday afternoon the session will continue with a winners-meet-winners and losers-meet-losers match. The Toronto squad is going into the fray with three wins in exhibition games behind them. Eight of the girls are veterans of last year's Intecoll championship team. Alma Hatch is in high scoring position, while both Sally Wallace (Intercollegiate point leader last year) and Joan Mooney have been playing good ball again this year. Peg Walker, who missed the tournament last year because of a broken foot, will be wearing the blue this week-end. Rookies Shirley Roberts and Carolyn Dobson have already proved their worth in the games with McMaster and Hamilton Normal.

Mary Lewis, third year veteran on the guard line, is captain of the Bluebelles. Guards Heather Chipman, Mary Macdonald and Beth Wade are back with a year's experience behind them, while newcomres Sally Sarles and Marian Capel turned in capable performances under the Varsity net in the exhibition tilts.

As far as the competition from the east goes, McGill downed the Gaels in an exhibition game earlier in the season. McGill has five of its last year squad back. Wendy Cleugh, captain, and Ruth Welsman, both three year veterans, are leading scorers in the inter-city competition in Montreal this year. The Red and White team is well up in the leagues' line-up. Pat Radcliffe is playing her fifth year of Intercollegiate basketball for Queen's. Always a safe bet for scoring honours, Pat played basketball for the University of British Columbia before coming to Kingston.

The winner of the Intercollegiate meet must defeat McMaster, before they are official Intercoll champions. This has been the procedure for the last three years, and each time the winner of the meet (Toronto in this case) has come out on the bright side of the challenge match. The Varsity squad has already defeated McMaster twice this year, so that the possibility of a challenge meet this spring will probably depend on the outcome this week-end.

Trinity Win 10-3 Enter Puck Final

A six-goal outburst in the third period gave Trinity A's an overwhelming 10-3 victory over Jr. Vic yesterday and enabled them to move into next week's final series for the Jennings Cup. Their opponents will be the winners of today's game between Sr. Vic and Dent A's.

Pete Stewart was the man of the hour for Trinity as he went on a five-goal scoring spree. He set up another one to make it a six-point day. Creole added a pair of goals and this combined with a fighting, hustling display, made him one of the stars of the contest. Butch Bowden and Gav Dalglish both turned in solid games on defence for the Buttery Boys.

Bobby Dale, Blue football star, went very well on the Vic defence. He was strong defensively and got away for some good rushes, one ending up in a goal. Bob Dunford scored what was probably the nicest goal of the game for the losing Vicsters. He tore up the right side with one man back. He went around Trinity's McMurtry and left him standing there while he went on to score handily.

Trinity started the game off with a pair of quick counters. Creole fired one home from a scramble while Dale was off with a tripping penalty. Seconds later, Stewart slapped in a lateral pass. Vic got one back before the end of the period when James shot one in on an angle from the boards. Towards the end, Trinity were two short when Stewart followed Bowden into the cooler but they covered up well with some nifty forechecking.

Vic tied it early in the second when North got it back to Dale on the blue-line. Dale's shot found the net after bouncing off a few legs and sticks. At 9:38, Stewart finally lit the lamp after a series of close calls. At 10:26, Dunford tied it on his solo effort. Trinity wasn't long in breaking the deadlock as Stewart completed his hat trick by slipping in Ketchum's pass.

It was in the third that Trinity ran away with the game. At 4:45, Stewart scored from Harley. White did the trick at 8:35. Then Harley and Creole padded the total with two goals in 8 seconds of the 15th minute. Green banged in Stewart's rebound and Stewart completed the scoring with his fifth goal at 18:41.

The referees called it straight from the book, dishing out nine minor penalties, 3 to Vic and 6 to Trinity.

Pallandi, Couceiro On Inretcol Team For Boxing Meet

In two colourful boxing bouts that took place list night in the Hart House gym, Taimo Pallandi and Roberto Couceiro gained the right to compete in the Senior Intercollegiate Boxing Tournament that will take place at Kingston on February 29.

In the Heavyweight bout Taimo Pallandi defeated Dunc Ellis by unanimous decision in a bout that featured some very hard punches. Ellis forced the fight in the first round while Pallandi was feeling his opponent out. Taimo weathered the first round flurries and dominated throughout the rest of the bout. The winner's greatest advantage was his superior experience and in the last two rounds he completely outclassed Ellis.

The other bout was in the 147 pound division between Roberta Couceiro and Viv Prendergast. Couceiro has several Intercollegiate championships under his belt, and his greater experience barely gave him a win by a split decision against his opponent's superior condition. Prendergast was the aggressor throughout the bout, while Couceiro was saving himself in order to be able to go the distance. The latter threw less punches than his opponent but he connected with practically every one and his speed and shiftyness was making Prendergast miss many times.

St. Michael's College B team whipped Forestry A, 33-23, in a straightforward win. The Mikemen looked surprisingly good in recording their win against the top riding woodchoppers. St. Mike's went up 22-16 in the first and added another four points to lead, 28-18, going into the last period. St. Mike's continued to pile it on in the final frame. Archar was top man for the winners with 13 points.

Pre-Meds edged a hard fighting Sr. Vic, 42-39. The upset victory marked the first loss of the season for the Vicsters. Vic were up 12-11 and 27-24 at the end of the first two periods but the future doctors outscored them 18-12 in the last stanza to take the three-point decision. There were 31 fouls in the game which was a big one to both teams. Dalgeish of Meds with 13 points was big man on the floor. Earle of Senior Vic was their big scorer as he hooped 10 points in a losing cause.

Civil Engineers B team whipped St. Mike's Dayhops, 31-19, in a one-sided minor league game. The Skulemen improved steadily during the game as after a first period 13-13 tie they forged ahead with Curtis's 13 markers to win.

The Verdict

The Court held that a landlord who lets a house in a dangerous state is not liable to the tenant's customers for guests for accidents happening during the term of the lease; for, fraud apart, i.e., wilful concealment of defects, there is no law against letting a tumble-down house.

The husband was the tenant, the contract for the lease being between him and the landlord. The wife, who was not the tenant, was in no better position to recover damages than a customer or guest.

There ought to be a Law

—Cartoon by Hugh Niblock

After LL.B., What?

The University of Toronto is in the happy condition of possessing a Law School which, we believe, cannot be bettered anywhere in this country. Yet it is not fully recognized by the Law Society of Upper Canada.

The Faculty of Law has a larger and more modern library than Osgoode Hall's. It has the best of professors and an excellent seminar system. It has students coming to it from China to Ireland, and is recognized by the Harvard School of Graduate Studies, which does not accept Osgoode Hall grads to proceed to a graduate degree.

Then why the quarrel? Some simple arithmetic will show that a high school graduate spends six years before being called to the bar. A student proceeding through the University of Toronto must spend seven years in the educational process. Some persons, including lawyers, suggest that the Law Society positively wants to make it more difficult for those proceeding through the university. It seems most unfortunate that students willing to get a more thorough knowledge of legal principles should be penalized for it.

The U of T law school feels that while specific laws may vary, the principles behind them are permanent, and that an understanding of these principles will make a man a better lawyer. The Law Society claims that only through practice, with a few years of instruction in legal theory, can good lawyers be produced. But the U of T is quite willing to have its students go through a year of articling before being called to the bar. On these grounds, it appears that compromise might be possible.

The Benchers defend themselves on several grounds. First, the traditional defense. The Law Society has always had control of legal education, and therefore always should have. We have no argument with the conclusion, but it seems illogical to place such an emphasis on tradition that progress is almost impossible.

The second defense of the Benchers' position is that by having control of admission to the profession, they are guaranteed that those coming in will know what they want them to know. With this conclusion we also agree. Members of the legal profession need all the training they can get. If they want more than the minimum, they are free to acquire it. But they must get the minimum, and at the prescribed school.

A rational solution could be reached if Benchers would admit to the bar all who could pass their set of examinations. But some Benchers say no. You can't judge a man's ability by an examination, you have to know how he does in actual practice, that is, while he's articling. But articling is dreaded by Law students as a period when they will be required to do the joe jobs around a law office—searching titles serving writs—for a maximum of $25 a week, moreover. When, in a brief period of progress in the 1920's, Osgoode Hall increased lecture hours at the expanse of time spent in articling, city lawyers protested aloud against this loss of cheap labor.

The only conclusion is that the Law Society sees its position more as a monopolistic privilege than a social responsibility. When it has done so little to set up a valuable system of legal education, why should it be unwilling to recognize fully those energetic enough to take such steps?

This is a violation of academic freedom. Yes, let the Law Society set the tests for lawyers, but let the educators be free to teach what they want. A member of the Law Society was once queried about academic freedom. His astounding reply was that the issue arose only in connection with educational institutions, and "Osgoode Hall is not an educational institution." Then, we ask, what is it?

In the Autumn, 1950 issue of the Journal of Legal Education, Dean Wright of the Faculty of Law states that from 1919-23, law students contributed $443,958, over 60 per cent of Law Society Revenue. Of this sum, he says, the school cost only $143,303, less than 20 per cent of the total revenue. This leaves a surplus (or profit) of over $300,000 derived from the students. As far as we know, there are no other Law Schools in Canada that make a profit out of their students.

The Law Society of Upper Canada will not accept qualified lawyers from other provinces unless they pass the four-year Osgoode course. But there is a back door way of getting in, and that is the payment of the indefensible sum of $1,500, with no formal exam required. In the first method, the Law Society is as much as saying that it does not recognize the standards of other provinces. In the second method, what is it saying?

Recognition of graduates by the Law Society from the Faculty of Law (recognized elsewhere in Canada) seems the simplest escape from this dilemma. The alternative is Government action.

There are indications that many Ontario law students and lawyers agree with the principle of academic freedom in legal education. Demonstrations of public opinion have resulted before in reversals of the Benchers' stand. Perhaps they could do it again.

The Darker Corners

This is the Nth in a series of articles appearing spasmodically and on various subjects by Max Parsons.

By MAX PARSONS

A ray of light has been cast into one of the darker corners of my mind. It's only a ray mind you — but it's a particularly dark corner.

It must be four years now since I first began to worry about modern art. It has never been a serious worry, like where-will-next-week's-rent-money-come-from, or shall-I-get-up-this-morning-or-just-stay-in-bed-and-to-hell-with-it-all. I recall the incident rather clearly. I was in Paris, and got caught in a thunderstorm. The first handy building happened to be the art gallery familiarly known as the Luxembourg. It was hours before I got out.

The main attraction of course was the collection. But perhaps more interesting for the impressionable young layman was an explanation (in impeccable French) of the development of French painting over the past fifty or sixty years. It was lavishly illustrated. And it made some kind of sense. I think it was for the first time that day that I looked at modern art with something more than an emotional, and jaundiced, eye.

My hotel bill became embarrassing soon after that and I had to leave Paris in a bit of a hurry. So I never did get a chance to pursue the subject of modern art. But I have noticed glimmers of interest as I flipped through Life magazine and similar cultural publications these past few years, and I kept promising myself that something would be done about it.

Something has been done. But I didn't do it. It's all a result of the Hart House Art Committee, a group with surprising vitality (and perhaps an over-active thyroid), who have undertaken to supply some help to the man lost in the confusion of symbols and abstractions which go under the vague and general title of "modern art".

They have arranged an exhibit of prints which outlines in fairly simple terms some of the trends and developments in modern painting. It too is lavishly illustrated — not with originals, but with excellent prints. The text, complete and sometimes incomplete, but always provocative, is extensive—and should allow you to get at least a glimmer into the subject. The arrangement of prints and of text has been carefully planned. It's worth a couple of hours of your time.

Dave Garner who holds down the post of assistant to Warden Ignatieff, seems to have been one of the main movers behind the current modern art splash in the Print Room (which is that long hole off the end of the Art Gallery). "We have tried to be objective," he says. And they have. The text is Dave's, and took about a month, he tells me.

"I noticed," he says, "that undergraduates in the Art Gallery were often stymied by what we put up on the walls. It was just so much paint to them. So we thought we'd try pointing out some paths in the obstract jungle." Thoughs of this nature led to a print show designed to show some examples of impressionism, something else (which I forget), and has culminated in the present show.

The demands made on modern man are extensive. Or have you tried working your way through Joyce's Finnegan's Wake? Or listening to Density 21.5 by Varese? Things like that can be most confusing. For those who are interested in modern painting, which can often be just as confusing as a Joyce or a Varese, the Art Committee's current show provides an excellent introduction and review.

One young man of my acquaintance, who could never be accused of being intellectual (in any one of the many senses in which that poor word is bandied about) is intrigued by the show. He's taking it easy — a couple of pages of text a day. You may find it like that too: a little too much to swallow at once. But it's worth taking a crack at. Light in the dark corners of the mind is painful, but worth the effort.

Colombo Plan Reconsidered

Editor, The Varsity:

I have read the letter of Messrs. Butt and Mohammed. May I say the report on my speech before the International Relations Club was a complete misrepresentation of my point of view. Had they been present I do not believe they would have been disturbed by anything I said. This could be verified by discussion with any member of the club who was present at the discussion. I can understand their feeling of dismay at reading the report, since I felt very much the same on reading it myself.

Ali Tayyeb,
Grad Studies.

(Ed. note — In his letter, Mr. Tayyeb refers to complaints about a speech of his report in The Varsity of Feb. 13, and headlined "Tayyeb Blasts Colombo Plan."

In an interview yesterday, Mr. Tayyeb explained he had said the Colombo Plan would be more valuable if both the students who come over to Canada, and their teachers, knew in detail what was to be studied. He had received the impression, he said, that in many cases the students were not certain what to expect when they came here, and were confused when they did arrive. This lack of detailed planning was due to over-zealousness on the part of both East and West to implement the Plan, he said he had added.

He had used Colombo Plan students at the Ontario College of education and Parliament Buildings as an example of this need of more detail in planning, he said, but had never said that students studying there "never learn anything valuable." He also said yesterday that he did not say there were no technical advances in India, as reported.

He also stated he had told the meeting that he thought the Colombo Plan "the most worthwhile experiment in international co-operation tried by either East or West, but that it could still use some improvement.")

The Chairman,
The CBC,
Ottawa, Ont.
Dear Sir:

I am surprised that our efforts to reform time signal operation on the CBC have evoked a storm of protest from R. W. Shepherd. In fairness to the people who pay $2.50 per year for the opportunity of listening to twenty-six short dashes and ten seconds silence that signify 1:00 p.m. the whole vicious system should be examined.

And having passed the recent basic English test published in the Pink Tely I feel qualified to speak.

Anyone who is lucky enough to eat lunch these days faces the table with a dread in his stomach. (This is doubly so if he eats the lunch at HH.) The dread is occasioned by the knowledge that before he finishes his repast his mind will be assaulted by a series of short sharp blips.

Now there are two alternatives. First he can try to ignore the blips. But this is rather dangerous because they constitute a distraction which may well cause of forkfull of peas to land on a lap. Or secondly he can resign himself to listening to the blips.

Now here is the insidious part of R. W. Shepherds campaign to keep our way of life. It is a known psychological fact, proven by recent tests of students in pass English, that once a listener is apprised of how many blips there are, he becomes obsessed with the idea of counting them, EVERY DAY.

The listener try as he may cannot be dragged from his set until he is quite certain that there have been twenty six blips.

I don't think I need go into the psychological trauma attendant on the listeners trying to decide the beginning of the ten second bleep with his own vocalization of same.

Surely, Mr. CBC, there is some way of relieving distraught listeners from this bondage. Could we not substitute two gay, vivacious, tuneful jingling commercials for these dull, maddening blips.

Could we not get something more distinctive, more akin to the Canadian way of life than these a/m dull maddening blips?

For example, how about having Mr. Canuck-Houde grind dry Maple Leaves under his heel on each second from fifteen seconds on?

Or how about an Alberta beaver resoundingly striking one of the prairie lakes with his tail or the wall of a Bay Street wolf when "Last call" sounded.

No, Shirley, we don't aim to change our [illegible] of life. We mean merely to make it fuller—more Canadian.

Humanities, Science Share Obligations —President Smith

"Religion, with literature, art and philosophy, aided and abetted by the sciences, can provide the cement wherewith to repair the walls of a badly shaken civilization," President Sidney Smith said in an address on the "Unity of Knowledge: The Sciences and the Humanities" delivered to the Royal Canadian Institute Saturday night.

The problems facing humanity today cannot be solved by science alone, Dr. Smith said, nor can the responsibility for them be laid at the door of the scientist alone. The solution lies in the equal sharing of responsibility, and the recognition of the necessity of applying the Law of Men as well as the Law of Things to the problem, he added.

Dr. Smith pointed out that in the past 100 years, science has increased our power over the forces of nature to an unimaginable extent, yet we have twice lived through the "waste and horror" of war. "A network of communication encircles the world, and men and nations can converse like neighbours on a street; yet we are witnessing an upsurge of nationalisms, of separation and divisiveness, of mistrust and fear, that threatens to engulf us in another war." Dr. Smith concluded from this that it is evident that man's control over the forces of nature has outstripped his control over himself, his ambitions, his greed and his conceit.

Dr. Smith said that, when in India, he repeatedly heard intelligent Indians express their anxiety about the impact on their country of the materialism of the West. They do not admire our anxious and eager pursuit of comfort, wealth and power, he said, and while the Westerner is inclined to dispute the unqualified accusation of materialism, the "charge has the sting of truth."

"In the Mechanical Bride," Professor McLuhan of St. Michael's College has "exposed the shoddy sentiment and the distorted values that are unthinkingly embraced by the majority of our fellow-citizens, and which, perhaps, influence the loves of educated people more than we care to admit", Dr. Smith said.

The fault lies in ourselves, not in the stars, Dr. Smith said. Referring to the well publicized English tests at the University, Dr. Smith expressed the hope that the citizens of the Dominion of Canada, "repeat: Dominion", can, in general, express themselves in "the new Queen's English."

"I do not believe that there is one type of mind which is purely scientific and another that is purely humanistic, and that never the twain shall meet", Dr. Smith said. The distinction is not between two types of mind, but between two ways in which each person's mind should be used, depending on the subject matter he is considering, he added.

Any good scientist, Dr. Smith said, can look at the broad objectives of humanity, and relate his life and work to those ends which he judges to be desirable. As a citizen he can do his part to influence the politics and education of his country in the direction of the best, but he will find that the fundamental truths about man's existence and aspirations are not susceptible of proof, in the same way that a theorem can be proved, Dr. Smith declared.

The most pressing problem of higher education is the integration of the sciences and the humanities, Dr. Smith said. He gave a tribute to the staffs of scientific departments and the teachers in professional schools for "the vigor and spirit with which they have discharged their obligations, so that their offerings, on the whole, became more attractive to young, inquiring and venturesome minds than many of the Arts courses, which retained the content, and were given in the manner of the nineteenth century."

It is to be regretted, Dr. Smith added, that the teachers in the humanities "have not always manifested the contagious joy in their classes to be found in other divisions of our universities.

Dr. Smith added that it is encouraging that the profeessors are realizing anew what they have to offer is a complement for the theories and discoveries of science, which when integrated and unified could provide solutions for the grave and momentous problems of mankind.

Blues Edge U of M To Keep Hopes Alive

By BARRY THOMAS

On the strength of an overtime goal by rookie Jim Wilkes, the Varsity Blues managed to edge the Montreal Carabins 5-4 Friday night, and thus keep their championship hopes alive. It was an uphill struggle most of the way for the Blues who in the first two periods were sadly outplayed by the fast skating Montrealers.

The Blues have three games left in the regular schedule, two against McGill, and one against the Carabins this Saturday at Verdun. They must beat the league leading Carabins and gain at least one win and a tie against McGill.

Montreal started the game like a house on fire and had a two goal advantage over the inept Blues before the game was two minutes old. Both teams then added one goal each to give the visitors a 3-1 lead going into the second period. John Adams brought the Blues a bit closer in the second period when he fought out from the corner to blast a high back-hander past Montreal goalie Marcel Auger. With the teams playing five aside Jean Bruneau quickly gave the Carabins a two goal advantage again when he scored 45 seconds after Adams' goal.

The third period was all Varsity. The Blues pressed from the first whistle and finally at the 9.40 mark Jack McKenzie, who had just returned to the ice after serving a misconduct penalty, fired a sizzling fifteen foot shot into the Montreal cage to make the score 4-3. Twenty seconds later veteran Phil Arrowsmith tied up the game when he speared the puck into the visitors' net after a hectic goal-mouth pile-up. The Carabins protested loudly but to no avail, with the result that from then on, they lost much of the spirit and drive that they displayed earlier in the game.

Shirley Bratt, III OT, and Joan Curtis, III OT, were only two of the co-eds in Physical and Occupational Therapy who made like Betsy Ross to create a University flag for the Students' Administrative Council. This is the first University flag that the SAC has owned. It was taken to Rochester over the weekend by the Hart House Glee Club.

Hart House Seats Contested March 5

Sixteen of the forty seats on the Hart House committees have been filled by acclamation and as a result only the House, Music, and Art Committees will be contested on March 5th.

Of the five committees which are elected by the individual club members, the Camera and Glee Club committees have enough nominations to provide a contest for the committee seats, the Squash Racquets Committee had four nominations for five seats, and only three of the four Amateur Radio committee seats have been filled.

Fourteen undergrads are competing for the eight House Committee seats. They are J. Langford, II Vic; E. Caviller, II Meds; J. Dagg, II Vic; G. Marshall, I Dents; J. Lee, II UC; A. Molozzi, III SPS; J. Hassard, III Pharm.; A. Pathy, I SPS; J. Carnahan, II SPS; A. McMullan, I SPS; J. Dunlop I Law; T. McCann, II SPS; J. Gree, I St. Mike's; R. Johnstone, I Trin. The House Committee re-elected M. Fraser, III SPS, and D. MacKenzie, II Meds.

The following members of Hart House were elected by acclamation for the Library Committee: J. Mollins, II Vic; W. Baldwin, III UC; T. J. Scanlon, I UC; D. Trent, I Trin; B. Mandel, I UC; P. Banks, II SPS; R. Clee, II UC; K Towsley, I Trin. The present Library Committee re-elected F. Clark, II SPS, to sit on next year's committee.

Nine students are competing for the eight seats on the Music Committee. They are: J. Hall, II Meds; R. Bell, II Gen. Music; R. Thompson, III SPS; G. Steele, IV Wycliffe; W. Armstrong, I SPS; W. Deeks, I SPS; J. Lowes, III Vic; M. Schultz, II SPS; R. Hooey, II Trin.; R. Perry, I UC and W. Bartlett, I Vic, were re-elected.

The Debate Committee has been filled by acclamation: A. Brown, III UC; H. Krever, I Law; D. Gauthier, II UC; N. Taylor, I UC; R. Bull, II UC; J. Louden, I Meds; E. Sopha, II Law; H. Symons, I Trin; D. Fulford, III Trin, and R. Shepherd, III Meds, were re-elected.

There are 12 nominations for the eight seats on the Art Committee: W. Kay, III UC; R. Widdicombe, III UC; E. Gibson, II Meds; D. Michel, III UC; W. Subash, I SPS; R. Bateman, II Vic; J. Lister, I Meds; J. Leith, III Vic; P. Dinovo, II SPS; F. Fischel, III Arch; K. Freedy, I Trin; T. Briant, I Meds, and Joe Kemenicek, IV Arch, were re-elected.

The Camera Club, Squash Racquets, Chess, Amateur Radio, and Glee Club Committees are elected by their own membership and not by the House as a whole.

Mac 'Muse' To Continue

The Muse, McMaster's 61-year-old literary magazine will make an appearance next year decided a student meeting over in Hamilton. However the ancient work will change its form for its return. The stories will be excerpts from special literary issues of The Silhouette McMaster's weekly newspaper.

An attempt to discontinue The Muse was made at a student meeting held late in January. Two students, Stan Wooten and Walter Bightman moved that it be discontinued but their motion was defeated 112-88 at a student meeting attended by 200 students, 50 more than the quorum requires.

Even Split

Toronto debaters gained an even split in their recent tour. They lost to Queen's and McGill but defeated Montreal and Carleton College (Ottawa). In their tour the debaters opposed the motion "Resolved that this house deplores United States World Leadership".

The travelling talkers, John Medcoff, IV UC, and Jim Jerome, I St. Mike's, thrown in jail while in Montreal, are representing Varsity on the debating tour with the Eastern Canadian Colleges. This is just one of the tours that Toronto students are making this year.

The closest thing that the University of Toronto has to an ivory tower is the tower in the Great Hall of Hart House. When Hart House was built it was noticed that the undergraduates and the graduates would be eating separately. To remedy this situation a tower was built in one corner of the Great Hall down which the faculty could troop after finishing their meals. The tower is used by the barbershop quartets who dress in the grads dining room and then wind their way down to the stage in the Great Hall.

FIVE FLOORS

For Men Only

By JERRY BROWN

A majestic, gray building in the perpendicular Gothic style, a world famous structure steeped in tradition, is Hart House.

Its purpose is to advance the knowledge of music, the arts and letters, and to encourage "suppleness of limb" among undergraduates.

It is easily recognized by the chimneys stacked in banks of four. Most of the drafty corridors and pleasant rooms are familiar to male undergraduates and to a few female undergraduates. But there are many things about this place that would take one person years to find out. Only three of the five floors of Hart House are used and known to the average undergrad.

Suppose we take a tour of Hart House with Dave Gardner, assistant to the Warden. He suggests starting in the sub-basement under the kitchen. Down in this musty black cellar are housed the filtration plant for the pool, storage rooms for food and the back entrance to the Theatre rehearsal room. Adjoining the rehearsal room are two small dust-covered closets with old, old stage props from former productions.

Up now through the kitchen, where over one million meals are prepared every year. Immaculately clad chefs work with modern equipment. There are now six walk-in freezers where, we are assured, bodies of students who didn't wear a tie and jacket to the Great Hall are not kept.

The Great Hall with its almost Church-like Gothic architecture is one of the most fascinating places in Hart House. On the north and south walls are the coats of arms of Universities, of the First World War, and of the Allied Nations. In this ultra-distinguished hall are held Sunday evening concerts and dances. And, of course, it is the eating Mecca for a number of males on the campus. The two strange towers, one in the south-west corner in the Great Hall and one in the north-west corner outside the Great Hall, both lead up to the faculty dining room.

Up these cramped stairs, glancing out of the small apertures we are led by Gardner, to the faculty lounge and thence to the dining room. Windows of this dining room look out on the Great Hall allowing the professors a view of the eating masses.

Ascending more stairs to the third floor, actually the fifth, where there is another lounge, this for the faculty and graduates. Very tastefully furnished, this lounge approaches the perfect in restful atmospheres.

One of the least known parts of the House is next on the tour. The guest rooms of Hart House are on the third floor over the Debates Room and the Faculty Billiard Room. These very exclusive guest rooms are for the use of distinguished guests and important visitors. One of the more interesting of these rooms is one called The French Canadian room, so-called because of its furniture and history.

Architecturally interesting and intellectually stimulating, Hart House will always remain something out of the usual for students on the campus. This is only one part of a Hart House tour.

Debaters Triumph In USA

A Varsity debating team beat American College three times and was defeated once during a tour of US universities last week. The U of T team consisting of R. W. Shepherd, III Meds, and Ann McGinn, III St. Mike's, opposed the motion "That this House deplores American leadership in world affairs" at Wayne, U of Michigan, Michigan State, Notre Dame and the University of Chocago.

"The only place where the motion was upheld was in Michigan State, where three political Science professors were the judges," said Shepherd, yesterday. At some of the other universities "shift of opinion" cards were used to declare the winners. This scheme consists of the audience members recording their stand on the question at the beginning of the debate and again at the end of the debate. The opinion is marked in degrees such as, violently opposed, moderately opposed, etc., on to violently for the question. The winning team is the one which causes the greatest degree of shift of opinion.

Americans entertained the Canadian team lavishly during the tour. At one time Shepherd had his dinner surrounded by 65 sorority members. "Of course, most of my thoughts were of my wife and child at home", said the third year medical student. "However", he added, "American generosity made it possible for me to return to the UTDU some of the expense money which was given to me."

Organization was the most impressive thing on the American campi", Shepherd said. "I had the feeling, on looking at lecture notices with complete instructions to books and pages of the books to be read for preparation, that the students did not require to dig out many of the facts on their own."

Debating is part of the curriculum, and with radio, television and stage is incorporated into a department of speech at many of the American schools. Debating teams, with faculty coaches tour the country.

This tour was the second of this year's UTDU activities. On the first tour, to eastern American universities, U of T was represented by John Morden, Wycliffe and Dwight Fulford, III Trinity.

The last eight supporters of the Blue and White Band take their way through "three blind mice" at Saturday's hockey game. A corporals guard have been pleasing the crowd at the games with the personal touch in their music. Thursday night this week the Band is celebrating at the Embassy with their annual party. They will make their final appearance of the year at the hockey Blues last game, providing of course, Varsity is still in the running then. Band members have travelled over a thousand miles this season including a trip to Michigan to see the famous band there and learn something new for next year.

M. Gagnon C'est ce Soir Qu'il Parlera

By SALLY HOGG

A friendly French-Canadian who believes in better relations between French and English Canada is this year's Gray Lecturer. The Hon. Onesime Gagnon, Quebec Provincial Treasurer, will speak on "Cultural Developments in the Province of Quebec—Minorities' Rights and Privileges under the Education System" to night at 8:15 in Convocation Hall.

Gagnon became interested in bettering inter-Canada relationships because he feels that Canada is an "unknown country". "The residents of Canada do not know each other," he says. "Each racial group is completely ignorant of the other's traditions. Ontarians know that Quebec exists, but they don't know its history. As a result people are sometimes influenced by prejudice. When we meet, we come to appreciate each other's respective qualities."

Gagnon has done much to further his ideal of better relationships through better understanding. He has been active in the Visites Interprovinciales since 1945, and helped to get the Quebec government to make a yearly grant of $3,000. These he considers to be a very worthwhile approach to the problem. He points with pride to the fact that last year, and for the past several years, at least 600 students have been on exchange visits.

"The two great races can make a larger contribution to the development and welfare of our country," Gagnon feels. Canada's two languages and cultures should be known to everybody. As a young man he borrowed money to study at Oxford for a year. All his children have studied in England, English-speaking Canada, or the United States, and his eldest daughter, Renee, was an official in Visites Interprovinciales until her recent marriage.

There has been much progress in relationships in the past 30 years, Gagnon says. The universities are doing much to bring the races together. Exchanges of professors and student weekends are very valuable.

Gagnon was a lecturer in law at Laval before he became a provincial minister.

The Duncan and John Gray Memorial Lecture was founded by George Gray in memory of his two sons, to promote their ideal of a united Canada. John Gray visited Quebec on a Visite Interprovinciale in 1940, and was so impressed with the kindness shown him that he decided to devote his life to bringing about better understanding between French and English Canadians. When he died on active service during World War II, his father established this foundation, which is used each year to bring a distinguished French-Canadian to give a talk on French Canada.

The last Gray Lecture was given by the Right Honorable Thibeau Renfret, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

All-Skule Finals For Debate Cup Begin In March

The annual trials for the Segsworth Trophy (rhymes with dreg's worth), emblematic of Skule debating supremacy, will be held in the first week of March, announced Geoff Hyde, Debating Club chairman. "One team of two will be chosen to represent each of the four years by competitive trial by honest engineering methods, that is," he said.

These will engage in a "talk-off", first year vs. second, and third year vs. fourth. The all-Skule final between the Junior SPS team and the Senior Skule team will be for individual beer mugs for each contestant on the winning team.

All Skulemen who wish to enter must sign the list on the Engineering Society bulletin boards. Entry list closes on Thursday, February 28. The trials start immediately after that.

Engineers Elect Cooper President 55 Per Cent Vote

The Engineering Society elections were "fairly successful," according to president Doug Sherk. Sherk said yesterday that 55 per cent of the Skulemen voted, with 80 per cent of the third year turned out to vote.

The new president of the Engineering Society will be W. J. Cooper. Mike Spence and P. J. Dalton are the new 1st and 2nd vice-presidents. The treasurer for 52-53 will be D. J. Fredenburg. There was no nomination for secretary.

E. Kurchak and J. F. Mollenhauer will sit on next year's Students' Administrative Council as fourth and third year SAC reps. The Director of Professional Relations will be W. L. Angus.

So far there have been no nominations for External Affairs representative nor for Debating Society chairman.

J. B. Blanshard was elected chairman of the Civil Club and W. O. Johnson will be the chairman of the Engineering and Business Club. All other club chairmen were elected by acclamation.

C. W. Kirkpatrick was elected president of 5T3, W. C. Moore of 5T4, and J. A. Montgomery of 5T5.

Alec Lawson was awarded a special bronze "S" for athletics. The Gilley Trophy for the outstanding freshman athlete went to B. Kimoff.

Next year's Engineering Athletic Association will have G. H. Greenly as president, G. W. Shipley, vice-president, and J. R. Prendergast as treasurer.

J. N. Raftis will be the 5T3 representative on the Athletic Association and P. C. DiNovo will represent 5T4. There was no nomination from the class of 5T5.

The director of publicity and publications and the editor of Toike Oike will be appointed in March.

Candidate Editors In Varsity Election

Ian Montagnes, III Arts, and Harold Nelson, II Arts, are candidates for Editor-in-chief in The Varsity staff elections to be held Tuesday, 1 p m. in West Hall, University College.

"These elections are held to give an indication of staff opinion" said present Editor-in-chief Barbara Browne. In addition she sends her recommendations to the Publication Commission of the Students' Administrative Council (SAC).

Applications for editorship must be made to the SAC office, in University College by noon today. These applications are considered by the Publications Commission which makes its recommendation to the SAC after they have interviewed and considered the applicants as well as the recommendations of the present editor. The Editor-in-chief is appointed by the Students' Council. The remainder of the masthead are appointed by the new editor and ratified by the Students' Council.

Montagnes, at present News Editor, has been a member of the staff for three years. Last year he held the position of Assistant News Editor.

Nelson, also in his third year on The Varsity was Anniversary Issue Editor last year, a former writer for Ajax rumblings, and at present Assistant News Editor

Both are former Press News (radio division of Canadian Press) staffers.

Both wear berets and sing An Ilka Moor Bartaht.

HART HOUSE THEATRE'S TWENTY-SECOND ALL-VARSITY PRODUCTION

WORLD-PREMIERE

Socrates By Jupiter

It is not often that one has the chance to witness the world-premiere of a play. But having attended one such last Friday night when the Jupiter Theatre presented Lister Sinclair's SOCRATES, I feel that I can say with some confidence that world-premieres are exciting and thrilling. Never have I been part of an audience that gave such undivided attention to a talky and repetitious play. Twice during the performance — at the end of Socrates' apology to the assembly, and after his dying speech — there were pauses when the audience by common consent refrained from interrupting, and the whole Museum Theatre was filled with an hypnotic electric silence.

The considerable talk afterwards on the merits and demerits of the play and performance was heated, and in consequence I feel that in order to deal adequately with the play itself I must dwell on it in detail later this week.

At the moment it is more to the point to say that where Socrates was given a quick death instead of justice by the Athenian magistrates, director Esse Ljungh and the actors gave more than justice to Mr. Sinclair's play. It was treated with respect (in some cases with love), without which it might have failed utterly to make contact with the audience.

The settings by Larry McCance were effectively executed; they suggested the scene without going into detail, and more important still, they made an impossibly small stage seem spacious and deep. Mr. McCance by a more advantageous use of the back wall, might have suggested the sudden illumination of dawn as Socrates dies, or the conspiracy spinning in the dark in Act II.

Mr. Ljungh must be congratulated. Technically the play moved accurately from scene to scene; the pace was always right, and with the exception of the scene between Socrates and the soldiers, the mood that belonged to each grouping of characters was well established and conveyed to the audience. The exception emphasized a general first-night groping for lines; each of the soldiers acted within the radius of his body, playing their funny lines strictly for laughs and quite oblivious to the fact that they were getting a lesson in philosophy. One might quibble too over the chorus-line of Socrates' friends telling him about the oracle. When a fore-stage has been added, why not use it?

The first scene was the weakest in the show, and what saved Act I was the scene with the magistrates. They all made the most of their lines, showed the uncertainty of authority, and thus the need for "expediency". Colin Eaton as Phillip tended to listen to the sound of his voice, as to a lesser degree did John Atkinson (Triptolemus). Alex McKee as Cyrus was more positive, which was in keeping with his part. This Greek Macchievelli developed here and in the trial an argument that, as presented, was more logical and intelligent than that put forward by Socrates.

These magistrates acted as a group and focussed within themselves the baseness of the accusers, and the saintliness of Socrates. Murray Westgate, the accuser Lycon, was monotonous and lacked that smouldering vitality that flared up so well in his fellow accuser Meletus (Doug Haskins). Robert Christie, the Judas, Anytus, was powerfully subdued and he made as much of the part as there was in the lines.

Socrates' friends were all well individualized, and the mood of sincere friendship that they created at "Agathon's (David Garner) dinner was superb. Crito (Donald Glen) in his speech to Love captured the essence of the scene. I couldn't hear all the words, but the feeling he conveyed was profound, delicate and seemed to envelop the whole group in a bond of love. This feeling was exemplified by all the others in their own way — Agathon in his generosity of feeling, Aristophanes (Paul Kligman) in his rich humour, and Phaedo (Ivan Thornley-Hall) in his youthful unselfishness. The feeling carried over to make the last scene agonizingly beautiful. Christopher Plummer as Alcibiades, the noble impetuous rake was also part of this group, and his performance was colourful and attractive.

Frank Peddie playing Socrates was the stand-out of the play. He outdid even my expectations, and I have known him all my life. I would have liked his Socrates to be as mocking with his eyes as with his smile; he might have been, then, more directly challenging. But Mr. Peddie brought together the various elements of the play and the personalities of the other actors. Socrates' warmth of feeling, keenness of mind and moral strength in the production obviated the playwright's slanting of the argument in Socrates' favour. Mr. Sinclair did not foresee that an actor could overbalance his side of the scales of justice.

The last scene — the death by hemlock — was by far the most moving. With the friends gathered around, Socrates' death as portrayed by Mr. Peddie fulfilled all the qualities that Plato and Sinclair claimed for the philosopher.

David Peddie.

By DAVID PEDDIE

In his production of Shakespeare's RICHARD II Robert Gill has proven again that he is a master at the art of spectacle, and that with a reasonably good cast, he can provide vitality and purpose to bolster Shakespeare's presentation of history in human terms.

Many hold that RICHARD II is the best of the histories, and certainly there are many facts and facets to this play. But I for one lost interest in much of the historical detail, for I see Shakespeare changing his mind in the middle of the play: he himself forgets the facts to give us an account of "despair" — despair as felt by a man pulled down from high position. This despair makes Richard lose his wits — not completely, but he is distraught, and as acted by George McCowan, Richard's madness makes us sympathize more for the man, who as a king was foolish, petty and unjust.

Because of this change of emphasis, many of the scenes seemed to me unnecessary. I imagine Mr. Gill has to please the co-eds, but the scene with the Duchess of Gloucester, the one with the gardeners and another between the Duke and Duchess of York were irrelevant. The first scene also was too long just to hear two men cursing each other.

Shakespeare's verse in RICHARD II is far from being good or easy to speak. There are many awkward rhyming couplets; most of the lines are bouncy and unnatural, and some of the archaic figures of speech present difficulties to the actors — parallel sentences without end and involved parentheses.

McGill overcame the diffuseness of the play and many minor difficulties by his superior staging. The set designed by Jean Bannihr was revolutionary — modern Elizabethan. It suggested a castle when fully lit, but it was also used in sections by means of very clever lighting. The scene of Richard's assassination with the shadow cast by the prison window showed this to best advantage. The lighting was exceptional. Each scene unfolded like a new day, the light slowly drifting across the castle.

Adding to these mechanics were new costumes, designed by Marion Walker of the theatre staff, which gave colour to the production and seemed on all points to be just right—suiting both period and individual characters. This technical flawlessness showed up the deficiencies of many of the actors but it made Shakespeare's artificial portrayal of history believable. The scene in which Bolingbroke grasps the crown was human history that flowed easily and naturally, each of the characters coming forward and retiring as required, and the whole scene built up steadily to Richard's heart-rending "Whither you will, so I were from your sight".

There was a general competence among the actors that is not often present in Hart House productions. Among the smaller parts, Mowbray, The Bishop of Carlisle and Bushy stood out as definite characters, who were more than chess-men in a pagent. Rosemary Sowby, though not always audible, was a gracious queen, and in her farewell to Richard she touched our hearts.

Frank Lalor and Robert Jackson gave clever portrayals as the Dukes of Northumberland and York. Mr. Lalor was the clever hard politician, yet his weakening before the queen was excellently conceived. Mr. Jackson suggested the impotence of old York and the dilemma facing a man who tries to do both his legal and his moral duty.

Henry Jackman's Bolingbroke was wrongly characterized. Mr. Jackman was wonderfully war-like — a proud, fiery, spirited, rather vengeful man. But there seems more evidence to support the view that this usurper was cold and ruthless in his revenge on "cousin" Richard. His rages and protestations of honour should be a sham, and in the final scene we would not believe a word Bolingbroke says. Mr. Jackman on the other hand compelled us to believe in his innocence.

Ronald Williams as John of Gaunt had a quiet dignity and a good voice, but he could not always be heard and his "this England" speech was a recitation rather than a prophecy. All those gems and semi-paradises Gaunt sees decaying and therefore painful to think about.

As for Mr. McCowan's Richard II, seldom has so consistent a performance been seen in Hart House. His voice, gesture, stance and movement, all were stamped king and mad-man at once. He set a standard in speaking the verse which the others tried at least to emulate. And his interpretation was positive and carefully carried through.

Until the return of Richard from Ireland, he is despicable yet stubbornly royal. From then until his death Mr. McCowan's Richard slowly built up the impression of the despair caused by his failure as a king and the greatness of a man who is successfully a king in spirit. It was a clever and an intense performance that deserves great credit.

Two Operas Draw Top Hats

THE BARTERED BRIDE

Amid a flurry of dress suits, and even a few silk hats, another Toronto Opera Festival got underway over the weekend at the Royal Alexandra. For their opening performance, the Royal Conservatory Opera did an almost entirely new production of the same opera with which they first shocked Toronto audiences into recognition early in 1947, Smetana's The Bartered Bride.

The looks of stunned amazement that greeted the 1947 production have passed off, and the company must now stand on its merits. This year's production will bear comparison with their very best, and with the best anywhere. It caught both the fire and the wistfulness of Smetana's wonderfully fresh music and translated them into stage movement and color in the most brilliant way.

Contributing more than any single actor to the total effect were the orchestra and chorus, with the conductor, Nicholas Goldschmidt. They needed a short warming-up period, but after the first act the performance was simply superb. I could hardly imagine more vivid singing and playing.

The central role of the marriage-broker, Kezal, was taken by Jan Rubes. His great height and powerful voice, as well as his beautiful vulgar costume saw to it that he was the centre of every scene in which he appeared. His tendency slightly to overact the coarsely comic element in the part may be attributed to his difficulty in making himself understood, for he still has a decided Czech accent.

As usual with this company, the smaller parts were, in general, given to singers of no smaller merit than the principals. I was particularly impressed with the parents of the lovers, each of whom became a clearly-defined character in voice, costume and action. They were played by Donald Garrard, Louise Roy, James Milligan, and Nora Conklin—every one of them an artist in his own right.

The performance of Elizabeth Benson Guy as the heroine, Marie, was a little disappointing. It is two years since she appeared in opera, and the power of her voice, so evident when she sang Donna Elvira in Don Giovanni at that time, was quite lacking on Thursday evening. The conductor held the orchestra to a minimum during her songs, and yet she still failed to make herself heard. Her acting is as appealing as ever, however, and her quick smile endeared her to the audience.

The infectious gaiety of the opera and its production provided a rousing beginning for the opera festival. And even an opera-hardened Toronto audience was once again entranced by a comic opera performed in the best comic style.

THE MAGIC FLUTE

The Magic Flute, on the other hand, is a very different matter. The scene of The Bartered Bride is Bohemia, a geographic and ethnic entity; the scene of The Magic Flute is the Orient, a vast region of the mind as far as this opera is concerned. Not since the performance of Gluck's Orpheus in 1948 has the Conservatory Opera attempted anything as profound.

The success of any such venture is bound to be conditioned by the receptivity of the listener. I knew I was going to be impressed, and I was. What was more interesting to me was that the members of a large delegation from a girls school who sat behind me, were also quite clearly impressed. No fear of discipline can impose on girls the silence these maintained in the Fire and Water scene, or at the magic moment when the temple door first opens.

Once again, the chief credit for a first-rate musical performance goes to the conductor, Nicholas Goldschmidt. He had his troubles on occasion with the orchestra, and once was forced to shush a too-eager member of the chorus, but he produced a performance that cohered. Given his playing of the great contrapunal overture, one could deduce his attitude towards the score, and find that he never deviated from his announced intention.

For instance, though he refused steadfastly to linger on phrases, yet he was not afraid of pausing very deliverately sometimes to let a point sink in. The result was a performance of great breadth without a trace of sentimentality. The Fire and Water scene, particularly, became the fateful thing it should be, with a steady, inexorable rhythmic drive.

On the stage, the opera suffered somewhat from a weak Sarastro. Although Russell Skitch is a fine musican, he has not got the depth of voice necessary for the part, either in singing or in speaking. Without his domination, some scenes lost their meaning. However, at the very end, his brief and glorious utterance had all the requisite power and solemnity. (I was told that his intonation on the low notes, sometimes shaky on Friday evening, was much improved on Saturday.)

Among the others, there is hardly room for choice. Mary Morrison surprised me with the intensity of her Pamina; she has come a long way since last year. As might be expected, Lois Marshall's ringing voice made her a dramatic Queen of the Night, despite the fact that she was not at her very best Friday evening, and also had some trouble with intonation.

Among the smaller parts, Donald Garrard once again gave an outstanding performance, this time as the high priest who first meets Tamino. Ernest Adams as the Moor, Monostatos, surprised me by his excellent singing of the tenor role, in spite of the fact that his voice is usually a baritone.

Andrew MacMillan, who has for many years been the clown of the company, gave me a special pleasure as the child-like Papageno. He played the part in the Harlequin tradition, addressing the audience with such good-humor that no one felt embarrassed.

Settings for this opera present very great difficulty. The highly impractical sequence of short scenes in various strange localities makes simple, easily-moved sets a necessity; yet they must be colorful and very exotic.

The solution was a set of backdrops that reminded me of a scien-fiction addict's idea of Martian scenery. The complete avoidance of any resemblance to nature has its advantages. The chief defect, a rather serious one, was the use of the opening backdrops for a later scene in an entirely different situation. Also, the setting for the Fire and Water scene, excellent in other respects, tended to muffle the chorus of triumph at its close.

I was also disappointed by the fact that the duet of the two priests was cut. This little piece, which breathes the spirit of the opera takes only about one minute in performance. I thought the audience was cheated of a real delight when this number was cut.

It is not difficult to picture to oneself a perfect performance of The Bartered Bride, and the Opera Festival performance of this opera approached this ideal. A perfect performance of The Magic Flute is almost impossible to imagine; there are too many inherent difficulties in the work, and each performance is likely to be different from every other.

In its own way, the Opera Festival production of The Magic Flute attains a real perfection of its own. It is self-sufficient, and without reference to the outer world, it achieves satisfaction of a very intimate kind.

Christopher Helleiner.

Prize Photographs Of High Calibre

The exhibition of photographs by the members of Hart House is the result of many hours over various trays with chemical solutions and a careful judging by the members of various Camera Clubs.

All the photographs shown are of a high technical calibre, although some suffer by over-enlargement.

Most of the prints are compositionally satisfactory.

Some received prizes, some honourable mention.

It is impossible to fail to note that all the prize-winning prints are highly pictorial to the extent of being a little obvious in their appeal. It is disappointing to be forced to realize that the photo-fans are so easily swayed by the first and only impact a picture of this sort can give.

For simplification, it is possible to classify roughly all photographs into three groups; representation of appearance; capturing of a combination of events, and finally the revelation of some inherent spatio-visual truths. Each of these groups, combined with the rudiments of composition through selection of the significant and with the tricks under the enlarger, can produce aesthetically satisfactory results. But if photography is placed on the same level with other pictorial art, it must contain at least some revelation of the less obvious. Art does not exist without sharp observation and insight of the artist. A photograph, like a painting, must state something which enriches the spectator's visual (and preferably also some other) experience. Like a novel, it must not repeat the same old story, even if a new form gives it a more appealing appearance. If these conditions are not satisfied, we are dealing with the craft, rather than art, of photography.

These questions arise: is photography to be judged by photo-craftsmen, or like other art, by aesthetically-minded connoisseurs? Do camera clubs contribute to the art of photography or, in other words, do they care about photography which is just a different medium of artistic expression and not only a good craftsman's achievement?

To return to the present exhibition of photographs, it does not seem necessary to mention the honoured prints. They speak for themselves.

It is necessary, however, to mention the following pictures, which, for the purpose of this review, constitute the highlights of the show. STAIRWAY-AEOLIAN HALL, by Norfolk; STREET PARADE, by Harold Sumberg; MEMORY, by Norfolk; HIS FIRST PAT, by Woodley; QUIET STREET, by Sumberg, and CLEAN START by Adrian Adamson.

All these prints show a sharp, observant eye, and an extraordinary understanding of the subject-matter. In the case of STREET PARADE, we are shown the spectators rather than the spectacle. The children are not only individuals, but also a composition of scattered shapes and patterned fabrics again the hard background of the street pavement. It captures the pleasing pattern of shapes and textures which existed for only a moment. THE MEMORY is an example of photography used not to produce a good print only, but as a well controlled medium of achieving an artistic end.

The show will remain in the Gallery till March first. It will be reviewed by Mr. F. E. Moffatt on Wednesday, Feb. 27, at 5 p.m. All undergraduates are invited to attend.

Toronto Champions Record By Stulac

By JIM PROUDFOOT

In a very close meet Saturday night, the Varsity Swimming Team won the Canadian Intercollegiate Championship, edging the McGill team 43-36 on total points. Western's team was never in the running and ended up with but 5 points. The last event of the evening, the 400-yard free style relay, was the clincher as the teams were about tied before that.

George Stulac was the individual star of the meet, smashing one record, tying another and swimming a terrific lap in the free style relay. In the 50-yard free style, Stulac matched the intercollegiate mark of 24.2 seconds. But it was in the 100 yards free style that Stulac showed electrifying speed as he chopped the record down from 55.6 seconds to 53.9. He figured in the all-important Blue victory in the 400 relay. Varsity was trailing as he began his 100 and they were half a lap up when he climbed out of the water.

Varsity won both relays with much to spare. A thriller that had the crowd on its feet was the stroke-for-stroke race staged in the 200 yards breast stroke by McGill's Kopin and the Blues' Bate. Kopin took a short lead in the first length and Bate stuck with him the rest of the way.

Al Roger won the diving competition for Varsity with a neatly executed display that had him well ahead of his nearest opponent, Curtis of Western.

Varsity's Gibson swam a tireless race in the 440 freestyle. It was close till the last length where Gibson had enough left to sprint and win it by plenty.

Results:

300-yard medley relay: Time 3:11.3, McGill, Varsity, Western.
220-yard free style: Time 2:24.8, Gibson (T), Cook (M), Issenman (M).
50-yard free style: Time :24.2, Stulac (T), Bradley (M), Alexander (W).
Diving: Roger (T), Delisle (W).
100-yard free style: Time :53.9, Stulac (T), Bradley (M),, Alexander (W).
200-yard back stroke: Time 2:19.4, Mingle (M), Mc-Ilroy (T), Langer (T).
200-yard breast stroke: Time 2:33.6, Kopin (M), Bates (T), Sperling (M).
400-yard free style: Time 5:18.5, Gibson (T), Cook (M), Murray (M).
440-yard free style relay: Time 3:47, Varsity, McGill, Western.

Blues Win 5-4 Overtime Hockey

While the Blues held the upper hand in the overtime, there were many tense moments, including the final minute of the period when Coach Therrien pulled Auger out of the Montreal nets in favour of a sixth attacker. However, the Blues held, and came close on two occasions to scoring on the open net.

The Carabin defence was much improved in Friday's game with Jean Vernier and the league's leading scorer, Andre Charest, playing especially well. Up front Bernie Quesnel was the sparkplug with Georges Hotte and Jean Bruneau also turning in good games. Quesnel, incidentally, hit the goal post with only 30 seconds left in regulation time.

For the Blues, Gerry Fitzhenry and Phil Arrowsmith seemed to be off their usual stride, while Adams, Red Stephen and Al Conboy turned in their best displays of the season.

Rink Remarks: The game maintained the league's general standard of roughness, with 23 penalties being awarded plus the 10-minute misconduct to MacKenzie . . . the Carabins actually brought about their own downfall by playing an unnecessarily rough game in the last period and consequently receiving harmful penalties . . . for actual team play the Fox-Vernon-Conboy line showed the best for the Blues . . . Paul Prendergast didn't see any further action after the Carabins' second goal . . . Jack Wheldrake was not in the line-up due to an unfavourable reaction of some injections that he received for an eye injury . . . however, the speedy rightwinger may make the trip to Montreal this week-end . . . although there was no official tabulation of the shots on goal, it seemed that the Carabins had much the better proportion . . . a crowd of well over 3,000, the largest of the season, sat in on the game . . . the last home game is against McGill one week from this Friday . . . if all goes well this week-end that McGill game could prove to be a very important affair.

Intermed Swimmers Down Western 40-34 New Canadian Titlists

Varsity's Intermediate Swimming Team duplicated its big brother's effort as they won Saturday's meet. The score in the championship meet was Toronto 40 and Western 34. This meet was run off as part of a four-team meet with RMC and McMaster also competing. Varsity and Western were scored separately to decide the championship.

By a curious twist of mathematics, Western got the most points in the over-all meet while dropping the championship section. The score there was Western 74, Toronto 64, RMC 26 and McMaster 14.

McGILL UNCROWNED

Western, Vars. Split Can. Titles OAC-OVC 3rd

By JOE SCANLON

Intercollegiate wrestling made its debut as a team sport at Hart House over the weekend. The Canadian championships, fought under N.C.A.A. (American) rules, ended with Western the new Senior champs and Toronto once more Intermediate mat kings.

Final senior team score was: Western 34, Toronto 31, OAC-OVC 29, McGill 25, and Queen's 23. The intermediate finals weren't so close; the Blues had 50, Western 37, and OAC-OVC were far behind with 18. There were only three entries in the intermediate championships.

The titles were evenly divided with each college, except defending champs McGill, earning two. The Redmen had some tough luck at this meet; three of their bouts were so close that the referee had to decide the winner. While mentioning the referees we might add that the two of them, Warren Gregory and Robert Wilson of Buffalo, did an excellent job handling 58 bouts in two days.

Every team captain ended as a champion. The first one to win was Tommy Hatashita of Toronto at 137 pounds. Hatashita pinned his first opponent and then decisioned Western's McGregor in the finals, 10-3, to win the title.

Captain Mark Hatt of McGill was the Redmen's only winner. Hatt won three bouts pinning two of his opponents. His closest bout was with Toronto's Chykaliuk. He decisioned Wild Bill, 4-3. Chykaliuk was just 11 seconds short of tying the match.

Captain Colin Hubling of Western pinned Toronto's Doug Hamilton. Hamilton had beaten two tough opponents in the opening rounds while Hubling had an easier time earning a second round fall in his first bout.

Captain Steckle of OAC-OVC took a fall from Toronto's Robinson to become heavyweight champion and Ike Lanier, the Queen's captain, pinned Menard of McGill in two rounds.

The Blues' second title was won by Walt Pitman who beat Jim Bewell of Western. Pitman, in control all the way, looked very good in taking the third round fall.

Western's 123 - pounder Dreisman surprised by beating McLeod of McGill. He took the Redman, 6-0. Armstrong of Queen's won a heart-breaker in downing Malo of Western. The bout, all tied up, was awarded to Armstrong by the referee. Armstrong won his first round match against Phelan of the Blues also in a referee's decision.

Orie Loucks, weakened by his reducing spree last week, lost to Bill Gray of Guelph. Loucks hung on as long as he could but Gray pinned him at 2:15 of the third.

Toronto's intermediates romped home with six of the nine titles. George Vetsos gave the fans their biggest thrill in Saturday's 123-pound opener. Vetsos took his man down and then got into trouble. Western's cocky Clutchley was even making cracks at the crowd as he worked over the sagging Varsity man.

Then, after a near-fall, Vetsos reversed and although worn out, kept on going. He pinned Clutchley at 2:18 of the third to become the winner and a real champion.

Grossberg of Toronto lost the next bout and Berard dropped the 147-pound contest. Pete Nicholls' injury cost Varsity the 157-pound spot.

The rest of the team went on to win their classes. Al Gladstone won two strong decisions; Glen McCormick pinned both his opponents; Leon Smith took a fall and a decision; Larry Skitch decisioned his man.

The other teams did not even risk a man against Ernie Dryden who became Canada's intermediate intercollegiate champ without leaving his seat.

Sr. Vic In Dents Out 8-0 Semi

Senior Vic ran true to form last Friday as they walloped Dent A's, 8-0 to move on to what should be a bang-up final series this week against Trinity A's. The dentists skated with their opponents but Vic seemed to have the game well in hand at all times. The Scarlet and Gold had a big edge in finishing off their plays.

Vic showed three two-goal men: Andrews, Koughan and Walton. The defence corps headed by Captain Andrews and Machim was very strong. The game became steadily riugher, ending in a couple of fights in the third period. Nine minor penalties were distributed, 5 to the dentists and 4 to Vic.

The first period pace was too fast to last. Vic went two up in the first ten minutes. The first at 7:27 was a picture play as Marshall drew the defence over and then put Walton in the clear. At 9:45 Koughan slapped in Andrews' rebound. White also drew an assist. That was all the scoring for that frame. During a couple of penalties, Vic threw up an effective defence.

They added two more in the second stanza. Andrews scored one while both teams were short-handed and at 12:30, Thomas' screened shot found the net. Toward the end of the period, the play slowed up considerably.

They sped up again in the third and roughened up, too. Vic got a pair of early goals, Koughan from White at 2:51 and Andrews from White again at 3:46. About half way through the period, a brawl threatened to break out but cooler heads prevailed. Another one did break out in the 16th minute and Clumpus and Locke of Dents and Koughan of Vic took roughing penalties for their part in the melee.

Vic added insult to injury in the final two minutes. Walton pushed one in from a scramble at 18:50 and Marshall scored from Walton at 19:11.

Squashers Win Down RMC 5-0 In A-Nite Meet

A five-man Toronto squash team gained a 5-0 decision over a Royal Military College group at Saturday's Athletic night. The Toronto team lost only one game in the contest as the Cadets found the going rough.

Facilities at RMC include only one squash court and the Cadets haven't been up against much opposition. The visitors also had trouble adjusting to the size of the Toronto courts which are larger than those at Kingston.

Squash Captain Rick Gaunt defeated Bourne of Queen's 3-0 to start things off right. The others followed his lead. Barry de Veber defeated McPherson 3-1, Dancy dropped Wray 3-0, Walter beat Rieffenstein 3-0, and Ketchum defeated Bonguard 3-0.

Thursday at Hart House Rick Gaunt will face Jack Libel for the Coventry Cup. The cup is the award for the winner of a match between the undergrad and the graduate champion champion. This match will start at 11.20 on Thursday.

Mac Men Win 72-69 Break Blues' Zone

By MAL CRAWFORD

The McMaster Marauders dealt the Blues' Intercollegiate Basketball Championship hopes a crushing blow Saturday night in their field house at Hamilton Saturday, as they held off a last-minute drive to beat Toronto 72-69. Varsity's only hopes now lie in beating Western and McMaster here, and sitting back in the hope that McMaster will beat Western at Hamilton, which would force a three-way tie for first place.

The Blues' zone defence, which held the powerful Rochester scoring machine to 53 points Wednesday, was penetrated by the Marauders, whose coach Ivor Wynne has scouted all the Blues' home games this year. Putting three men under the backboards where the Blues normally have only two defenders, Mac fed the ball in to Stanley and Foreman. When the Blues stayed back to cover them, lanky Gerry MacTaggart started throwing in long bullet-like set shots. MacTaggart, who spiked the Blues in their meetings last year, was the nemesis again this year; some of the shots he was making looked like they were going to go clear through the backboard.

Ray Monnot opened the scoring when he made good a fourth or fifth attempt at tapping in a rebound, but the two teams kept pace throughout the first period, at the end of which Mac was ahead 16-15.

Then MacTaggart started hitting. The score hit 28-18, and Ed Brennan got his fourth foul, after coming in only about five minutes before.

Ray Monnot, with his peculiar hook shot, and Bill Huycke, whose set shots were almost as effective as MacTaggart's, scored several quick hoops to leave the score 36-32 at half-time.

The Blues took the lead 46-43 late in the third period as Fawcett scored after stealing the ball when McMaster was taking it out of their own end, and uycke added two more hoops in quick succession. McMaster took over in the fourth frame, Max Woolley scoring from 'way out and Lee Munn hooping two or three with a slow sweeping hook shot that the Blues watched flat-footed. Munn's second field goal set Toronto back 56-67.

From there in it was only a matter of time. The locals kept possession of the ball, shooting rarely, and the Blues got little chance to score.

Eddie Brennan of Toronto and Ken Stanley of McMaster fouled out at the start of the last period. Monnot fouled out later, along with Munn and Foreman of Mac. It was a rough game, though a very exciting one. The Blues' close checking which made them look so sharp Wednesday resulted only in fouls in this rough and tumble affair, Brennan and Monnot got four on them early, were used sparingly. Monnot still turned in a spectacular performance, hooking and pushing up accurate shots sinking seven of 14 tries.

Best man for the Blues, and top scorer for the night, was little (5'7") Don Fawcett, who hooped 18 points. He got eight out of eight foul shots, and scored on five out of eight field goal attempts.

Though neither side could very well claim the worst of it, the refereeing was about the worst we have seen this year.

Varsity—Fawcett 18, Lukenda 17, Huycke 12, Monnot 16, Oneschuk 3, Binnington 1, Maynerick 1, Glover 1, Brennan.

McMaster—MacTaggart 17, Walley 13, Kunz 12, Hawkrigg 7, Foreman 8, Munn 6, Stanley 5, Wigglesworth 4.

Belles Lose Monster Queen's Win Tourney

By CAROL LOGAN

For the first time in four years the University of Toronto Women's Intercollegiate Basketball team came home from the Intercollegiate tourney minus the Bronze Baby. Toronto fell out of the Baby race in the first preliminary game on Friday night at the Queen's gym, when McGill squad came out on top of a 29-28 score.

The Red and White team gained the lead in the first half of the game, with the score at half time, 14-8. The Toronto squad seemed nervous and their shooting and passing misfired continually.

The third quarter saw the Bluebelles hit their stride. Sparked by Alma Hatch, they held the McGill team down, to end the stanza with an 18-17 lead.

Both teams jockeyed for one point leads in the final quarter. At time out, Toronto was top dog with 21-20. McGill tied it up on a free shot when the play resumed, then gained a one point margin on another foul shot. Carolyn Dobson concelled the difference for Toronto The Redwomen sank three quick baskets to take the lead. Dobson and Hatch brought the Varsity team up to within two points of the Montreal cagers. With thirty seconds left in the game, Ruth Welsman (McGill) rimmed a free shot to give her crew a three point lead. The Bluebells fought desperately to break into McGill's freeze-play, and finally Dobson sank a closing shot at the sound of the buzzer, to end the contest one point behind McGill.

In the second preliminary game on Friday night, Queen's trounced Western 23-17, to gain a seat in the winners' contest with McGill on Saturday.

Saturday afternoon saw Toronto score an easy win over Western in the consolation contest. The Bluebells displayed all the polish and control that they lacked in the early portion of the McGill game. Sally Wallace was high scorer for the Varsity squad in this tilt with 13 points. The checking was terrific throughout both games with Mary Lewis, Heather Chipman and Mary Macdonald starring in outstanding performances. Ardith Crich fought hard for Western sinking 10 points.

In the final game, an inspired Queen's team defeated McGill 32-24 in eight minutes of overtime. This win gave the Gaels first place, and the Bronze Baby.

Toronto's Alma Hatch was high scorer of the tourney with 24 points, while McGill's Ruth Welsman copped 23 and Queen's Daria Boehmaker sank 21.

Toronto

Sally Wallace 19, Joan Mooney 4, Ruth Walker 7, Alma Hatch 24, Shirley Roberts 6, Carolyn Dobson 11; Mary Macdonald, Heather Chipman, Mary Lewis (Captain), Marian Cassidy Series, Beth Wade.

Blue Runners Beat Western And McMaster

Varsity came out on top of a three-way track meet with Western and McMaster at Hart House Saturday, getting 40 points to Western's 15 and McMaster's 14. Toronto won both the relays, but in individual events piled up points mostly by seconds and thirds. Varsity won only two individual events, and in one of these, the mile, the other colleges had no entries. Western, in spite of the fact that they have no facilities for winter track training, came out with two firsts, a third, and a tie for third.

McMaster's Don McFarlane, as usual, took the 50 and 100 yards, to give the Hamiltonians two firsts. McFarlane won the 50 in 5.5 seconds, and the 100 in 10.8, well below the times of the runners-up.

Clint Husband won the 300 for Toronto, in Hart House record time of 34.6 seconds. Interfaculty record holder Eric Kofmel was second, Ray Koenig of McMaster third.

Bruce Waller of Western moved up from third place in the 600 to edge Jack Warga at the tape. Waller's time was 1 minute 17 seconds flat, the best 600 run at Hart House this year.

Doug Duncan of Western did a similar stunt in the 1,000 passing George McMullen and Mal Crawford of Varsity, after the latter had led through the first 600 yards and the former until about one lap to go. Duncan beat McMullen by only a few inches.

Chuck Wortman won the mile, George Webster coming second. No outside entries ran in this race.

Toronto's team of Larry Yeigh (150 yards), Eric Kofmel (300 yards), Jack Warga (600 yards), and Mal Crawford (900 yards) beat a tired Western team in the distance medley relay by about 30 yards.

Varsity's sprint medley relay team of Doug Wilson, Clint Husband, Jack Wall, and Earl Fee beat McMaster's entry by a safe margin also.

Results:

50 yards—5.5 sec.—McFarlane (M), Wilson (T), Savage (W).
100 yards—10.8—McFarlane, Wilson, Savage and Yeigh (T).
300 yards—34.6—Husband (T), Kofmel (T), Koenig (M).
600 yards—1:17.0—Waller (W), Warga (T), Bassingthwaighte (T).
1000 yards—2:27.8—Duncan (W), McMullen (T), Crawford (T).
Mile—4:38.4—Wortman (T), Webster (T).
Distance medley relay—4:34.3 — Toronto.
Sprint medley relay—3:28.5—Toronto.

In the girls' hockey match between the Vic. I's and Med's team, the Meds emerged victorious, carrying with them a 2-1 score. It seemed to be the Med's game from the beginning. The Vicsters had to battle a strong defense. Outstanding for the Medical gals was Irene Hain who scored their two goals. June Chandler scored for Vic. Both B. Weatherhead of Vic. and I. Hain of Med's received penalties in this Friday game.

Factory supervision, smoke control, protection against poisonous fumes, communicable disease control, and accident prevention are but a few of the Division of Industrial Hygiene's interests.

Who's Discriminating?

—Cartoon by Hugh Niblock.

Belated Brotherhood

Last week was dedicated to brotherhood — at least on the North American continent. The Varsity ignored it, partially in reaction to the seven day obeisance with its unfortunate corollary (the heat's off, back to work). More important, we were sincerely puzzled as to the meaning and application of the mellifluous campaign slogans.

What is brotherhood to the six room house dweller surrounded by similar houses with like inhabitants? "Love thy neighbour", regardless of race, creed or colour. Yet the usual homeowner picks a district where his neighbour is a reflection of himself. And the rest of the city has little interest in what the next door holds.

Discrimination is simply the semi-civilized expression of the primitive dislike for all that is different and strange. For a savage, a foreigner was fair game, an enemy to be killed on sight. More sophisticated ages have devised subtler tortures for the outgroup. Yet, varying forms of discrimination have the virtue of preserving minority identity.

On the other hand, the civilized society produces an antidote for discrimination almost as poisonous as the thing itself. Witness the professional tolerator. He who collects foreign accents and strange creeds with the same avidity someone else employs in searching out Renaissance novels and Cezanne watercolours. And all with a benign smugness which gazes at the shortcomings of his fellowmen with God-like wonder and disapproval.

Yet, how do all the societies for the prevention of discrimination and all the anti-discrimination legislation, hope to erase intolerance of "race, creed or colour". They can't really. Rather, they may hope to change the focus of our intolerance.

And victims of hate and prejudice do change. No longer do Orange Protestants and Roman Catholics attack each other so vengefully. The heat has somewhat spent itself and the spectre of twelfth of July parades are becoming woefully anachronistic sights in Southern Ontario.

Again, Jews in the southern United States are quite an integral part of the white community. The full force of intolerance is saved for the negro.

Discrimination is practised against minorities which show the least chance of being assimilated, particularly when they wave the red flag of defiance. Torontonians will allow the Eskimo to go his way in peace, yet, we imagine that there would still be something of an uproar if the Daughters of the American Revolution celebrated Independence Day in Massey Hall.

The most brutal aspect of intolerance is the pitting of group judgement against group judgement. Individuals within these groups become incapable of communicating with each other. And, in extreme cases, it adds up to war.

We wonder, however, whether all the well-intentioned advocates of brotherhood on this continent aren't missing an opportunity. By readjusting the focus of intolerance, by encouraging discriminating against communists, they could divert public attention from the piffling and anachronistic discriminations at present.

Fight discrimination with discrimination! After all, brotherhood, as practical Christianity has often proved, can go just so far.

The Modern Student

Static or Changing?

What is the current student like? A mental milksop or a lost lamb? Ralph Wintrob, CUP Editor, discusses some of the opinions of the adult adjudicators as well as of students themselves on the Younger Generation's favourite topic: The Younger Generation.

A distinguished, white-haired journalist in this city, with a reputation for a sharp wit and wide background got together over a cup of tea recently with a professor at this university. In two minutes flat the journalist had summed up to his satisfaction the character of today's serious-minded students. It occurred after they had taken part in a discussion group composed of about thirty such students.

The trouble with students today is that they're too philosophical, Mr. Journalist said. Not only do they take themselves too seriously but they spend their time arguing on purely abstract, vague generalities. Ten or fifteen years ago, he continued, they would never have talked like that.

And the professor agreed.

This is not an isolated case. People who spend their time observing and taking part in student activities have passed the present crop off, as an ineffectual bunch of mental milksops. These Sooth Sayers sadly watch an epidemic of maggots in the forms of defeatism, cynicism, passivity and fear, gnawing away at the innards of the students' mind.

Really it's a bit much to take. Forever being convicted of all manner of wrongdoings from not taking heed of our responsibility toward campus activities to an overabundance of aimless exuberance, now we are being convicted of being a collection of mass-produced automotons, who have given up all hope for the Present and Future. That immortal phrase could be applied: "Wotthehell! Wotthehell!"

But do we really stand condemned? Have we been so overpowered by reality that we are escaping into a dreamworld of abstraction, and petty principles?

In short, do we stand convicted of being caught up in a whirlpool of mental somnambulism.

For accusers, like Mr. Journalist, hark back to the old days. In the Twenties old values could safely be discarded and new ones sought. In the thirties economic insecurity caught everyone by the horns and students were out to change the government and in the process change the whole of society. Such times are long past, it would seem.

Where, one asks, are the firey orators, the radicals and rebels, the people with worlds to conquer. All students seem to want these days is security, to live their little lives as easily and comfortably as possible.

Now those who made such comments are not rabble-rousers, idealists or old war-horses gone to seed. So you can't toss it off as all a bunch of malarky.

For the big questions still remain. Have serious-minded students stopped asking questions. Are they accepting safe icons and weight tomes as a substitute protection against this cold, cruel world.

What a bunch of bums today's college students are, one person said to me. They waste their brightest years sitting back and allowing other people to make a stab at shaping the world for them. They just seem to feel that it's all no use. Too big and complicated for the individual.

All that students are interested in is themselves, said another. They won't let themselves be pinned down to anything except maybe what they are going to do with themselves after they get out of college.

One coed told a group of students, she was drinking beer with one afternoon, that she would rather read a book in the privacy of her own room by herself than face the problems of the world today. And no one made much of an effort to disagree with her.

Many students active in campus organizations this year, have decided that it is just not worth the effort; it's too much for them. They have decided that for all the satisfaction that it gives them, they would rather just forget about campus organizations while they free-lance and forget about responsibility.

So where's the spirit, where's the vigor and enthusiasm. What happened to the students with ideas, the campus muse and the crusaders—these are among the questions one asks.

It all adds up to a disturbing indication that students play around with theories, study the past divorced from present and philosophical theories separated from practical application both in the community at large and on the campus. One of the best examples is the consistent approval of the principle of Russian student exchange but a refusal to take a stand on the visit in practise.

Warden Ignatieff, of Hart House, spent last summer with a troupe of University of Toronto students in Finland. You would expect the Finnish students to be cynical and apathetic, he said, but they are not. They have a sense of faith in the future, in working together to build a better world. And they were doing it by building themselves a technical school community on the outskirts of Helsinki. He found this echoed in many parts of Europe.

What bothers the Warden most is that he feels students have reached a total impasse. They have blindly accepted the world their parents handed down to them. At the same time, he said, students have allowed their latitude of ideas to diminish increasingly without putting up a fight.

It's what this means for the future that concerns the Warden too. He doesn't like the prospects at all.

Take it for what it's worth, but these are popular ideas.

Of course, there are apologists for these conditions. For one person on the campus who does a lot of listening and talking in student groups, the problems themselves have changed. Problems of social and economic insecurity arising from the depression have been taken care of by government social welfare programs. Students, he said, seem to concentrate now on finding a reasonable set of values. They are more prone to wonder how people get along with each other and where man stands in relation to his fellows. A sort of a psychological reorientation. As a result, he said, it is easy for people to get the impression that students are sceptics and defeatists. Actually the problems are simply more intangible, harder to put your finger on.

Well, after mulling it over, I've decided to ask a few more questions instead of sticking my neck out and coming to a few ill-fated and dogmatic conclusions. Perhaps there still are students who dare to strike a match near an inflammable object. And perhaps, our ephemeral set of values are highly inflammable.

But I throw it out: Mental milksops complacent, overawed and apathetic? Or unsettled, unresolved and undetermined?

Editor, The Varsity:

I am writing this letter to you to register my great disgust with the thinking behind your editorial in Thursday's Varsity.

In this article you make a complete damnation of the NFCUS executive for the apparent failure to jump on the bandwagon of student enthusiasm re: the Russian student exchange. You claim that they (the NFCUS executives) have missed "a golden opportunity for everlasting fame" by not taking immediate action on this question. I would like to wholeheartedly disagree with you.

In disagreeing I would like to commend the action of the NFCUS executive for the very prudent manner in which they are approaching a very touchy problem. They have decided to completely investigate all possibilities of such an exchange, and report these findings in a very objective manner to the next NFCUS convention. To my mind this is a far more valid approach to the problem; it is certainly more rational than running off half cocked because some students question an earlier decision of the executive.

You ask in your editorial "whether the clarity and preciseness of next year's information will not be offset by a lack of student interest." I would say no. If, after complete investigation, the tour is found feasible, I believe that just as much enthusiasm will be engendered by the student bodies of Canada. Yes, the enthusiasm will be there, and this I stress, the enthusiasm of last fall was a false enthusiasm. By this I mean that the enthusiasm was not aimed at whatever good may come from the exchange, but rather, that the enthusiasm was built up by a small minority whose prime interest was to use this tour as a taking off point in a carte blanche condemnation of NFCUS. And I am not so sure that such was the case.

No, I cannot agree with you that the primary criteria for action is mass enthusiasm. Let us be rational and approach the problem of university students. Let us examine the plan and see if it will work before we attempt to put it into practice.

In closing I would just like to add a few words of thanks that some of the more intelligent members of the student society are in a position where they are able to stop such 'snowballing' from resulting into action. My congratulations to Syd Wax and Jean DeMargerie.

L. J. Brennan, Jr.
III St. Mike's.

Editor's Note: With Mr. Brennan, we agree wholeheartedly in approving the comprehensiveness of the Executive's plan for investigating the whole Russian question. Yet, we cannot approve the inordinate delayal of the Executive meeting, and thence of recognition of the issue itself. Perhaps in the future, Executive meetings should be scheduled for before Christmas.

SAC Gives Radio Committee Go Ahead On Station Plans

A Varsity Radio Station moved one step closer to reality at last night's Students' Administrative Council meeting. A motion by Radio Commission Doug Waite that an organization should be set up for radio similar to The Varsity and that the Radio Committee so formed should carry on investigations of an A.M. station for the campus was passed by the council. Waite's motion asked that the committee should try if possible to have the radio station set up by next fall. A report from the investigating committee estimated the station cost to be approximately $9000.

This motion was the first notice for a constitutional amendment and will have to be read at the last SAC meeting of the year.

Waite said that the Radio Committee's biggest problem has been that it has not had an outlet.

John Tinker, II Law, spoke to the council on the behalf of the group who have been investigating the possibilities of an A.M. station. (An A.M. station could be heard on ordinary receiving sets. The committee has been broadcasting at CJRT, Ryerson Institute, which is an F.M. station and can not be heard on ordinary sets.)

Tinker said that the committee had to have an audience before students would feel like working. In answer to a criticism by Graeme Ferguson, IV Vic, that the station might have trouble getting a staff in a few years when the original enthusiasts have left, Tinker said that the committee does not consider itself to be "absurd and naive." Tinker said that the committee had as members, two men who had worked on the Queen's University radio station and that he himself worked on a radio station during the summer. Because of this experience, Tinker felt that the committee was aware of the problems facing a Varsity radio station.

The motion for a radio station at the University was opposed by Charles Hanley, III UC. Hanley said that he doubted if the radio committee could find sufficient staff without causing many college and faculty activities to suffer.

He was supported by Graeme Ferguson. Ferguson said that he opposed the motion, not because it would interfere with studies, but because he felt it might be an unwise move on the part of the council. He said that university activities run in cycles. Several years ago, Ferguson said, the International Relations Club had a membership of 150. Now he pointed out it has a small membership while the students are going to the United Nations Club.

Tinker said that by the very nature of the organization it would not die out. He said that it would be an organization similar to The Varsity. Paul Forrestell, IV St. Mike's, supported the motion as he felt that the Radio Station will bring out the dead heads who are "not doing a blamed thing" around the University.

Managing Editor Elinor Strangways of The Varsity, said if any activities are cut down it should not be a creative activity like the Radio Station. She said that while Hanley was right in stressing that a student comes to University to study, she felt that one of the best things a student can develop is the ability to create.

Students Picket Benchers For Varsity Recognition

The complaints of the University Law School students against Osgoode Hall blossomed out into action yesterday when students from the Law School staged a mass demonstration against the Benchers at Osgoode Hall.

The picketers carried placards reading "Justice", "Equality", "We Want Recognition", "Recognize U of T Law School", and a big banner proclaiming "Varsity Law School". They also distributed pamphlets explaining their arguments.

Students from the Law School are recognized by every common law jurisdiction in the world except Ontario, said one of the demonstrators. He added that they were required to do their articling in Toronto while studying part time at Osgoode thus giving Toronto lawyers the equivalent of slave labour. Articling is legal apprenticeship during which time the students learn the practice of their trade in a lawyer's office.

The parade started from the Law School as the students walked out of their lectures about fifteen minutes before the end of the period. Then they marched across the campus in front of Simcoe Hall and continued on their way to Osgoode Hall. The demonstration finished with a parade down Yonge street in the noon hour traffic attracting curious stares and questions from people out on their lunches.

Station CKEY made a tape recording of the proceedings which will be broadcasted early next week. Downtown Toronto papers had photographers on hand. Policemen encountered on the route paid no attention to the parade. The students kept in single file while walking along and didn't stop any traffic.

The Law Society offices were called on the telephone. The girl who answered said that the demonstration had been noticed but she refused to comment on the reaction.

Here is the phamphlet that was handed out:

THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO SCHOOL OF LAW

We are asking for equal recognition as students of a legal educational institution in the Province of Ontario. Since the School is a Public Institution supported by Public funds, the Public has a Right to know the facts and make its opinion felt. These Are The Facts:

1.—We are compelled to study for eight years before admission to the Ontario Bar, Osgoode Hall students spend seven years.

2.—We have the strongest staff for teaching and research ever assembled in any Canadian law school.

3.—No other law school has higher entrance requirements.

4.—Our graduates are recognized by every common law jurisdiction in the world . . . except Ontario. This is not true of Osgoode Hall graduates.

5.—Only in Ontario is legal education monopolized by a private institution and recognition denied to graduates of a university, a public institution.

6.—Our objective is to eliminate the extra year of academic work at Osgoode Hall.

You Can See we DESERVE equal recognition.

OBVIOUSLY we are being unjustly penalized at YOUR and OUR expense.

"LET JUSTICE BE DONE"

Council's Decision Reverses Choice Of Varsity Staff

The Students' Administrative Council last night appointed C. M. Godfrey, R. W. Shepherd, and Jim Anderson, all third year Medsmen, as an Editorial Board to take the post of Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity for 1952-53. Shepherd was appointed "Spokesman" of the Board to the Students' Council and to the Publications Commission of the SAC, and will sign contracts.

Other candidates for the post of Editor-in-Chief were Ian Montagnes and Harold Nelson, respectively News Editor and Assistant News Editor of The Varsity this year.

Doug Sherk, IV SPS, outlined the proceedings at the Publications Commission meeting yesterday, which he chaired. The Commission recommended the appointment of the Board of Editors to the SAC. The Commission, of six members, split on the vote, and Sherk, as chairman, exercised his prerogative in casting the decisive vote. The recommendation of the Commission, with the amendment naming Shepherd as "Spokesman", was passed by an SAC vote of 15 to 3.

The Varsity staff vote, which is an intra--staff vote to give the Editor some indication or staff feeling, favored Ian Montagnes. The staff voted 31 to 5 against the principle of an Editorial Board.

Sherk explained that the Board of three proposed to have one of the group in complete charge of 33 consecutive issues, with possible exceptions due to timetable exigencies. Sherk said that the final decision would be between Montagnes and the Board.

Montagnes has the necessary technical experience, Sherk said, and had been a very capable News Editor this year. He addded that if only the production of the paper were concerned, Montagnes would be first choice.

"Know-how" is an important factor, Sherk said, but not an end in itself. He added that the Editor should pick his staff, and not necessarily be "tailored to suit it."

The head of an organization does not need to know all the technical details of production, Sherk said, but should be willing to learn. "He need not come from the bottom up, but should be able to get along with people, recognize ability, be able to inspire confidence, have a sense of humor, and have a sense of responsibility to the students as well as to The Varsity." Sherk said that he felt that the Board of three possessed more of these qualities than Montagnes.

Sherk said that he felt that the Board would have no trouble with The Varsity staff, and that their appointment would provide that the paper would not be run "by a slightly biased and ingrown staff, as has sometimes happened in the past."

Sherk asked the SAC members not to vote "for political reasons", but to be completely honest about their opinions. He asked them to keep in mind what was best for the University of Toronto—"us and the students we represent"—rather than "journalistic ratings".

Barbara Browne, Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity, recommended Montagnes for the position "as one who has the necessary capabilities, the confidence of a staff he has worked with, and a full sense of responsibility for the job." Miss Browne said that she was against the principle of a Board of Editors, as there would not be one person responsible to the SAC, the public, the masthead, and the staff.

"I don't think The Varsity is really an Artsmen's Gazette," Miss Browne said. "The paper is for the whole campus, and staffers tend to lose their college affiliations. I don't feel that more people would necessarily be attracted to work on The Varsity just because there were three professional students as Editors-in-Chief."

Miss Browne added that, in spite of the exorbitant amount of work required of the Editor of The Varsity, she did not feel that students in professional faculties were necessarily barred from the position. She pointed out that this year's Makeup Editor is in Occupational Therapy, and that other Varsity staffers are in professional faculties.

Elinor Strangways, Managing Editor of The Varsity, said that the paper is a student service with responsibilities to the student body. "Someone interested in serving the students through the paper will work on it consistently as far as his as his timetable will allow." She said that both Montagnes and Nelson had shown by their work on the paper "whether they were willing to work their way up, or just wanted to come in on top."

Bud Trivett, II Law, said that the men in professional faculties have not had the additional incentive to work on The Varsity because they felt that while they might gain the capabilities for the job, the load of studies in their later years discriminated against their possibilities of holding an important masthead position. Trivett said he felt that the appointment of the Board would open a new field for men in professional faculties, who would see that they could work for the more time-consuming positions on the paper.

Caroline Gratton, IV St. Mike's, said that she felt that the members of the proposed Board did not have the experience and capabilities of Montagnes. She added that she felt that both Montagnes and Nelson had more coherent programs for The Varsity next year than the Board.

Chuck Hanley, III U.C., said "We would welcome the professional faculties with open arms, but when we have a man who has all the necessary qualities and a coherent program for which he would be responsible to the SAC, it would be dangerous to reverse our policy to The Varsity."

Masthead Meeting

There will be an important meeting of the Masthead today at 5 p.m. in the editorial office. All members are requested to make every effort to attend.

SAC At A Glance

At its meeting last night, besides appointing the new Editorial Board of The Varsity and approving a report of the Radio Committee regarding a campus radio station, the Students' Administrative Council:

—tabled the question of Soviet student visits to Canada until next fall. The SAC had been requested by NFCUS to answer a referendum before the annual NFCUS conference next October.

—recommended that next year's blood donor campaign be held in the early fall, "when students are healthier." The Council also decided not to reopen this year's blood donor campaign, in spite of a request from the Red Cross. That organization had requested continuance of the campaign, which had not reached 10 percent registration.

—Gave Debates Commissioner Chuck Hanley the go-ahead to "flip a coin" with McMaster to decide which university would compete as western regional champion in the Inter-University Debating League Finals. The normal method of picking a western champion is impossible, Hanley explained, because of confusion in the debate scorings.

—thanked Physot rep Shirley Bratt and her faculty for making a blue and white University of Toronto banner, the first one the Council has owned. The banner has already pourneyed down to Rochester with Hart House Glee Club, which was representing Toronto at a festival.

—recommended that no Red Feather Fair be held next year, but instead there be a tag campaign, lasting for "several days" and using official Community Chest publicity.

—heard the Musicians' Protective Association is holding all organizations to contracts cancelled out of respect of the death of the King. The letter was in answer to a request by the School of Nursing that they be freed of their obligation for a dance to be held in Club Kingsway. The Association said that the orchestra concerned would hold the Club to its contract, and suggested that any adjustments be made with the Club.

—heard Finance Commissioner Bud Trivett say Hart House requests for payment for services was the first move to have the Council rent offices, even though it was a student organization. "This is just taking money out of the students' left pocket and putting it in their right", said Trivett.

Council's Decision

Syd Wax, SAC president, said that the selection of an Editor-in-Chief for The Varsity was perhaps more important than that of the president of the SAC. "The Editor can give to the campus tone, motivation, and constant reminders of briskness and awareness." Wax said that from his personal knowledge of the Board candidates, he could recommend their capacity, intelligence, idealism, maturity, and experience for the job.

He recommended that the experiment be tried for at least one year, as the SAC could watch closely to see if it worked, and he felt that the Board would give The Varsity a freedom of movement and impartiality "that have been sometimes lacking in the past."

Bill Corbett, III Trin, suggested that the SAC constitution did not empower it to elect a Board of Editors-in-Chief, nor "a board of three who would elect the Editor-in-Chief by themselves." Dr. Jack McBirnie, Chairman of the SAC, said that the Council should not let itself be too hemmed in by the constitution. "The constitution is intended for guidance, but things can be overlooked." Trivett commented that governments are "more phone to follow precedent than constitutions."

Asked to comment on the appointment, Godfrey said "We consider this a great opportunity, and one which we hope we can fulfill in the traditional Varsity spirit." Shepherd said, "In view of the fact that such outlets for student expression as debates, mock parliaments and discussions are now less active than formerly, throws added weight on The Varsity. Anderson was unavailable for comment.

Shea Aids Students And EAC With Miniature Massey Report

Education in Canadian culture has been reduced from $3.00 to $1.00 with the publication of a sixty-five page review of the Massey Report by Albert A. Shea, entitled "Culture in Canada." Mr. Shea's firm, Communications Research, is giving 20c from the sale of each copy of the book through the University Book Store, to be divided between SHARE and FROS, (Friendly Relations for Overseas Students). The book is also on sale at the Victoria College Book Store.

The Massey Report was produced by a six-man committee after two years of exhaustive investigation and preparation. Under the chairmanship of the Right Honourable Vincent Massey the report is a review of Canadian development in arts, letters and sciences with 146 recommendations on how culture could be furthered and broadened.

Mr. Shea, 35-year-old native of Toronto has an excellent academic background as well as wide experience as a working journalist, radio commentator and United Nations research specialist.

He is a recognized authority in the field of communications research and is a consultant to the United Nations Education, Scientific and Cultural Oranization on mass communications. At UNESCO headquarters in Paris he prepared the first survey of communication facilities in more than 160 countries. This study, "World Communications," was first published in June, 1950, and has received recognition in every part of the world . . . but Canada . . . for the accuracy of its information and the convenient form in which it is presented.

An honor graduate and gold medalist in political science and economics at the University of Toronto, Mr. Shea received his Master's Degree here in 1938. Following service with the air force, he was secretary of the Rehabilitation Information Committee of the Wartime Information Board. Later he served on the faculty of both Toronto and Manitoba universities. In 1948 he was awarded the Dafoe Foundation Fellowship for study abroad and he studied at Columbia University, New York, as well as in England and France.

In the course of his studies and work, Mr. Shea has travelled in fourteen countries. He has written extensively for Canadian periodicals and has made broadcasts for the CBC from London and Paris.

Prompted by Mr. Shea's donation to SHARE and FROS, and also by its own interest in the problem of educational development, the External Affairs Committee is sponsoring a talk by this author. Mr. Shea will speak on "The Massey Report, Will It Die?" on Tuesday, March 4, at 1.10 p.m., in Room 6, UC.

Unionism Millard's Subject

Charles Millard, national director of the United Steelworkers Union, will speak today on "Trends in Canadian Trade Unionism," at an open meeting of the University of Toronto CCF Club at 4:30 p.m. in room 13, UC.

Millard is a veteran of the First World War. During the 30's he worked at General Motors in Oshawa, and became the first president of one of the early unions in Canada.

He was CCF member in the Ontario Legislature from 1943 to 1945, and again from 1948 until the elections last fall.

In 1947, Millard represented the Canadian Congress of Labor at meetings of the World Federation of Trade Unions in Prague and of the International Labor Organization in Geneva. He was also at the meeting of the executive board of International Confederation of Free Trade Unions in Brussels last November.

Dean Wright Decries Row

Dean Wright of the University Law School issued a statement yesterday after hearing details of the noon hour demonstration staged by University of Toronto Law students.

The Dean said, "I am exceedingly sorry that our students acted as they did today. The case for recognition of our School of Law as a training ground for the profession is a strong one on its own merits. It does not require or call for abuse or vilification. The governing body of the profession and the Law Society of Upper Canada deserves and will receive an apology from the School of Law and the students concerned for conduct unbecoming to members of the profession."

Night Students Seize Control Of Georgian

Montreal, CUP—The Georgian, Sir George Williams College weekly newspaper underwent several unexpected staff changes when a group of evening students of that college seized control of the paper published last week.

The coup d'etat was reported in the main story of the same issue that was published by the evening division students. This has led several informed sources to conclude that the issue was a collaboration. The story announced that "the press was only regained in time to add this news flash."

Both the Editor-in-Chief and the Sports Editor were placed in confinement in order to protect the plotters from interference.

Most details of the evening students' coup d'etat are unknown, but it has been learned that six masked figures entered the editor's office chanting, "To whom, to whom." The Editor took this calmly until he realized the partial identity of the masked men, when he recalled that "To whom, to whom" is the educated Owls' variation of the call "To-hoo, to-hoo."

Trevor Phillips, The Editor was asked to show his Party card, (EUS card). Failing to do so, he was told that control of the paper was being taken from his hands and vested in a board composed of only evening students.

Cut 'Lobby' Spending Queen's Tells NFCUS

Kingston (CUP) — The National Federation of Canadian University Students will have to stop spending so much money on being an organized pressure group and concentrate on an exchange of ideas if Queen's University is to re-consider its withdrawal from NFCUS.

This is the opinion of George Ainslee, treasurer of the Alma Mater Society, Queen's student council. He made the remark at a special meeting of the Society at which Kathie Swift, Ontario vice-president of NFCUS from McMaster University, asked Queen's to reconsider its withdrawal.

"There is no interest in NFCUS at Queen's, because the organization has no grass roots," Ainslee said. "NFCUS is spending too much money as an organized pressure group, keeping a national secretariat and propaganda machine in Ottawa. The real value of such an organization lies in exchanging ideas," he said.

According to the Queen's Journal, the opinion of the AMS executive at the meeting was that NFCUS should also make more of an effort to reflect the wishes of the students it represents.

Queen's dropped out of NFCUS last fall because of budget difficulties, and lack of interest.

Miss Swift had stopped off in Kingston on her way back from the NFCUS executive meeting in Ottawa in the middle of February. She told the Queen's executive that NFCUS was raising money for a program aimed at benefiting all students, and, she added, "it is only fair that all students should contribute a minimum sum."

"As a matter of fact," she said, "the present 20 cents per student fee can be reduced if all Canadian universities take part," she said.

However, Rosemary Bartlett, president of the Alma Mater Society, told Miss Swift that the peculiar character of student government at Queen's makes it essential for such organizations as NFCUS and ISS to operate themselves without the aid of a compulsory levy. "All major interests have to come from the student body," she said. "In the case of NFCUS a group of interested students could organize and raise any money necessary for the NFCUS program."

After hearing the AMS opinions of NFCUS, Miss Swift said that she would ask the national executive at its next meeting to waive the compulsory levy for Queen's in favour of a voluntary organization. She said that she would also discuss Queen's proposal that NFCUS should concentrate more on co-operating with university authorities for formal action and less on special student pressure tactics.

Fellowships Awarded By Rotary

Fellowships have been awarded by the Rotary International to William W. Riesberry, '47 Trinity, and James M. Thompson, '48 University College. This means that they will study in the British Isles next year.

Riesbury and Thompson are two of the 109 graduate students from different countries who have been chosen as fellows by the Rotary for next year. Candidates for these fellowships must be between 20 and 28 years of age. They must have a college or university degree, a record of high scholastic standing, and a thorough knowledge of the language of the country in which they propose to study. Other qualifications are the ability to make friends easily, and an instinct for leadership. They must also be internationally minded.

One of the aims of the Rotary is the advancement of international understanding, good will, and peace. This is the purpose of the fellowships. Rotary Fellows are ambassadors of good will to the countries in which they study, and when they return home, they are ambassadors for those countries.

SAC Finance Commission Favour Small AVR Loss

Instead of an expected profit of $350, the All-Varsity Revue caused the Student's Administrative Council a loss of $496.17. The figures for the Revue were issued for the SAC yesterday by SAC Secretary-Treasurer, E. A. MacDonald.

The expenses for the show amounted to $3,640.77 instead of $4,075 which was budgeted for by the SAC. This reduction in cost was achieved by cutting costs of the cast party, theatre costs and reducing publicity and staging expenses.

Ticket sale returns were twelve hundred dollars under what was expected the report showed. The show went on for only five shows instead of the planned seven when dates of the performance had to be changed due to King George's death.

MacDonald's report was also presented to the Finance Commission, Tuesday afternoon. The Finance Commission approved the results of the operations of the AVR and commented the Revue on having made such a good report in view of the difficulties.

The AVR Committee went on to make plans for next year after the financial report had been made. Director Jim Guthroe had several suggestions to make. He wanted the SAC rather than the director to appoint a publicity manager and a business manager for the show in future.

The committee discussed his suggestion but felt that the positions should be advertised and nominations for the positions should be made by the All-Varsity Revue Committees to the SAC from the list of applicants.

The committee expressed their approval of the use of Varsity Stadium and the Drill Hall for rehearsals for the performance. The cast also rehearsed in the Physical and Occupational Therapy classrooms commonly known as the "huts."

The next meeting of the All-Varsity Revue Committee will be on March 10. Then the people in charge of various departments will make specific recommendations in order to improve the organization for next year.

Student Composers

The fifth annual Student Composers' Concert sponsored by the Victoria College Liberal Arts Club took place last Sunday in Wymilwood. The program was in some ways similar to the one played at the Hart House students' concert some weeks ago, but since more time and performers were available here, some of the music was in a larger scale, and appropriately more serious.

Two lighter groups of works were played—five Preludes for piano by Ted McGarrigle (played by Margot Rowland), and a suite for Piano by Don McFadden (played by Jim Maden). The three movements of the suite were, to all intents, quite unconnected, and might just as well have been labelled "Preludes", or by some other non-committal name.

The two composers' works are quite different in method, but similar in spirit and form. McGarrigle is interested in harmony, but sticks to conventional rhythms. McFadden's rhythms are the striking thing about his music. Both composers seemed to want to compose epigrammatic pieces a la Schumann, with varied success.

Four songs to words of Walter De La Mare, by Paul McIntyre (sung by Mary Alice Rogers) showed this composer in a new light. Frankly, I wonder whether he really likes composing songs. These at any rate placed most of the interest and emphasis on the piano part, while the voice often merely declaimed the words, somewhat after the manner of Hugo Wolf. The one I liked best was "The Song of Soldiers", which paints a weird picture of a ghostly army.

Both the other pieces were chamber works on a larger scale, a trio by Charles Wilson (played by Gordon MacPherson, Dolores Mockree and Olive Pincock) and a string quartet by Paul McIntyre (played by Mary Foys, Dolores Mockree, Mincy Cadesky and Ron Laurie). Both works achieve much of their interest through their counterpoint, and consequently do not yield as much to the listener on a first hearing than more homophonic things. Diminutions, inversions and such devices are hard enough to pick out in Bach, and doubly so where the idiom is less familiar.

Nevertheless, I was struck by the (to me) profound emotional content of the quartet, and again, by a subtle symmetry. The work is played without breaks, but falls naturally into four sections. The first begins with a disjointed theme on the muted viola, which is gradually built up in contrapuntal fashion to a great climax, and dies away again.

A rapid section follows, and then a return to a slower tempo, with mutes (my memory was not good enough to tell whether this had any connection with the first section). The final section is a sort of epilogue in moderate tempo, less complex than the other sections, ending the work in a tranquil mood.

Wilson's trio pays less attention to euphony than the quartet. The composer places the three instruments on a very equal footing, and throws phrases back and forth between them in imitation. The second movement seems to consist of two movements telescoped into each other, a slow one which begins with a sort of ground-bass, but soon abandons it, and a rapid fugue-like movement. The slow section returns several times and turns into more and more rhapsodic episodes in the fugal one.

The music on this program, as on many others of student compositions was often of an experimental sort. However, it would be unfair to say that it is insincere—it is well worth listening carefully to it, for much of it is written carefully and well.

EARLY THEATRE

Purple Pants & Tiger Skins

By PEARL PARNES

"Hart House Theatre was one of the most inspiring things Canada ever produced", boomed Merrill Denison, and his clay moustache bristled up to his keen, active eyes. Mr. Denison is an alumni of the School of Architecture, of the University of Toronto, a member of the old Hart House Theatre of over thirty years ago. He is now a well-known writer, historian and wit, visiting Toronto from New York for two weeks on an apartment-exchange with some friends.

Mr. Denison was Art Director at Hart House Theatre under the famous Roy Mitchell, "an experimental theatrical genius." The venture had grown out of the old Arts and Letters Club. One day Vincent Massey and Mr. Mitchell had been lunching together, looking over the plans for the projected Hart House. Out of the session grew a theatre which subsequently drew the enthusiasm and talents of the Group of Seven, the acting talents of Vincent and Raymond Massey, and various musical geniuses. Mr. Denison, who had joined The Varsity staff to write but had been "subverted" and became cartoonist, handled the sets, the lights, and the acting chores when "no other actors were available."

The old Theatre used to have a bill of Canadian plays each year. They became increasingly hard to get, and one day Mr. Mitchell casually suggested to Merrill Denison that he write the great Canadian play. The result was "Brothers-in-Arms", which was written on a Saturday morning and has since had many hundred performances, including a recent C.B.C. production.

It had to meet certain requirements: it had to be about Canadians, it had to be funny, and it had to fit a maximum and minimum of these other available actors and eight flats. The only "uncontaminated" Canadians Denison could find were two backwoodsmen (he was one of the first writers to think of putting Canadians in a Canadian play); at the first production a man in the first row of the audience was carried out in convulsions.

The group worked under all sorts of difficulties, and things constantly happened. Mr. Denison could never learn lines, and he would arrange his scenery so that he could paste his part at convenient places on the stage. In one outdoor production of a Greek play, a storm was called for, and the gods co-operated in a magnificent manner. "We reached the apex of dramatic naturalism and lost our audience," chuckles the humorist, who claims to have invented the phrase "Canadian inferiority complex." In various productions of Cymbeline, the British captains varied every night and never seemed to get on the stage quite right. One reached heights of anachronism when he appeared in a tiger-skin robe, horn-rimmed glasses, oxfords, and a pipe.

The Theatre experimented with all sorts of plays, and produced the then-little-known plays by the Irish dramatists and the Indian playwright, Rabindranath Tagore. Mitchell's reign was followed by a series of directors, including one from Shanghai "who wore purple pants." It was taken over by the university after the second world war.

Mr. Denison had been called "subversive" at Jarvis Collegiate High School for inventing a Magazine called the "Vesuvius" in protest against the principal's edict that men and women must not walk to and from school together. His mother, "Canada's leading suffragette" had firmly supported her son. He had tried to enter journalism at the University of Toronto, but "the U of T in 1911 looked on journalism as something vaguely obscene." He entered Pass Arts, but "a combination of Latin and a faculty for pool was my undoing." After some time as City Editor of a Niagara Falls paper, he looked through the university calendar. "Architecture was the first on the list, and I could draw, so I became an architect."

However, he was "half-backwoodsman" and thought Architecture too conducive to claustrophobia, and after three years of practice, came to Hart House Theatre. After a year as Art Director, during which time he lived in Hart House, the CNR hired him to do a series of Canadian historical plays, called the "Romance of Canada Series." Then New York plucked him down to do a similar group of 40 "Great Moments in American History." He is now an "Industrial Historian", and the author of "Harvest Triumphant", the history of the Massey-Harris Company. And he credits Hart House Theatre for his marriage, his writing career, and "one of the most exciting and inspiring things of my life."

No Application Yet For T'nensis Editor

Applications are now being accepted by the Students' Administrative Council for the following positions: Editor of Torontonensis; Director of the Blue and White Band; Conductor and Assistant Conductor of the U. of T. Symphony Orchestra and Chorus; Director of the All-Varsity Revue.

The position of Torontonensis Editor is still open although the deadline was 12 noon last Monday. No applications for that office have been received.

"We would like to encourage as many people as possible to apply for these positions," said SAC Associate-Secretary, Miss A. E. M. Parkes. "Applications should include qualifications and past experience if any," she added.

The committees responsible for the various positions will review the applications and give their recommendations to the Students' Administrative Council. Appointments must be made before the final meeting of the Council which will be held on March 25th.

Norway Students Receive Loans

Oslo—(Exchange) — College students in Norway have the opportunity to borrow money at low rates of interest for periods of up to fifteen years.

The Norwegian Parliament has passed legislation to that effect. A bank set up by Norway's Labor Government handles the lending of money to the students. Some 37 per cent of the Norwegian student population make use of these loans.

An outgrowth of a co-operative students' organization, it is still directed by a representative body of students analogous to the National Federation of Canadian University Students. The bank also runs a small publishing house, rents and builds houses and residences for students and manages cafeterias and restaurants.

Will Question Disillusionment Of Canadians

The University College Parliament, once scheduled for Feb. 14th, was postponed and the new date has been announced as today, Feb. 28th, at 4:00 p.m. in the JCR. The topic is still the same — resolved that "Canada is a Figment of the Imagination."

The speakers for the Government are the Hon. Don Featherstone and Hon. K. Tyrrell. Stating the position for the government, Featherstone said, "There is no distinctive Canadian Culture, no national 'way of life'; how can there be a Canada in the real sense?" With respect to Canada's economic position, Miss Tyrrell stated, "We are forced to bring in foreign capital to help finance our primary industries; for example the oil wells in the West are subsidized by American companies."

"The motion is a plot to undermine the unity of Canada," stated Dave Gauthier for the opposition. The other speaker for the opposition is Hon. Inika Janecek. "It is rather inconceivable that all geographers of all the countries of the world should suffer from the same 'figment of the imagination' and enter Canada on the world map," she said.

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

Daily except Saturday, commencing Monday, March 3rd, a representative of the National Employment Service will be in the Women's Office, Students' Administrative Council, Room 62, University College, to register students for summer employment.

Sinclair Leans On Ideas, Play Lacks Characterization

It was all too apparent last Friday on opening night that Lister Sinclair's play SOCRATES was far from perfect. It was generally conceded that the acting and the directing enhanced it greatly, but the bulk of criticism of the play itself seemed to stem from a desire to help Mr. Sinclair should he rewrite the play, or help him in the writing of his next play. All the criticism aimed at something constructive, and in this vein I too raise my piping voice. SOCRATES is a rhetorical play with a serious message. The fact that it is so makes the play very undramatic, but the message it presents makes the play intensely moving. Mr. Sinclair has not, I think, fully grasped this fact and until he does appreciate it, he will never be a dramatist. He writes verse — not dramatic poetry in the sense that Shakespeare and Christopher Fry write poetry.

Dramatic poetry is not primarily a vehicle for ideas; it is not narrative or expository but rather by its imagery and symbolism it implies different levels of meaning and above all reflects feeling. The most important thing about Hamlet's philosophic statement 'there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so" is not what he says, but how he feels. It implies all the suffering in Hamlet's heart. Only occasionally does any character in SOCRATES speak in that vein I can think only of Crito's speech to Love which reflects the personality of the speaker and the situation of the party, but even it was a self-conscious recitation and therefore slightly removed from the situation.

Apparently Sinclair is only interested in preaching ideas — that a clever political critic is worth listening to — that being truly just and good means dying for ideals when necessary because such moral standards are not relative but absolute — and that belief is in a universal and formal God that can be believed in by all men. Sinclair is not interested, in fact, in the reaction of people — real people — to these ideas, otherwise he would have had to use poetry, but he preferred to expound ideas rhetorically through Socrates. The historical and human situation in which the expression took place are not made clear. F. H. Anderson says that Plato was a dramatist because Socrates spoke in the "Dialogues" within a well defined cultural situation. Sinclair had a chance to make Plato more theatrical but failed to show, as he intended, the "swarthy Mediterranean body" and the deep-seated and sincere feelings of the society.

The accusers were make to look ridiculous, and the magistrates were never characterized properly. One stood for Religion (Triptolemus), one for Politics (Cyrus), and one for Conventional Morality (Phillip). But there was no personality. Shaw often used this dramatic technique but there were recognizable human features that gave the characters plausibility and real humour. The Bishop of Cauchon and Warwick in SAINT JOAN were two believable, abstract characters. Sinclair might have shown that Triptolemus was a little queer, or that Cyrus made money dishonestly.

More important he should have presented their arguments at the trial fairly. Socrates does not present a logically practical case but rather a spiritual one just like Shaw's St. Joan, and the magistrates should have presented a practical argument comparable to Cauchon's — an argument that doesn't really oppose Socrates at all since they are at two different levels. A tragedy results because the politicians have might on their side, but the conflict is left unresolved — both sides being right in their own way.

The friends and disciples of Socrates were roughly sketched. With these men as with the farmers and soldiers we might have seen why Socrates was dangerous. As it was, Socrates was merely a friend to all of them. Loved by his friends, respected and liked by simple people — we never saw him as a teacher. Surely he could have offended some citizens by his questions or persuaded some one to his views before he was arrested.

The first scene of the play was lacking in any real quality. Sinclair could rewrite it to fill in missing elements. Xantippe, Socrates' wife, is expendable. He charms others, why not his wife? In this scene too the smut was smutty but not dramatic. It like poetry is a matter of implication and human response. Sinclair will not let anyone say anything except himself — or at least that is his tendency often. The farmer's wife should first have been seen as something of a prude before we heard her earthy remarks in order to make it funny, or better still she might have pretended at first to be fast and loose and then proved otherwise.

Being one of the few stage plays of an habitual radio-writer, SOCRATES shows that the author is clever and witty but he is too concerned for ideas and not yet intent enough on character to be a good dramatist.

HART HOUSE CONCERTS

30 Years

Thirty years old! Thirty years of good music in the Great Hall of Hart House will be brought to a close this Sunday with the Glee Club concert there. Ever since the first concert on Nov. 12, 1922, there have been eight concerts a year on Sunday evenings in the Great Hall.

In their long history, the concerts have changed remarkably little. Even some of the artists that appeared in the early days are still appearing regularly, and playing much the same sort of music.

During the first year of Sunday Evening Concerts, every program closed with the singing of the Bach chorale "Turn, O My Soul", in which the audience joined. This practice was discontinued in the second year, but more recently, a similar custom has arisen every Christmas, when the audience joins the St. Mary Magdalene Singers in singing "The First Noel."

The shape of the printed programs has been the same ever since the concerts started—a little folded piece of stiff paper that just fits nicely into a coat pocket. Until the 100th concert, the outside was decorated with a sort of

OUR CRITICS

Unsung Heroes

Few will see in what way the critic is an unsung hero of the theatre; it is certainly impossible to discover any contribution made by those mean and miserable scribblers. But granting that the critic is no hero sung or unsung — he is and must be heroic in the noble Byronic sense —alone, cut off from human society, cynically looking for an ideal in the theatre that he knows does not nor cannot exist.

The critic must be on his toes at all times constantly aware that he is not as other mortals who can go about the world happy and unconcerned for the appearance of things, while he must maintain a hard objective view of life in order to keep in condition. An event at which others laugh and to which they respond must only make the critic draw back and try to discover why the people laugh or why they respond. It is because of this that critics become somewhat inhuman and the object of scorn and derison.

In the theatre world itself critics are regarded as merely a source of publicity because actors, directors, and managers know that he cannot know what it is all about when he never gets farther "into" the theatre than a seat somewhere on the aisle. Therefore the only people he can please are those who enjoy maliciousness for its own sake — people who do not like plays — who never go to plays but enjoy seeing them pulled apart.

It is for this reason that the best advice that could be given to a prospective critic who wants to preserve his "moral integrity" is the advice of a past master of the craft — George Bernard Shaw. Say the things that seriously matter, but toss them off as if you didn't care a straw. It is the only way to preserve your sanity. Of course no one will understand what you say but yourself, but no one will understand and it saves you from being disagreeable.

St. Mike's Put Meds Out 37-27

St. Michael's College Seniors eliminated St. Meds from the basketball wars yesterday as they dropped the Medsmen 37-27. The game was a well-played one with the Docs just not up to St. Mike's standard.

The winners went ahead 14-2 at the end of the first quarter and piled on the score to lead 26-16 before the end of the second. Meds managed to stay even in the final stanza, leaving the final score, 37-27.

Glynn was top man for the Mikemen, hooping ten points. O'Connor and Murmane with 8 and 7 followed him in the scoring, but every player on the team got into the act as the players all hit the scoring column.

Linson with eight and Coopersmith with six were the big guns in Med's dying efforts. The other players didn't put on such a balanced display and this made up the difference. The game was very cleanly played and kept well in hand by the referees.

If the Meds team had come up with a victory in the game, they would have forced a playoff with Senior SPS. As it was they finished the schedule two points below the Skulemen and were eliminated from the playoffs. This was the final game in group one as the teams now move into playoff competition.

St Mike's — Flynn, 1; Tramor, 4; Warne, 4; O'Connor, 8, Dillon, 1; Murmane, 7; Vojtisek, 2; Glynn, 10

Meds — Coopersmith, 6, Lindson, 8; Greenberg, 4; Goldberg, 4; Bamble, 3; Page, 2; Smith.

UWO Mustangs Trim Blues 53-43 Ray Monnot Top Scorer With 15

By MAL CRAWFORD

The Blues put themselves out of the running for Int collegiate Basketball honors last night when they lost a fa paced, if somewhat sloppy ball game to Western Mustan 53-43 at Mutual Street Arena. It was the Blues first loss a home court, after five wins. Western has now virtua cinched the championship again, having only to elimin McMaster who has a mathematical chance of tying t Mustangs.

Varsity led throughout the first quarter, and after dropping behind in the second period, regained it briefly in the third, but were scarcely in the ball game in the final quarter. Western repeating their routine as they went through when they beat Toronto at London last month, seemed to regard the first three periods as a warm-up, running wild in the last ten minutes and scoring 21 points.

High scorer for the game was Toronto's tall Ray Monnot, who scored 15 points. Lou Lukenda of Varsity and Western's Bill Pataky each netted 13, but outside of Monnot and Lukenda the Blues' shooting was but a shadow of what it has been in the past few games. Fawcett, who scored 18 points (five out of eight field goal attempts) at McMaster Saturday scored only four points, and Huycke, who has scored 20 points altogether in the last two games, could only find the hoop for two points.

Varsity started the game in complete control of the situation. Lukenda got the first one, then Monnot got two and Lukenda another as the Blues controlled the boards and made good their cha es.

Varsity led 9-0 before Chris lis got a foul shot to break goose-egg. Toronto led 13-8 quarter time. Orphuns Up 47-35 Revenge Colt Win

By FRANK QUINLAN

The Varsity JV's reversed an early season loss to Western as they swept to a convincing 47-35 win over the surprisingly inept Colts at Mutual last night. The score was tied 17-all at half time, but the Blues jumped into a 31-22 third quarter lead and won going away.

Frankie Palermo and Bill Corcoran were the high scorers for the JV's with 11 points each, while George Stulac added nine. Don Getty was best for the losers with nine markers, all in the first half.

Western took a 10-8 lead in the first period, and held it until the last minute of the second when Mandryk's lay-up and Stevens' tap-in of a missed foul shot pulled the Blues into a tie. Despite the closeness of the score, the game itself was slow and dull, and neither team was particularly outstanding either in shooting or in floor play. Stulac netted five points for the Blues in this half, but could make good on only one out of eight free throws.

The game livened up a bit in the second half as Varsity began to take charge. Garbutt hit with a long one-hander and Stulac spun one in from under the basket to put the JV's up 23-19 with five minutes remaining in the third frame. Tracey countered with a lay-up for the Colts, but Garbutt connected again, and Palermo dropped in a set to increase the margin to 27-21. Oli Mandryk's bucket made the score 31-22 at the end of the period.

The Blues exploded for 12 points in the first five minutes of the last quarter to erect a 43-23 lead, their largest of the game. Palermo and Corcoran spearheaded the attack with four points each. The Colts' Andy Maslak interrupted the string with a set shot as the Meltrasmen came back to close the gap to 45-35 with thirty seconds left. Palermo broke away for another score to give Varsity a 47-35 margin at the end of the game.

This one got away! Bob McLellan, McGill goalie missed stopping this shot. Gerry Henderson scored the goal in Toronto's home game with the Redmen earlier this season. Henderson has cut out of sight behind the net. This weekend the Blues will try to keep their hockey hopes alive by winning their two games because if they do they get that all important crack at first place when McGill visits here March 7 for the final game of the season.

They were playing out the string yesterday in intramural basketball as the schedule wound up in most groupings. Two anti-climax games took place in the major loop and they were surprisingly good in view of the fact that nothing was at stake.

Trinity A laced UC III, 43-30. Proverbs carried away the honours for Trinity, hooping 12 points. Corbett supported this with 7 and Sutton and Gray added 6 each. Miller got half the UC total with a 14-point day and Hurwitz was next best with 6.

Trinity B's splurged for 10 points in the last period to come from behind for a 27-21 win over Arch A. Hainsworth threw 10 for Trinity and Fisher was close behind with 9. Scott and Murray were 6-point men for Architecture.

Vic Hustlers edged IV Chem, 28-27. Tacon netted a dozen tallies for Vic, while Price got 7. Bank was a 9-point man for the Chemists and Phillips got 7 more.

St. Mike's Fisher rolled up a score of 45 in trouncing Pre-Med IIA. Cummings garnered a third of the Irishmen's total. Hunt swished 12 and Johnston 11.

Grapplers Go To-night

The Toronto University Wrestling team, although still recovering from last weekend's Intercollegiate championships, are facing two opponents this week. Tonight in the North York Memorial Gym, they are taking on the North York Athletic Club.

This team coached by Vic Jensen, 1950, 177 pound intercollegiate champion, was beaten by the Blues last December, 19-15. However, tonight the team will have many of their spots filled in by the intermediates as some of the boys are injured and others are catching up on their studies.

Joe Goldenberg is about the only Senior in tonight's line-up. Orie Loucks, 157 pound finalist was also a last minute Senior who joined the line-up.

Saturday night the Blues face Western, Senior Intercollegiate champions. Bill Bush will replace Orie Loucks at 157; Glen McCormick, intermediate champ, will probably start at 167; and Leon Smith is definitely replacing Chykaliuk at 177, because Chykaliuk is out with an infected knee and an injured elbow.

Despite the fact that Western are the champs and boast Captain Colin Hubling at 191 and the 123 pound man as individual champions, coach Kirk Wipper feels confident that his men can beat the Western champions.

The results of the intercollegiate meet were checked after the battle was over; OAC had thirty points instead of twenty-nine. This put them only one point behind the Blues, a surprising position for the Guelph matmen.

The tournament analysis for the meet was also released today. OAC made their big scoring spree Saturday afternoon when they picked up ten points from the consolation bouts. Varsity and Western were even during the evening but Western were up three in the afternoon.

The new scoring system borrowed from the States suggests big things for wrestling, agreed coach Wipper. This has been the closest meet ever held and now that wrestling is a team sport, it should awaken more interest in the future.

Trinity Face Vic In Noon Ice Fina

Vic Seniors and Trinity A's square off at 12:30 today in the second game of their final series for the Jennings Cup, awarded the intramural hockey champions.

It is a crucial contest for the Trinity squad. They were soundly beaten in the first game Monday when Vic swamped them 11-0, and must gain at least a saw-off to prolong their chances and the series. The cup goes to the team that is first to rack up four points so that a tie can keep the Buttery in the running.

Trinity will be hoping for the return to form of Pete Stewart who fizzled Monday after going on a five-goal spree when they eliminated Jr. Vic. The Crumpeters were definitely a long way off top form in Monday's shellacking and if their scorers can find the mark, they will at least put up an argument.

The strong Vic team features their razzle-dazzle defenceman and erstwhile Varsity Blue, Jim Machim, who put on quite a display Monday. Machim, along with Captain Bill Andrews, goes to make up a steady and always dangerous blue line corps. With scorers like Geoff White, Walt Stothers and Walton and Stur ing them all up in goal, the a very potent hockey force

In volleyball this week, the Nurses defeated IM, 58-26, in a one-sided contest at the LM gym. The Women in White set the pace in the first half with a 23-17 lead. Janie Cooley, Helen Blott and Barb Fink played well for the Nurses, while Mary Mathews and Anne MacDonald fought hard for IM.

IM went down to defeat again at the hands of PHE II by a score of 63-13. Helen Beinosz's steady playing and Lenore Elliot's well-placed spikes sparked the Pizzeders slaughter, while Marg Gardner turned in a good performance for IM.

In the third game, POT downed the Nurses 39-28, in a fast-exciting tilt.

Film Board Stops Show College Movie Too Dear

London (CUP) — National Film Board authorities have announced that their college movie which was to be filmed on the University of Western Ontario campus has been indefinitely postponed.

The Western Campus was chosen as the ideal campus for the N.F.B. feature-length film early in January. In addition to general background scenes a college dance scene with 150 Western couples participating had been planned by the Board as the climax to the picture. The dance scene had been re-scheduled to later this month, because of a lack of student dance couples.

It is thought that the whole picture project will be rescheduled next fall.

The announcement came shortly after the Minister of Finance, Dopuglas Abbott, released the National Film Board's annual budget. The N.F.B., under this budget, will be financially unable to make the "Western" movie.

The Gazette, the Western paper, said that a letter explaining the whole situation to the students was expected and would be printed on arrival.

University Cheaters Use Ponies

Ithaca (Exchange)— Results of a survey on cheating during examinations at Temple University revealed this week that of a test group of 500 students, 17 percent admitted cheating.

The test group was selected from 4,315 students, none of whom were required to sign the questionnaire.

Eighty-five members of this group admitted deliberate cheating by use of "ponies" or other translations brought into examination rooms, or by seeking help from nearby students during test.

Seventy-one percent — 355 students from the test group—admitted they had obtained examination questions in advance at one time or another.

The student - faculty committee on academic discipline said that "while cheating remains a serious problem at Temple, there is no more cribbing here than at any other large university in the country."

In Freedom's Name

A Daily Californian (University of California) editorial gives one view of criticism of American democracy.

"It's a free country isn't it?"

In a sentence that seems to be the favorite national summation of the Constitution, our legal tradition, our great men's great words. It is declared and shouted and mumbled all over the country, on street corners and in rural lanes—"It's a free country, isn't it?"

If ever there were a bond between people and a word, it is the one between Americans and "freedom." If we, as Americans, build a hospital or cheer a ball game, propose or oppose a law, seek justification for a security measure or foreign alliance, it is always done in the name of freedom.

We as Americans, are sometimes laughed at, with reason, for kidding ourselves, and chided, with reason, for hypocrisy; but the basis for all this — the hold that freedom has on American minds — cannot be laughed away. It has been the moving force of our democracy.

But today that force is being dissipated. It seems to have been immobilized by our new position in the world. Americans admire freedom in a looking glass, call this country's image freedom, while the real thing slips away, ignored.

It seems that nowadays we Americans have let ourselves believe that we are so wedded to freedom that it cannot be lost, no matter what strains are put on it. Individuals anoint themselves keepers of freedom, judges of who should and who should not enjoy it — and we listen to them.

Oaths of loyalty are prescribed, college forums are censored, pointing fingers bring the casual ruin of livelihood and reputations — and we let it pass.

Rules are set down for what we can say, and what we can hear and whom we can hear — all in freedom's name — and we accept them. As a result there is a stifling of our critical powers, our genius for progress.

Now it seems that we are willing to accept the idea that security must come first and liberty second in the struggle against communism. But security measures need not prey on freedom. Americans surely have not grown so dull in 170 years that they cannot tell a good idea from a bad one.

Common talk has it that individuals are ineffective in this huge country caught in the drift of world conflict—and yet—unless we exercise our rights, each of us, constantly, immediately, we may find that we are grasping a nettle and calling it freedom. In fact, freedom may die by our own hands and not by Communist aggression.

What freedom needs most today is exercise — not admiration, not tributes, not exposition, not protectors and administrators, but a vigorous use of independent thought and speech by 150 million Americans. We as American students must encourage people to speak their minds, to help overcome the fear instilled by repressive trends and to point up the true meaning of events which affect our freedom. Make an issue about what freedom really means; make freedom the topic of conversation in your living group and in your classes or over your evening cup of coffee.

Speak up! Freedom needs exercise!

Communism

Damned Elusive

We fight Communism abroad, but do we recognize it at home? The welfare state may simply be a first step towards Communism à la Brother Stalin, suggests Margaret Welch. Opinions expressed are not necessarily those of The Varsity.

Arising from Czarist autocracy of the 19th century, the Russian people in 1905 took fragile steps toward democracy, but were soon to turn in another direction, and with firm strides, tread the path of authoritarianism.

In Lenin was personified the iron discipline of the Communist Party which cried in its Manifesto "(We) by the forcible overthrow of all existing social conditions can become masters of the productive forces of society. Let the ruling classes tremble at a Communist revolution. The proletarians have nothing to lose but their chains. They have a world to win."

But Communism under the auspices of the Supreme Economic Council of Russia from 1917 to 1921 resulted in miserable chaos. Opposition to Communism through revolution in Russia grew stronger, until the New Economic Policy was adopted. NEP restored private enterprise subject to state control which brought industry and agriculture back to pre-World War I standards.

Lenin's death, in 1924, brought the conflicts about NEP and the total Communist theory to the surface within the Party. Trotsky favoured world-wide Communist revolution, and the supremacy of the proletariat as against that of the peasantry just as Marx had outlined. Stalin favoured a Communist experiment confined to Russia with peasant co-operation rather than subordination, and with use made of foreign capital and trade.

Stalin overpowered Trotsky, and began his series of five-year plans within the Russian borders. The world pretty well forgot about Communists for the time being.

But Moscow did not forget the world. In France, in China, in Peru, in the United States, and all over the world Comintern representatives, trained in Moscow were building Communist Party blocs, each named after its own country (e.g., Chinese Communist Party) but each affiliated with the Comintern in Russia, and directed by Stalin personally. They were preparing the way for the time when world domination would be feasible.

The Popular Front was to be employed. "We must capture the petite bourgeoisie as the Nazis have done. We must work on politicians who have been passed over, on doctors mired in mediocrity, lawyers sunk in poverty. A very useful tool is the lord who has lost his holdings . . . if we offer him ever so little he will gladly serve us. Whether we use the ambition of the ambitious or the disinterestedness of the romantic, or the hope of the liberals left over from the nineteenth century, you would be surprised from how many sectors we can get people to join with us and carry out our plans. And all the time remember that these progressive radical bourgeouis and their leftist cliques pass, while the party remains. In life there are no ethical victories. Morals are just so much dessert. How deluded you are if you have the romantic idea of revolution and its politics. You think the workers and peasants and middle class are full of noble intentions. What a mistake! The immense mass of our friends and enemies is made up on opportunists." These were to become "The servants of expediency," said Communist leader and teacher Mao Tse-tung in an instruction class at Moscow. "The greatest talent in this work, comrade is never to be associated with failure. Never to defend the weak, even when he is right. The more help they (the disenchanted) get from us in their pillage the more positions they will let us take and occupy . . . any person who receives our support and does not fulfill his part of the bargain must become the target for a frontal attack of pitiless ferocity. He must be destroyed. Either we must lay aside a few principles or we leave the way open to fascism."

What a noble cause.

We are acutely aware of the Kremlin-directed threat to the world today. We know about the tools of Communism; the general strikes, the coup d'état, the underground with its cells, the purges. We may even notice that where Nazism preached the big lie long and loud until it was instilled in the master race, Communism works upon the truth, pulling it and pushing it until it fits the party line . . . and hence is suitable for the masses.

As an external threat to our world, we recognize the enemy, but do we notice its infiltration?

We see signs of an underground movement both in Canada and the United States every once in a while and hear true confessions of the intellectuals to whom it appeals, if not of its exciting lures and plays upon the ego. Whittaker Chambers, an ex-Communist in the States, currently describes Communism as "The vision of man's mind displacing God as the creative intelligence of the world. It is the vision of man's liberated mind, by sole force of its rational intelligence, redre man's destiny and reorganizing man's life and world." This may hold appeal to the intelle who is not quite bright enough to realiz implies "Man" in the singular and not the pl who cannot envision the Kremlin as a dictato and not as the leader of a revolution which successful will have its organizing forces "w away".

Others prefer to see the crisis, not as a flict between communism and religion, but tween Communism and democracy. But it mu not whether one is a deist, pantheist or an ath the conflict remains one of the state versus individual.

There is another conflict today: one apart, yet heading toward totalitarian communism. I is a conflict between the state and individua "The battlefield of honest government, civic sponsibility, social conscience and human g osity will be the area in which the real batt fought." Within our democracy, individuality liberty and its responsibility) is becoming p The psychologist stresses mental education di ed toward making the individual as normal (u like to the kind) as possible in order to s mental turmoil. This inclination to be "just like everyone" is not something which has been forced upo but has become our own bugaboo.

Advertising is directed to the average o newspapers to the average reader, school g based on the average pupil, houses built fo average family. If you take comfort from truism that no one is really average you' damn fool.

And not only does this leveling process at random, but own whole society, including government structure is coming to uphold average, safe plateau. Plateau it is when forget that "all progress is made by the u sonable man": and safe it is in that by associating ourselves with radicals, we disass ourselves with Communism.

Not that I laud Communism or cry re for reaction's sake. The "grand, leading prin which I am advocating is the absolute and e tial importance of human development in its est diversity"—diversity which can only be ac ed on an individual plane.

We realize that authoritarian tactics in censorship of history, culture, ideas. But we notice that, with little assistance, we are this very thing.

We are abolishing the past, not by censori redirecting but by ignoring it — just as by ign a starving Eskimo in the Yukon we don't to feed him. We are doing the same with language. It's no great tragedy to split an in tive, but as Saturday Night pointed out last "inability to communicate effectively in Eng is closely connected with inability to receive tively ideas communicated in the same langu This decay of language also gives impact to s such as Stalin's "Peace! Land! Bread!" cry means nothing at all, but which is snatched by those who don't care a damn whether say anything or not.

In our gradual acceptance of the Welfare we are again ignoring responsibility by thro the problems of the aged, the unemployed, delinquent, and all of that ilk upon the go ment.

Is this really shirking? Aren't we the co ment? NO! Only so long as we are healthy tics of national control are we the governi Beyond that we become its slaves.

Should we then toss out all our newly fou social welfare schemes? Certainly not. But we should see the needs met within the fa and the community; or if this is too great a cial burden by private organizations such Canadian National Institute for the Blind

Let's not put all our economic, political cultural eggs into the one government b Brother Stalin waits only for the day when walk in and pick it up. And there will be no cry in Canada; just quiet sleep.

Well, what the hell! Haven't we fou couple world wars just to prove that the freedoms matter a little? And aren't we something or other for the starving millions where? In fact we suspect we're fighting a w Korea for something to do with democracy.

Yes, Communism is a menace we are ing. The Welfare State is another menace not doing much about. Both must be met alive, thinking conglomeration of people o whole mess of war is futile. Our continue interest in education (in its broadest sense loss of individuality will catapult us toward Orwell's world, while we quietly sleep. Or just resting in the calm before the battle?

A dangerous rest, a deadly sleep.

DEBATERS LOSE CANADA

Blackhall won the senior division with this picture which Judge John J. Lawson of the Toronto Camera Club, described as "a very delicate treatment of a snow landscape". Professor A. F. Coventry was the third judge.

Dominion Figment Of the Imagination UC Parl't Decides

Canada, according to the University College Parliament, does not exist. The motion, "that Canada is a figment of the imagination" was upheld at the UC Parliament yesterday by a vote of 18 to 17.

"We are culturally a mongrel," said Don Featherstone, II UC, first speaker for the motion. "For lack of substitutes we are forced to resort to the culture of another day and place. We are a nation of many allegiances, none of them to ourselves. Incapable of producing anything to compete with the blandishments of Hollywood and New York, we swallow them whole."

The United States would not want to spend money to buy Canada if it didn't really exist, said Inika Janecek, IV UC, speaking against the motion. Canada is directed by the Canadian people, not by Britain or the United States. In the field of culture, the Group of Seven has initiated a distinctive Canadian culture, she added.

"We have affiliations with London, and are influenced by Washington," said Kit Tyrrell, IV UC. "It is questionable how unfriendly we would be to Russia if the Americans were not hostile to her." Geographically, there is no Canada, and as far as the people are concerned, those in the different parts of the country have nothing in common with each other, she said. The fact that we are forced to use vague words, meaning nothing, such as "dominion" and "realm" to refer to Canada, shows that she is only a figment of the imagination.

The fact that we have been able to achieve political unity and follow a definite course of action shows that we are not a figment, said Dave Gauthier, II UC. Such men as Laurier and Mackenzie King have risen to power through national support, and held it for years, which shows that Canadians think in a certain way, and work together. An example of Canadian feeling is our reaction to the recent hysteria in the United States about the Communist scare. We have a number of national symbols, and speak one dialect of English from Eastern Ontario to British Columbia, a dialect not dependent on that spoken in the United States.

Candidates Must Take Soap Box

"Campaign speeches are coming back to the Hart House elections", Dave Gardner, assistant to the Warden, said yesterday.

"We hope to shoot some adrenalin into the Hart House elections by having each candidate give a short speech," Gardner added.

The first set of speeches will be given today in the East Common Room at 1:00 p.m. by candidates running for the Music Committee. Each of the nine running will have three minutes to state his views and will be clad in an academic gown. They will be allowed to use a platform for lectern.

Next Monday the Art Committee will take over at the same time and place but there will be 12 candidates that will speak. On Tuesday the House Committee's 14 candidates will have their say. On Wednesday the elections will take place.

Gardner hopes that there "will be lively speeches and lively responses, leading to a lively election."

This year the Library and Debates Committees have been elected by acclamation. Elections for the other three candidates will be Wednesday, March 5. All undergrad members are eligible.

Support Federated System As Engineers, Vic Debate

The motion that "the University of Toronto should not abolish the colleges and consolidate into faculties" was defeated by the Engineers in a debate between Skule and Victoria College yesterday. The deciding vote was cast by the speaker of the house after a tie was reached.

The first speaker for the affirmative, Ron Price, questioned the benefit the artsmen would derive from associating with engineers. He stated the only effect would be that the silence of the halls of Vic would be shattered by the roar of the Skule cannon. The difference between arts and professional men was that artsmen pursue knowledge for knowledge's sake while the professional men acquire knowledge in pursuit of gold, he said. He also denied that any students were prevented from entering any arts colleges on account of their religious beliefs.

"One of the main causes of student apathy is caused by the segregation of the colleges" said Morley Marks, leader of the opposition. As an example Marks pointed out that the Vic bob was held at Vic, by Vic and was about Vic, while Skule had activities like the chariot races that "were held at Skule and not by Skule and even the 'Artsman's Gazette' participated." He went on to suggest, "Skulemen should tear down Victoria College stone by stone and brick by brick, and use it to build a new Student Union."

Charles Price, also speaking for the Victoria College debating club, stated that if cliques existed in the art colleges, the situation would only be worse if they were consolidated, for the cliques would exist in the whole Arts faculty, which would create a hostility.

John Smale, the second speaker for the opposition stressed the savings that would be caused if the duplication of lectures and facilities in the individual colleges were avoided. He also stated that traditions would not be broken and as an example he gave UC.

A speaker from the floor suggested that "SPS is jealous, SPS wants our girls and we must therefore unite and defeat SPS." The most revealing statement nevertheless came from the speaker when he said that "any language is appropriate in the Victoria debating club" when a remark made by the leader of the opposition was challenged as not being in the English language.

Four Faiths To Be Aired On Tuesday

The beliefs of a Protestant, a Roman Catholic, a Hebrew, and an Agnostic will be aired on Tuesday when four University of Toronto students will participate in a discussion and open forum in the West Hall of University College at 4 p.m.

Bill Glenesk, II Emmanuel, will chair the meeting at which George Speers, III Emmanuel, Bill Davis, III St. Mike's, Dov Chetner, II SPS, and Jack Gray, an occasional student, will speak.

Chetner, a native of Calgary, spent one year working on a project in Israel. He is especially interested in irrigation.

The agnostic viewpoint will be given by Gray, a recent editor of The Varsity, while an American student, Davis, will speak on Roman Catholicism. Speers, who speaks on a Protestant's beliefs, was a track star at Victoria College in 1949.

The four men spoke at an open forum last Sunday on the topic "Why I am a . . . ". The symposium on Tuesday will be on the topic "What I Believe."

Chicago Educator Will Speak Here

Robert Maynard Hutchins, former Chancellor of the University of Chicago, now Associate Director of The Ford Foundation, will be guest speaker at Convocation Hall next Tuesday and Wednesday, March 4 and 5. His topic, "Some Questions in Education in North America," will be divided into two parts, one part to be given each night.

Professor Hutchins was born in Brooklyn in 1899. His family moved to Oberlin, Ohio, where he attended Oberlin College in 1915. Two years later he transferred to Yale. In 1917 he went abroad with an ambulance corps and a year later he was fighting with the Italian army.

He returned to Yale after the war and graduated in 1921. After teaching English and History for a year at a Lake Placid school, he returned to Yale to study Law. He graduated from law school in 1925 and began to teach the same year. He was Dean of Yale Law School for two years and in 1929 became President of the University of Chicago, the youngest man to become head of a major university in the United States.

He was regarded by some as a progressive pioneer in education, and by others as a rambunctious radical, a "boy wonder" (he was only 30) who scorned the voice of experience. He had unique ideas about education. His "Chicago Plan" was passed by the faculty in 12 minutes.

His plan eliminated required class attendance. Students could prepare for the examinations in any way they chose. He eliminated the course credit system and he substituted instead general examinations when the student was

Campus Profile

George Brown

By PEARL PARNES

"People seem to be afraid that they'll catch something if they use the word 'Dominion'. It's like the small-pox—a naughty word not for polite society." Professor George Brown of the History Department thinks the row over "Dominion of Canada" is silly. As far as a Canadian governor-general is concerned, however, he's all in favor of it, and further, of interchanges of the post among members of the Commonwealth. "It would be a good idea for a Canadian to go to Australia. We often thought Jan Smuts of South Africa would have made a good governor-general of Canada."

Prof. Brown is a graduate of the University of Toronto. He taught in a Saskatoon high school and in a Doukhobor settlement, and then went to Chicago for his Ph.D. After lecturing for a year at the University of Michigan, he came to Toronto, and, belying his young appearance, has been on the staff here for 27 years.

He started as a lecturer when Lester B. Pearson was on the staff, and went through all the stages until he became a full-fledged professor. After 20 years as editor of the Canadian Historical Review, he became editor-in-chief of the University Press in 1946. His job is the consideration of manuscripts for publication.

"The cost of printing is a great block in the publication of secondary books, and 4 out of 5 have to be subsidized by the profits of our printing plant", he explained. The press is the only one of its kind in Canada, and is among the top eight University Presses on the North American continent. It averages about 20 new books a year and seven academic journals.

"We make an effort to produce books of particularly fine quality, and the Press is a big factor in Canadian scholarship. About 60 manuscripts are submitted each year, with dozens of ideas and queries, in all sorts of fields. They are considered from the point of view of merit, their suitability for publication, and the means for financing them." The Press does a great deal of publishing in conjunction with organizations such as the Royal Society of Canada, the Ontario Research Foundation, and the Canadian Tax Foundation. About 20 percent of the publications are commercial or "best-selling" books, like MacGregor-Dawson's "Government of Canada". The others are subsidized out of the scholarly fund.

The Press, Prof. Brown explained with regret, is not able to publish creative literature as yet. "Our first obligation is to scholarly writing." He feels that Canadians are terribly introspective about Canadian culture. "We've made much progress—not only in terms of notable works of art, but in ways the public are not aware of, such as organizations working in the cultural field."

Dr. Brown spends three quarters of his time in the History Department, and the rest in a brightly-lit office under two of his wife's paintings. Whatever time is left over is spent in writing his own books, such as high-school textbook, "Building the Canadian Nation", and many articles. He was recently honoured by being asked to edit and write the introduction to the volume, "Canada", a joint publication by the University Presses of Toronto and California. Another text of his is the widely-read "Canadian Democracy in Action." The Press, Dr. Brown explains, doesn't go into the secondary-school text-book field. "They are the bread and butter of the commercial publisher."

Prof. Brown has some pet ideas on the general topic of education. "There is no single road towards education. You can get a good education in any line. Understandably, of coure, I think history provides a real medium to wisdom and perspective." As far as the lessons of history, the professor uses the anology of amnesia. "The person suffering from amnesia is in a bad way. if society suffered from amnesia, it would be in as bad a state. So history must teach something."

In addition to all his other activities, Dr. Brown is on the research committee of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, and was president of the Canadian Historical Association.

For his other interests, he is content to watch his wife paint. "I am no good visually or dexterously", he complains. Except with a pen, Dr. Brown!

CUP FORUM

Where Stands The Naturalist?

The following is an article published in a recent issue of The Western Gazette. It is a criticism of the current series of articles in the Saturday Evening Post on Communism.

The first installment of Whittaker Chambers' own story appeared recently in The Saturday Evening Post. In a moving letter to his children Chambers analyses the present ideological conflict in the light of his experiences as a Communist and his subsquent break with the party.

The sincerity of the man is written large in every line. Communists, argues Chambers, are not scheming, blackhearted scoundrels; they are sincerely dedicated human beings. At the heart of Communism lies the conviction that it is necessary to change the world. Its adherents are that part of mankind that has recovered the power to live or die for its faith. But, says Chambers, theirs is a vision of Man without God, the vision of a world guided by the sole force of intelligence. In this way he reduces the world struggle to Godliness versus Godlessness.

This thesis is a very convincing one and will doubtless find favor in the Western world particularly in theological circles. It is not novel but gains a sense of conviction by willingness to give the Communist his due. Chambers is remarkably free from rancor. He never stoops to calling names.

He is also on firm ground in his over-simplification of the problem because the mass revolutionary movements of history are stimulated by very fundamental faiths. The elaborate philosophical foundations may give the vision a firmer core to satisfy the intellectual but the energizing power lies at the heart of the concept freed from its rationalizations and packaged in a wrapping of emotionality.

Unfortunately Chambers falls prey to a process that plagues much thinking on this subject — that of identification. Thus if the Communist believes A, B, C, and D, anyone else believing A though he may reject B, C, and D is lumped with the Communist in order to reduce everything to one basic dichotomy. For Chambers there is faith with and faith without God. (Oddly enouh Chambers doesn't feel in need of defining what he means by God.) Whether they like it or not naturalists, positivists, scientific humanists, agnostics, atheists and anyone else who for one reason or another rejects the popular Deity—all are tossed into the Red category as opposition to the forces of piety.

But this is fantastic. He tacitly admits that the evil in Communism is its refusal to recognize certain emotional values as having a place in the world of the future. On careful examination it becomes plain that it is not the lack of God in Communism that is dangerous but what Chambers thinks is the necessary result of that lack. But because the Communist throws the baby out with the bath one is hardly entitled to assume that the bath and the baby are inseparably joined.

Chambers seems to forget that history records some horrible crimes committed in the name of God. The very human values of love, kindness and good-will can be defended on the basis of intelligence and experience and are not in need of theological justification. Mr. Chambers notwithstanding, the Russian Marxist is not a good example of the modern naturalist. By submerging those emotional values that hinder his revolution he has destroyed his capacity for enjoying the fruits of that revolution. Or, if you wish, he has destroyed his soul.

On the other hand the great motivating forces the faiths of mankind are seldom able to stand up under critical analysis. Chambers is this much right, the soul does have a logic all its own and unfortunately the demand of the soul is for the extreme. The middle road is the safer, saner one but it is not the road of self-sacrifice.

The naturalist stands in the no-man's-land of the present struggle, unable to identify himself wholeheartedly with either side, and equally unable to be effective himself. Chambers lumps him willy-nilly with the Communists under the illusion that there can be no neutrality here because for Chambers one side or the other must be completely victorious. He has ignored Hegel's lesson. Neither concept will emerge unscathed, the victor will bear the scar of the vanquished. And this is the naturalist's consolation that either way he stands to triumph in the synthesis.

Peace Club Meets Tues.

The University of Toronto Peace Council will have a business meeting at 1 p.m. on Tuesday in Room 1085, Wallberg Building.

Last Tuesday a meeting was called by Don Anderson, IV Meds, to discuss what action might be taken to stir the Peace Council to action. Anderson charged at the meeting that "he would be glad to function in the structure of the present Peace Council" but that no meetings were being held. He said that the constitution of the Peace Council calls for a monthly meeting.

Gone is the apple vendor! To-day within the sacred walls of Hart House a mechanical gadget dispenses objects to the unsuspecting men who put in a nickel and hope for the best. Any resemblance between these objects and apples is purely coincidental.

AN APPLE

By Another Name

Put a nickel in and an apple should come out. If it doesn't the Tuck Shop in the basement of Hart House will give the unlucky student a big, juicy red orange.

While a poll hasn't been taken, it is estimated that most of the apples do not have stems (stemless apples slip through the machine with less chance of blockage). Some of the apples are freckled but none are manhandled.

At one time it was rumored that a group of commerce students were trying to corner the apple market on the campus. It was reported that they had secured an old Ukrainian recipe for making aged, strained apple juice by using yeast. However the plot was foiled by an engineer who painted the machine green and put on it a sign reading "Reserved for the Bookstore."

Most people do not realize the close relation of the apple to the rose. According to a dictionary an apple is the common edible fruit, usually round and red when ripe, of a tree of the rose family. Among the by-products of apples are apple butter (a thick spiced applesauce), apple jack (also spiced) and applesauce (apples stewed to a soft pulp). Most of these products bear very little relation to roses. One never speaks of apples of remembrance, of a corsage of apples, or of attar of apples. And who has heard the adage "a rose a day keeps the doctor away"?

Perhaps one of these days a student will put a nickel in the apple machine and out will come a tea rose.

And then of course there was the student who had his hand polished when he put a nickel in the machine by the barbershop and reached down for an apple.

Policy Of Trade Unions To Play Significant Role In World Events: Millard

"The outcome of the struggle between East and West will depend on the attitudes and actions of organized Labour," said Charles Millard to a group meeting in UC last evening. Millard's address on "Present Trends in Canadian Labour" was sponsored by the University of Toronto CCF club.

Millard was described by CCF club president Walter Parker as "a leading trade union leader in Canada". As president of the United Steel Workers of Canada, Millard has represented Canadian Labour at international conferences. He was formerly MPP for West York riding.

Millard indicated that most of the efforts in Canadian Labour until now have been directed toward the realistic recognition of Labour in the community. Although in the earlier stages employers treated unionism "like small-pox—try to keep from getting it, but if you do get rid of it quickly," most employers today "by and large take the position that unions are here to stay," said Millard.

Subsequent efforts sought unity in disregard for race or creed, Millard said. "I once held the naive idea that it would be simple to break down prejudices among workers," he said, adding that it was practically difficult.

"Any body of organized workers is, in fact, a political body," Millard stated. Non-partisanship creates a political vacuum, which is easily filled with Communism, he added.

One of the greatest problems facing Labour today is to develop maturity among the workers and leaders and thus the respect of the community, Millard suggested. Teachers, white-collar workers, and some of the professions are beginning to realize that nothing short of trade unionism, whether called that or not, will be effective in gaining their ends of better conditions of employment, he said

This maturity will be accomplished through the education of the workers and their leaders beyond the superficial practices used in collective bargaining, Millard stated.

"Unions have a very important role to play on the international front," he said. There is little understanding of the real problems in Europe, Asia and Africa, he suggested. The press pays more attention to Kurt Mever than to significant Labour actions in West Germany, Millard said.

"The challenge in India is not Communism," he said, "but a challenge of social security." Communism will not succeed "if we provide these people with a ray of hope that democracy will work," he added. Millard cited the example of the Trades and Labour Congress who have set up a South East Asia Training Fund which will bring workers to Canada to study our methods.

The lack of understanding between Labour in various parts of the world is as much our fault as anyone's, Millard suggested. "The Labour movement in India, Burma, Egypt and the Sudan is really on the march," he added, but we must foster co-operative understanding if we are to prevent international competition and interference, he concluded.

Discussing Canadian immigration policy, Millard suggested that we bring more displaced persons to Canada in order to relieve the poverty in less prosperous countries, and thus promote international understanding. Tied in with this policy is the necessity for bringing in suitable proportions of incapacitated persons, which is just as much our responsibility as receiving employables, he added. Millard stated that he was not in favour of bringing in skilled workers. He stated that it would disrupt our own labour system and drain valuable skills from struggling countries.

Jungle Photos In Color Film

An outstanding color film "Jungle Wildlife in British Guiana" will be presented by Mr. Dick Bird, naturalist-photographer, at a publisc lecture before the Royal Canadian Institute on Saturday evening, March 1 in Convocation Hall.

Colorful shots of such widely diversified subjects as the Easter kite-flying festival in Georgetown, British Guiana; the opening of the Colonial Parliament; the presentation of the colors to the British Guiana Regiment by Princess Alice; shots of bird-eating spiders and other insects; monkeys, sloths, ant eaters and many other creatures of the jungle trails will be shown. Mr. Bird will also show one of the largest Hydroponicums in the world, where vegetables are grown in quantity in sterile gravel without soil.

A native of England, but an "off and on" resident of Canada for about forty-five years, Mr. Bird has made films in sixty-eight different countries, covering wars in Europe and the Orient; revolutions in Mexico and Spain; famine in China; pearl divers in the South Seas; big game trails in Africa; and travelogues in South America, Asia, and other parts of the world.

A Fellow of the Zoological Society of London, and an Associate of the Royal Photographic Society of London, Mr. Bird has earned many honours during his years in the field of motion pictures, among which are a number from photographic organizations in Europe, and he enjoys, with Karsh of Ottawa, the distinction of being one of the only two Canadians to receive a Fellowship in the Photographic Society of America.

Gauthier, Bull Win Robinette

Dave Gauthier and Roger Bull, both II UC, are this year's winners of the Robinette Debates. On Wednesday, the winners faced Chuck Hanley and Norm Stoner, the third year finalists, to take the traditional pewter mugs.

Neville Taylor and Earle Berger were the first year finalists, while the team of Vern Turner and Bert Bloom won out over the other fourth year debaters.

UC Lit director Albert Strauss said yesterday that there were approximately twenty teams in this year's Robinette Debates. He said that nine of the teams were from last year.

Gauthier and Bull will debate against the co-eds who win the Portia Debates at the next UC Red and White Night.

Play Readers Sought By Gill

Casting for the first two Hart House productions of next year will begin next week. These plays are THE ADMIRABLE CRICHTON by J. M. Barrie and LILIOM by Ferenc Molnar which will be produced in October and November respectively of the 52-53 season.

Robert Gill the director of Hart House Theatre expressed the wish that anyone who is remotely interested in appearing in any of the Hart House plays should come to readings. Now that enrolment is down there are not as many students trying out for the plays and Mr. Gill feels that there are people who are interested but who have never tried out for a part.

Students wishing to read for either of these plays can make an appointment to read for Mr. Gill by going to the Hart House box-office or by phoning the office at MI. 7193. Readings start on Wed. March 5th.

ready for them. In one course the students read and discussed the great classics from Homer to Freud instead of using pre-arranged 'pills' from text books. This course was adopted by Columbia University in 1939 and was made compulsory for Freshmen. His ideas are expressed in his book "Higher Learning in America" which was published in 1936.

By 1942 students who had completed their sophomore year of high school were admitted to the University. A B.A. was awarded at the end of a program that normally required four years and now was completed at the end of the sophomore year of traditional colleges.

Professor Hutchins believes that the function of a University is not social or athletic, but that "college should teach students to think for themselves." In 1939 intercollegiate football was abandoned at Chicago. His comment to the protests that arose was "There is no doubt on the whole that football has been a major handicap to education in the United States."

When the problem of the draft arose Professor Hutchins said that he did not favor exemption for college and university students as such since many would enroll just to escape the draft.

Professor Hutchins, who has refused positions offered to him by the late William Randolph Hearst and Franklin D. Roosevelt, and the Presidency of the New York Stock Exchange, became Associate Director of the Ford Foundation in 1950.

SCIENCE NOTES

The Worm And Odontalgia

By BOB RAPP

"Maximus tormentes annumerari potest." Toothache may be counted among the greatest tortures, was the opinon of the Roman physician Celsus. From this it may be seen that Odontalgia has had an extensive but inglorious past.

Our ancestors, though unscientific, were imaginative on the subject of dental pain. This affliction, together with the dangerous condition of Love, was thought to

"I am troubled
With a toothache, or with love,
I know not whither,
There is a worm in both."

Some of the more unscrupulous practitioners of the time would dexterously extract reasonable facsimiles thereof from the oral cavities of their patients and claim to have produced a cure.

The tooth is composed of a crown covered with enamel and dentine, and a root covered with cementum and dentine. Inside the tooth is the pulp chamber containing pulpal tissue composed of blood vessels, lymphatics, dentine forming cells, connective tissue, and nerves. These nerves enter the tooth at the apex of the root, pass coronally and break into smaller branches which end at the dentine border.

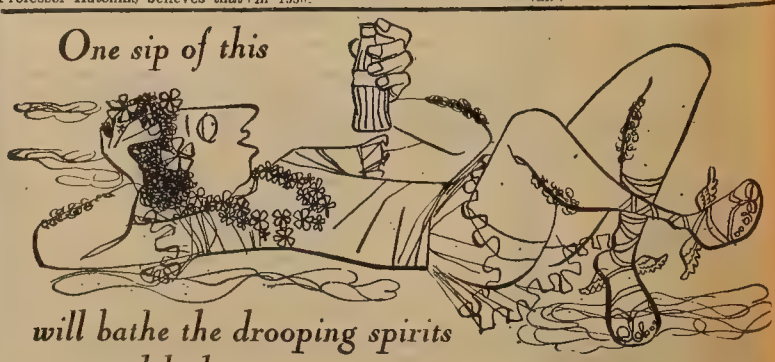
The dentine contains tubules holding cytoplasmic processes indirectly in contact with the nerves. Thus sensations are referred ones, the hard tissues having no nerves themselves. Surrounding the tooth is its supporting membrane containing its own nerve supply.

As you have probably noticed, the pulp of a tooth has no sense of touch or localization, responding to all stimuli it receives by sensations of pain. Pain originating from a pulp may be referred to almost any point on the same side of the jaw supplied by the fifth cranial nerve. The cause of a toothache (which is only a symptom of an exciting disturbance) depends on whether this disturbance affects the pulp or the periodontal membrane.

The ache produced by a cavity is really caused by bacteria or whatever agents cause decay. Trauma affecting both the pulp and the membrane is a definite cause of pain. Chemicals either placed on the tooth previous to filling or those arising from food and its decomposition stimulate the pulp causing odontalgia. Food becoming impacted into the pericemental membrane produces a painful abscess. Degeneration of the pulpal tissue with resulting hyperemia (increased blood supply) or production of gas within a tightly closed chamber causes pressure upon the pulpal nerves with resulting pain.

Shakespeare can provide the summary of this column:

"For there was never yet philosopher
That could endure the toothache patiently."



Guidance On Jobs Sponsored By Vic

Beginning next week the Victoria College Alumni Association will sponsor a series of eight Vocational Guidance lectures. Although the lectures will be of special interests to seniors, all undergraduate students will be welcome.

In the opening lecture on Monday J. K. Bradford, Director of the University of Toronto Placement Service will speak on "How to get a Job." In the second lecture I. D. A. Cook, Employment Supervisor of the Bell Telephone Company will discuss "Personnel." On Wednesday J. D. Arnup of the law firm Mason, Fouls Arnup and Weir will talk on "Law", and the following day J. R. M. Wilson of Clarkson, Gordon and Company will discuss "Accountancy."

The topics for the week of March 10 will include "Teaching", "Advertising", "Ministry" and "Sales and Merchandising." The lectures, which will run from Monday to Thursday of both weeks, will be held in Vic Alumni Hall at 4.15 p.m. A question and discussion period will follow each talk.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

Comic books, Mickey Spillaine and science-fiction will fill up the reading time for most adolescents today. This new change in taste has had much to do with the eclipse of the English boys' magazines, so popular among the high school set in the 1930s. Of course, the interruption of the 1939 war and the British paper shortages also hit the boys' weeklies badly.

That is why the odd Triumph, Hotspur or Champion on well-stocked magazine-stands in large Canadian cities get less than a second glance now. These magazines seem dated somehow; our teen-age tastes are much more conditioned to American bloodshed and sex, rather than British public school sportsmanship and clean sexless adventure. The Governor-General has fair reason for anxiety.

TOM BROWN'S SCHOOLDAYS (International) seems dated in the same way. Not because of the Victorian attitudes of the Thomas Hughes novel, but because of the closer ties with the boys'-weekly formula. But, as in the case of Dickensian films, as screen fare TOM BROWN'S SCHOOLDAYS has its rewarding aspects. Somehow we expect British films to emphasize British traditions, even if these are of the Gem and Magnet magazine variety.

The Gem and The Magnet, for those of us who don't remember when Superman first burst upon the scene in Action Comics, were two English tuppence weeklies (five cents at the corner confectionery). Billy Bunter, Harry Wharton and Co., Gussie D'Arcy were among the public school fellows, whose perennial adventures we followed week by week. There were cads among the characters, usually in Senior Forms, like Loder, Racke, Crooke, etc.

And here the red-blooded Canuck learned about fagging, the never-broken rule of not peaching on others, the cruel sadistic (a word we did not know of course) master, the young sportsman master, and so on. With the advent of Famous Funnies, Ace Comics and the Superman-Batman entourage, these milder forms of adventure-fiction paled into oblivion. It is only with a film like TOM BROWN'S SCHOOLDAYS that we are reminded of the days and values that used to be for some of us near-greybeards.

TOM BROWN'S SCHOOLDAYS is photographed and directed in the manner of the best Dickens pieces, OLIVER TWIST, GREAT EXPECTATIONS, etc. The background of Rugby public school is beautifully used, some of the black-and-white shots are breathtakingly effective. This style, plus the work of several solid British character actors, is the highest virtue of this new film. The analogy to OLIVER TWIST can be drawn even more closely. Both John Howard Davies and Robert Newton are in TOM BROWN also. The young pinched-face Davies is Tom Brown through his first timid days of fagging to second-form superiority. Newton is a mild Doctor Arnold, the famous headmaster of Rugby Chapel.

As mentioned above, the script of TOM BROWN is closer to The Gem and The Magnet than the heavily moralistic of Thackeraean Hughes' original. The bully Flashman has been considerably magnified, and it is Tom and his friend East find their fulfillment when the bully is found out and expelled. A strong disciple of the Arnold reform which is more strongly stressed in the film than in the novel, is added to the scene in the form of a junior master. This Judd even winks at Brown and East after they have finally given Flashman a pummelling. But all this does make an exciting film. The only sad thing is the sentimental soppiness which bathes the denouement. Still it does seem authentically Victorian somehow.

Young Davies is very convincing as Tom Brown. But John Charlesworth as East and John Forrest as Flashman are even better. Newton's Arnold is unsatisfying, but this may be the fault of a skimpy role. Diana Wynward, Kathleen Byron, and Hermione Baddeley are among those present.

* * * *

One of the worst things about a day is that there are only 24 hours. That is why some superlative films now current have not been touched upon in this column. These include DEATH OF A SALESMAN, THE MAN IN THE WHITE SUIT, as well as the incoming VIVA ZAPATA. Next week, there will be a serious attempt to cover these films, as well as to get as much information as possible on forthcoming films. RASHOMON, the Japanese film that topped the Venice Festival, is the next feature at the Towne Cinema for instance.

Hunter Lauds Socialism As The Natural Prelude To The Communist State

"Socialism is no longer a dream; it does exist today and can be examined in practice," Harry Hunter, organizational secretary of the Toronto Labor Progressive Party, told a noon-hour meeting of the campus LPP Club yesterday. He said socialism "assured the fullest development of mental and physical labor, and the growth of humanity as a whole wiping out class and national differences."

Hunter has been active as a trade unionist and spoke at the last of a lecture-series on "Marxism". His topic was "What Is Socialism?"

Hunter viewed socialism as a transition stage from capitalism to communism. He said it would provide the full expression of individuality, not in competition but in co-operation "so that the fullest development of all can be achieved. Millions believe it can become a reality," he added.

Hunter claimed there was a tendency toward regimentation in the system in which we live. "Capitalism itself regiments," he said.

The speaker further believed there was no real equality of economic opportunity under capitalism. He explained that there was a "vast talent in our country that is being prevented from developing to the fullest." Under capitalism "mankind suffers greatly," he continued, "ambitions are thwarted, degradation is present, and the danger of war hangs over his head." This was not so in socialism and communism, he said.

"Socialism is the practical application of the science and humanism Sidney Smith has talked about," Hunter said. He was referring to the recent speech by Dr. Smith on "Unity of Knowledge; the Sciences and the Humanities" delivered to the Royal Canadian Institute.

Socialism rejects the idea of exploitation of one man over the other, the speaker declared. "It (socialism) is the struggle of mankind to utilize his environment to establish a world free from war and a developing humanity reaching newer and higher levels."

Chairman Shirley Endicott hinted that Tim Buck, national leader of the Labor Progressive Party, may be invited to speak on the campus next Thursday. However nothing, as yet, is definite. Buck has spoken at the University in the last four out of five years.

Old Reliable Employers Register Jobs At SAC

All the old reliable employers and a few exceptional new ones have registered jobs with the Men's Employment Office in Hart House, E. J. Halse of the Employment Service said yesterday. He added that most of the men in Engineering had already had interviews with prospective employers.

For those who are not yet located, there are many opportunities, he said. First year Civil Engineering students may have their way paid to jobs in Alberta, and back, with room and board there, while the Hydro announced recently that they have several vacancies, especially in out-of-town areas, for Electrical and Engineering Physics students.

New openings have also appeared for Arts students. The Canadian Pacific Railway has positions for railway porters, while the Owen Sound Transportation Company needs waiters, Halse said. He added that virtually all employers who registered with the Hart House office last year had returned, and that while there were few significant new additions, he expected no difficulty in matching last year's record of placing 3,500 men.

Starting Monday a representative of the National Employment Service will be at the Women's SAC office in the University College basement to register women of the University for summer jobs.

Pacific Pact Like NATO —McGill Bill

Montreal (CUP) — A bill calling for a Pacific Defence Organization to combat external aggression in Asia will be presented at a Model Parliament at McGill University. The plan—proposed by the Conservative Party—calls for an organization similar to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. One of the reasons for the organization as explained in the bill's preamble, is to "adequately restrain the Communist External Aggression, which is threatening the nations adjacent to the Pacific Ocean."

High Flying Line . . .

The hottest line currently wearing the hockey Blue and White is the Phil Arrowsmith, Jack McKenzie, and Ernie Frey. Arrowsmith scored the tying goal in last Friday's game. Frey is the team's top scorer with six goals and seven assists. McKenzie is tied with Don Rope for the highest goal production, seven. They have their stiffest test this season Friday and Saturday, when they play McGill and Montreal at Montreal.

Blues, McGill Play At A-Nite On Saturday

Basketball will be back as the feature attraction at Athletic Night this Saturday after a week's absence, as Varsity plays McGill in the first Intercollegiate game held in Hart House this season. The first game will be the Junior Varsity playing Ontario Aggies.

The Blues, though out of the running for the championship, still have a hope of tying McMaster for second. They play their return game with Mac next Wednesday, but meantime must beat the cellar dwellers, McGill. Varsity beat McGill in Montreal 77-54. One of the Blues' best games last season was their match with McGill, when they beat the Redmen 73-33.

The JV's are doing a little better, still stand a chance of winning their group championship again. This is their first league game in Hart House..

The wrestling team gets a chance to show Western, the winners of the championship meet last week, which team is the better in a dual meet, with just Western and Varsity in action. A team which has several stars but lacks depth will usually do well in a large meet, but come out on the wrong end of a close dual meet.

The chance of a trip to Cleveland is at hand for the Blues who fight well Saturday. Coach Kirk Wipper entered two wrestlers, Bill Dingwall and Hugh Graham, in the National Championships last year, and has similar ideas this year if he thinks his material is of sufficient calibre.

Two of Varsity's best, however, are doubtful starters. Bill Ohykaliuk is still bothered with a festered knee, with which he was hospitalized last month, and an injured elbow. Joe Goldenberg has pulled ligaments in his chest.

The action in the pool will be something different. Instead of hairy chests and bony legs, the objects of spectator interest will be a group of shapely coeds, who are putting on a display of synchronized swimming.

Meds Triumph Haines Nets 6

In the quarter finals this week, Meds walloped POT II, 13-0, in a one-sided effort at the arena. Irene Haines was chief surgeon for the Doctors with 6 goals. Sally Sarles counted for 4 tallies while Marg Platts netted 2 and Marilyn Sonley nabbed the final counter. Pat Thompson and Janie Hammond fought hard for the thoroughly outclassed Physots.

Vic I and St. Hildas I battled to a two-all tie, forcing a second game which was played at eight o'clock this morning.

Speaking Of Sport

By BOB GODSON

The sports fans of a nation stayed home last New Year's day to watch the coast to coast televising of the Rose Bowl game from California. As a result, attendance was down at nearly all the other Bowl games. One of the lesser known games played to a crowd of about a quarter of the capacity of the stadium and went into the red.

The devastating effect of television on U.S. sports is clearly shown in professional athletics. Nearly half of the National Football League teams either lost money or made very small profits. The New York Yankee football club lost thousands of dollars due to poor attendance, which owner Ted Collins blamed on television. The televising of boxing bouts has cut crowds tremendously. A recent bout at St. Nicholas Arena in New York drew under 400 people. The National Hockey League has also felt TV's sting. The Chicago Black Hawks were losing so much money on Sunday night games (which were televised), that they switched to playing on Sunday afternoons (which were not televised). The attendance at the afternoon games nearly tripled.

The CBC has announced the inauguration of TV in Toronto in July of this year, and will probably attempt to televise college athletics. It would be interesting to see if the effect would be the same here as it was on college sports across the border.

An interesting fact is that when a team is winning, television has proved a boom to attendance. You can pick the good from the bad by watching games on TV for free and then spend your money going down to see the team which impresses you most and is usually winning.

Varsity is looking forward to successful years in hockey, basketball and especially football. If this turns out, the televising of these major sports will be a good thing. Since people like to come to games to see a winning team and since TV will have such a large viewing audience, television should prove an incentive to attendance. The population of greater Toronto is over a million and it is expected that over half will have access to TV in a year or two.

It will prove an incentive to the public school and high school athletes, who will look forward to some day playing games which will be televised, especially with University clubs. The success of all this and especially the maintenance of attendance will depend on how good Toronto teams are in the future — if and when Varsity sports are televised.

Television will be a way of getting to young athletes the thrill of playing for University teams. Toronto has always had the biggest field of potential athletes and there is no reason why Varsity shouldn't have winning teams.

However if Blue teams do bog down and fail to make good showings against the other colleges as they did last night in the game with Western, the same thing will probably happen here as it has in the United States. Attendance will drop at the games as the average spectator will want to stay home, relax, and watch the Argonauts roll to another victory over the Montreal Alouettes.

2 Big Games For Sr. Blues

The Hockey Blues left yesterday on their final road trip of the season, and will play McGill at the Forum tonight and the U. of M. tomorrow at Verdun. The Blues must at least gain a tie with McGill and a win against the Carabins if they hope to tie the league leading Carabins.

There are several player changes for the week-end series. Sandy Davison has been elevated from the Intermediates to take the place of Norm Fox at centre on the third line between Al Conboy and Pete Vernon. Jim Wilkes who cracked a rib in an exhibition game on Saturday made the trip and will likely play in place of Jack Wheldrake tonight. Wheldrake who has been recovering from an infection which kept him out of last Friday's game, will probably take up his regular positon against the Carabins along side of Don Rope and John Adams. With both the Rope line and the third lines juggled, much of the burden will fall on the MacKenzie-Frey-Arrowsmith line which is the only original trio intact at present. Even at that, Captain Frey is still favouring a sore knee.

John Fingland who saw action with last year's Blues has also been brought up from the Intermediates, to replace Paul Prendergast who didn't make the trip. Fingland will likely play along side of Red Stephen. Regulars Gerry Fitzhenry and Al Fasan will form the other defence duo.

No further word has been received regarding Montreal's protest about last Friday's game. However, they have sent a cheque for $25.00 as a bond of good faith for their protest. Just what will be done by the Intercollegiate Union is not known since no official reason for the protest has been filed as yet.

Varsity Boxers Off For Queen's To Regain Title

The Blue Boxing team, slightly depleted by injuries and other impediments, is off to Kingston to try to regain the Intercollegiate championship. Only one, Howard Greenley, won the championship in his weight group last year, so they will be almost a cinch to do no worse this year.

A last-minute change was required a day before the team left. Larry Waden, who replaced John Green, out with a broken hand, in the 165 pound class, could not go and had to be replaced himself. As a result, Pete Petcoff, who was a couple of pounds over his 155 pound class limit, moved up to 165 and Herb Tilson was injected into the line-up in Petcoff's place. Tilson has had little boxing experience, but is a good all-round athlete and is long on courage.

In the 125 pound class, Nick Betz represents the Blue and White. The present champ, Smith of Queen's, has graduated Russ Reilly is in the 135 pound class, where the champ, Sweet, also of Queen's, is back this year. Mike Wright fights in the 140 pound class. The champion in that class, Doane of OAC, has moved up to the 147 pound class, where Roberto Cuciero is entered for Toronto.

Howard Greenley fights in the 165 pound class, defending his championship. Taimo Pallandi is the heavyweight

From Collingwood to Hamilton and back again at Hart House, it's a big weekend for sports-minded Toronto Co-eds. On Saturday morning, at 10:30, the skiing queens will push off from Collingwood slopes to begin the intramural ski races. The downhill events are being run on the Dieppe Hill, while the slalom takes place on the Schuss. There are eighteen entrants participating, representing Trinity College, UC, PandOT, and PHE. Victoria may enter some latecomers. Balancing on the hickories again this year are Barb Redfern, UC, and Ann Sharp, PHE, who both made a good showing in '51. Highest scorer will be given a shiny cup to take home.

In Hamilton on Saturday afternoon, the Varsity Volleyball team meets McMaster, OAC, and Western in a round robin tournament to decide the Intercollegiate championship. McMaster won the laurels last year, and in spite of a 55-24 trouncing at the hands of the Varsity squad at the LM gym last Monday, they are still considered to be the team to beat on Saturday.

The Toronto girls are coached by Tove Jensen, OCE, who played Intercollegiate volleyball last year. Veterans of the '51 team who are playing this year include Barb Watts and Nancy Allen (of the sensational spiking) both of Trinity.

Thirty-two girls take to the water at the Athletic Night Saturday in Hart House, in a two hour display-competition of synchronized swimming. The girls are grouped into four teams and the competition will take place between these teams, not on an interfaculty basis. The gals are swimming under the "nomme de plumes" of the "Jelly Fish", the "Flying Porpoises", the "See-horses", and the "Gorgeous Guppies".

Numbers range from solos to quartets, and are set to such scintillating melodies as "Serenade to a Lemonade". All the choreography plus the selection of the music has been left entirely to the girls. Miss Baxter has been on hand to help with any difficulties, but from sounds emiting from the LM pool this week the mermaids have everything under control. For a show that's easy on the eyes as well as the ears, drop into the HH pool on Saturday. The mist rises at 7:30.

Vic Srs. Take Hockey Cup Blast Trinity A's 12 to 3

Vic Seniors waltzed to the Jennings Cup and the Intramural hockey championship yesterday when they registered their second straight victory over Trinity A's, 12-3. The Vicsters had erupted for an 11-0 win in Monday's first game and, after pouring in six goals in the first period yesterday, were shoo-ins for the title.

Captain Bill Andrew led the Scarlet and Gold in trampling the outclassed Trinity six. He shot four goals from his blue line post. Jim Machim gave another outstanding display on defence and managed to score once and set up another tally. Marshall potted a couple of goals in the space of 20 seconds in the third stanza.

Mike Creole worked hard in a vain attempt to put a little spark in a Trinity team that seemed to see the hand-writing on the wall. Pete Stewart went well on the front wall as did Ketchum who notched a pair of second-period goals. Butch Bowden was effective on defence with hustle that was unique.

Four Vic goals in the first 7 minutes had the Trinity supporters groaning. Vic gave an indication of things to come with a pretty two-man goal at 1:24. Walt Stothers drew Cope to one side, leaving an open net for Jeff White's shot. Shortly after Andrew had bounced one off the post, Taylor converted Gibson's pass in the resulting scramble. Then at 4:31, Andrew and Fenning worked a passing play with Andrew as triggerman. At 6:43, Machim took a pass-out from Walton and drilled home a shot that Cope probably never saw.

At this stage, Trinity had no defence against the Vic attackers. They began to untrack midway through the frame but that was when Machim and Andrew were strongest Andrew knocked down a high Trinity pass at 11:14 and worked his way in to add another. Andrew got his third goal of the period in the last minute on a pass from Littlejohn.

Trinity made a last-ditch stand in the second period and got at least a share of the play. They hit the score sheet at 2:01 when Ketchum broke into the clear after Scrivener had Machim out of the play and had fed over a relay. Ketchum got another at 9:36 on an assist by Harley and they seemed to be coming back.

However, three Vic goals in the last half of the period put them out of reach once more. It was Taylor from Gibson at 9:46, Fenning on a breakaway set up by Machim and Andrews from Gibson on a snap play off the face-off.

The third chapter was somewhat rougher than the other two. While Trinity's Scrivener was off for roughing, Wooton made it ten. Vic's advantage during McMurtry's charging penalty backfired as Stewart scored after Trinity had held Vic in their own zone for most of the sentence.

At 7:56, Machim hulled his way the length of the rink to give Marshall a perfect chance which he cashed in. 22 seconds later, Marshall got his second goal and the last for Vic. From then on they were just playing out the string with a few bumps and elbows as extras.

Bill Andrews

Above is Captain Bill Andrews of the victorious Senior Vic Hockey Club, Interfaculty champions. Bill scored four goals in yesterday's game and has been an inspiration all season. He also doubles as coach of the Junior Vic hockey team whom he guided into the semi-finals.

Wrestling Team Loses 21 to 8

A team of Varsity wrestlers went down to defeat at the hands of the North York Athletic Club, last night, an up and coming wrestling club coached by former Intercollegiate champion Vic Jenson, formerly of OAC.

The score was 21-8 for North York, who won all but two bouts. Orie Louks, the only Senior Blue wrestler who fought, won in the 157 pound class, pinning his man at 2 minutes 15 seconds of the second round. Jim Berard, 147, won a decision in his fight.

Gord Stewart was pinned in his bout in the 130 pound class. John Deck, 137, was decisioned. Bill Bush fought a very close match with Lindy Primeau, the Ontario champ in the 167 pound class, but was pinned in the last round. Leon Smith was pinned by Jenson, NYAC's coach, and Heavyweight Ernie Dryden lost a decision in his bout.

Foiled Or Fulfilled

Tradition has let us down.

In the normal course of events, about this time of year a fence is erected around the front campus. The undergraduate takes this as the traditional reminder that it is time to get down to some serious studying, and extracurricular activities sink beneath waves of conscientiousness. To the student editor, the fence is a catalyst for the formation of opinion along such serious lines as the Importance of Study and the Purpose of the University Education, and for tender words to and about the graduating students.

But this muddled year the fence was erected in the fall, throwing tradition to the dogs, and confusing the poor be-extra-curriculared students.

Fortunately, an offside remark at Wednesday night's meeting of the Students' Administrative Council has had much the same effect as the fence was wont to have in its dependable days.

The remark (in connection with the proposed Varsity radio station) went something like this: "It's all very well for the Council to create more activities for the student, already swamped with them. But we must keep in mind what the student is here for. He is, after all, here primarily to study."

Now certainly the student is here to study, but we find it impossible to see studying as an end in itself. Surely we study to obtain minds better equipped for the business of living, and to develop inherent talents and aptitudes.

The graduate student tends to be specially serious at the time of year when fences should be sprouting, and his thoughts tend to go along lines like, "What has the University of Toronto meant to me?" The answers, of course, vary widely.

But no matter what the answer may be, it is almost certain that the student's ideas of the university and its purpose will have changed markedly since his freshman days. His personality, too, will probably be different.

When the freshman, sophomore or junior is asked, "What are you going to do after you graduate?" his answer is liable to be facetious or humorous. With the senior, it is a vital question. It makes him reconsider his ideas of the university, and test those ideas by his own experience.

To the question, "What has the University of Toronto meant to you?" some students would answer (if they answered sincerely), "I've had a grand time, I've postponed the dreary business of earning a living, I've made lots of friends and some good contacts." Some would answer, "I've learned everything in the book." To both, we say that we are sorry for what they have missed.

For there still remain employers who sneer at the university graduate because he acts as if he hasn't anything more to learn. And there are, regrettably, still some grads who foster such an attitude.

There will be some students who will answer, "By meeting people and taking part in activities, I've found and developed abilities that I never knew I had, I've stowed away a good bit of knowledge, and I've found out how much I don't know."

For them, the University of Toronto has fulfulled its function.

The Extra Day

This being the 29th day of February, some words are due on the institution of Leap Year. It has always puzzled us that a year that takes longer to run itself out should be styled by a name suggesting speed . . . Perhaps Leap Year, 1952, could be known universally as Tweep Year, in commemoration of the Council's having found itself with material assets of about 2500 tweepers.

No Vampire She

Editor, The Varsity:

I should like to attempt to clarify a paradox which has been brought to the attention of the student body by Mr. John Devereux: In a letter which appeared in last Friday's Varsity he argued that reverencing the memory of our late Monarch is worshipping the idol of British imperialism, which he seemed to consider to be a wicked and unjust force, seeking to destroy the freedom and undermine the brotherhood of the peoples of the earth. This, he said, is incompatible with the ideals of Christianity, which those who honored the King professed.

Let us first look a the British Empire, represented by Mr. Devereux as a tyrannical ogre. Like almost everything else, equity and benevolence are relative in colonial administration. Therefore, before condemning the British Empire, an intelligent observer will do well to compare its history with those of the other great imperial powers of the modern age — Spain and France. Surely it is not very difficult to decide which of these three powers has been most benign in its colonial administration. Further, let us reflect for a moment upon the histories of the three severest and most outspoken critics of the Empire — Germany and Russia, with their histories of the ruthless suppression of subject peoples, and the United States, with its hard-to-forget "Big Stick" policy in Latin America. Does Mr. Devereux consider any of these to be an improvement on British rule?

But in fairness to Mr. Devereux, it is probable that what he objected to was the interference of any sort by the Great Powers in the affairs of other nations. This argument has much to be said for it. Perhaps Mr. Devereux is right on this point. But when we consider the histories of such wonders of independence as Mexico and Bolivia and those of British colonies, such as Kenya and British Guiana, the detrimental effects of imperial administration are not so apparent as one might expect.

I do not claim that British imperialism has been faultless. Far from it; it has been characterized, like all systems of government, by a multiplicity of evils and shortcomings. Its promoters were only human. But let us not close our eyes to the benefits, such as education, stability of government, improvements in agriculture and in the standard of living, and the Pax Britannica, which it has conferred upon the lands under its jurisdiction. And let us not forget that it has worked consistently for the development of greater freedom, independence and equality in the countries it ruled.

Finally, since Mr. Devereux called imperialism a denial of the brotherhood of man, might I ask him to ponder carefully the relative social statuses allowed to Negroes in the Southern part of the Great American Republic and on the British island of Jamaica.

British imperialism, then, does not seem to be the monstrous vampire of his description, but a system federating lands of settled government.

"Where freedom slowly broadens down
From precedent to precedent."

Thus we have only to consider whether it is right, moral and Christian to reverence the memory of a good king and great man, who loved the people he ruled. Called in troubled times to the world's greatest throne, which he might well have declined had he wished to, he led his peoples through the dark days of their history to victory, safety, and peace. His unflinching and faithful service to God and to his subjects endeared him to all the peoples of this great Empire, and indeed of the whole world. Is it wrong for a person to honor the memory of one whom he loved and respected?

But Mr. Devereux has one more insidious thrust to make: he implies that the sorrow of the multitudes was enforced by their leaders. Enforced sorrow? This is not only beneath comment but beyond belief.

Mr. Devereux has a perfect right to hold and express the convictions of his choice. My purpose is not to insult or censure him or anyone else, but merely to point out that there is no paradox in Christian subjects paying their respects to their deceased king. In the words of the apostle, Paul, "Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honor to whom honor."

J. Lawler Loudon,
I Meds.

Three Men In A Boat

Although early reports are still without confirmation, it would seem that the whole world has been shaken by the announcement of the SAC that an editorial Triumvirate has been appointed to run The Varsity:

The first wire received by the Champus Cat was from the American Medical Association; CONGRATULATIONS! WOULD RECOMMEND THAT EACH OF THREE MEDSMEN STICK TO ONE JOB: ONE TO LISTEN TO THE SAC, ANOTHER TO SNIFF OUT THE NEWS, AND THE THIRD TO GIVE VOICE TO STUDENT OPINION. PAPER COULD BE KNOWN AS "THE EAR, NOSE, AND THROAT OF THE WORLD."

Late yesterday afternoon, giant bulldozers began the tremendous task of ploughing up the tree-lined boulevards on the Queen Elizabeth Way. "The government has finally accepted the fact," said one source, "that two directions are not enough on any highway. We are now providing an alternative route for the man in the middle. It is hoped the official opening will coincide with the appointment of the new three-man board of The Varsity."

Disc jockeys throughout the entire Western world report an overwhelming number of requests for "The Third Man Theme." At the same time, the Ontario Government expressed the fervent desire that the over-zealous population would refrain from picking all the trilliums.

Eaton's-college street announced that beginning early next month they would institute the third law school in the city (Take the stairs to the right).

George McCullough announced that he had bought the Toronto Daily Star. "What's good for the students is good enough for the City of Toronto," he said.

The Andrews Sisters announced that they will seek the Democratic nomination for President because, being professional people, they would not have enough time to handle the job otherwise.

Brotherhood Unlimited, vs Mankind, Ltd.

Editor, The Varsity:

I read eagerly through your editorial Monday on "Belated Brotherhood," thinking that an observing mind had written the article and would, with the aid of clever language, say something worthwhile and to the point in the end. I admired the way you pointed out man's tendency to stick to neighbors of his own kind. I enjoyed also the way you described the superficial professional tolerator. Touché! It is perhaps very worth while to point out to some well intentioned people on our campus the weakness and danger of their indulgence in superficial brotherhood. That sort of thing is indeed worse than a frank anti-toleration.

However, your conclusion was weak. It would seem to say that real brotherhood itself is a weak thing, since we are able to shift the focus of our discrimination from day to day. For example, witness how although we are learning to love our enemies of the last war we are starting to hate the enemies of the expected future war. But I wish to point out that this is not because brotherhood — the true kind — can only go so far. It is because human beings have gone only so far. What is wrong with human society today is not its structure so much as its humans — i.e., you and me. It's you and me that have to change. "And a good dose of more brotherhood isn't going to hurt anyone."

S. Ditchburn,
II St. Hilda's.

P.S. What do you mean by the term "practical Christianity"? And what makes you think it has proved that brotherhood can go only so far?

Editor, The Varsity:

I am writing to criticize the factual content of one of your articles. In the Campus Profile on Professor Bagnani, the following appears: "Professor Bagnani was born in Rome. His mother, then studying art and music in Florence . . ." This is impossible. Florence is 143 miles from Rome as the stork flies.

McGILL WINS DEBATE

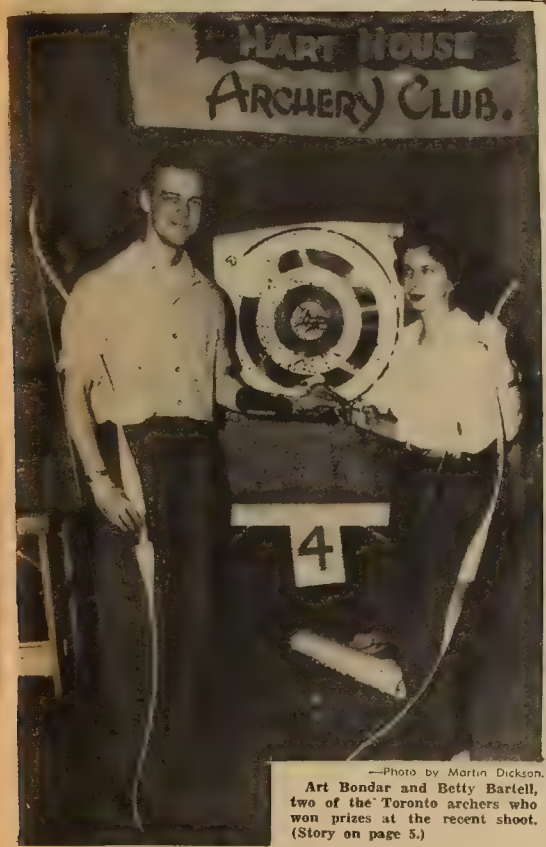
Foil Stronger Fed. Govt. At Expense of Provinces

In a debate which warned of possible civil war between Quebec and the rest of Canada, the University of Toronto lost its Inter-University Debating League match with McGill, when the motion that "the Federal Government be Strengthened at the Expense of the Province" was defeated Friday afternoon.

First speaker for the affirmative, Peter Giles, Trinity, claimed that while every section of the country had a right to its own language and culture, the individual areas should not be allowed to claim that right as sovereign.

He added that any increase in the powers of the federal government would harm only the institutions of the individual provinces, but in the long run would help the people.

Pointing to the conscription difficulties early in the last war, Danny Kingstone, McGill, warned that any further loss of provincial power might result in civil war between Quebec and other parts of Canada. "Quebec is already suspicious enough of federal powers," he warned.



Federalism was concocted to guard the rights of the majority, Kingstone pointed out, and warned that Quebec would not swallow any panacea of "the best for the majority."

He also pointed to the danger of over-centralization if the federal government assumed more powers. This would result in a general policy which would not take into account the differences between the various areas, he warned.

Scott Symons, I Trinity, second speaker for the affirmative, said that the differences between various areas had lessened as communications grew, and pointed to the "artificial unity" which appeared during World War II as an example of what might be done. "Communication improvements, new developments, external factors and the dollar sign have all brought increased unity to Canada," he said.

Symons aso said that provincial powers — particularly in the field of social welfare — had far outstripped the province's facilities. He also pointed out the "ridiculous" over-lapping of provincial and federal authority, where the national government subsidizes railroad, and the provinces subsidize competing motor transport companies.

Gerald Charness, McGill, explained that the present division of powers was adequate. Increasing federal powers would only stifle free enterprise, he said, which would in turn stifle our expanding economy. At present the social difficulties are handled by the unions, bargaining on a free market. The Dominion Government is meant only as a supplement, and should stay as such.

Urge Hostelers Join Can. Club

Canadian students planning to use Youth Hostel facilities in Europe or the United States must be members of the Canadian Association before they will be admitted, C. A. Harris, National Executive Secretary of the Canadian Youth Hostels Association announced recently.

This is a new policy decided upon at the last World Conference of Youth Hostel Associations, he explained. Canadians who want to use European hostels, but who have no Canadian membership, will be allowed a temporary 30-day pass for the country in which they are staying, but will be expected to write to Canada for any extension.

The Youth Hostel Association is an international organization providing cheap lodging for travellers on foot or bicycle. Hitchikers and motorcyclists are not permitted to use the facilities, since the Association wants its members to travel slowly and meet people, not only see landmarks.

National Associations have put up a network of hostels—or lodges—across Europe, Canada and the United States. In Europe the cost of a night's lodging is 30 or 35 cents, Harris said; in Canada it is a little more.

At the hostel, bedding and cooking equipment are provided. Stores are close by, or, in the case of some European hostels, the hostel itself sells food. The only equipment the hiker or cyclist need carry is a sheet sleeping sack, mess kit, and clothes. This shouldn't weigh more than 25 pounds, the Association estimates.

The Youth Hostels Association is a non-profit organization depending mainly on government and private grants. Memberships, which are $2.50 for those over 21 years of age, play only a small part in the total income.

The Canadian national office, 1A Classic Avenue, has pamphlets with detailed information aout youth hostels in all member countries. There is also an International Handbook with general information on all the countries.

Blues Butcher McGill 70-40, In Basketball at Hart House

BY MAL CRAWFORD

Hitting the win column again after two losses, the Basketball Blues took McGill apart 70-40 at the Athletic Night in Hart House gym Saturday night. The score was closer than it was when McGill visited Hart House last year, but at no time was the issue in any doubt. McGill, though admittedly never a contender in basketball, always seem to have its toughest nights when playing Toronto. At London Friday night, the Redmen gave Western a close game for three periods.

The game was not the best basketball the Blues have provided this season; they did not have to play their best to win. However, they settled down to a fast effective game in the second half, after a ragged first half. The last period, in which they scored 23 points, sent the local fans home happy, even though it made the tired McGill crew look pretty sad.

McGill were in tough shape from the start, with sharp-shooting Ben Tissenbaum suffering from a twisted knee sustained in last night's game at Western. He had a noticeable limp even when he walked up the floor, and stayed on the bench after it had become clear that the cause was lost.

Art Binnington and McGill's Sheldon Merling, the Redmen's best basketballer by far, tied for honors of top scorer with 14 each. Binnington played his best game in a Varsity uniform; besides scoring points, he fed the ball off nicely to the "out" men cutting past him, especially his buddy Gary Glover, who scored 12 points. This cut play which Binnington got going in the second half worked better than it had in any of the team's previous home appearance this year.

Ray Monnot, who shared the centre position with Binnington, played his usual steady game, scoring 13. Lukenda was the other double figure man with 11. Lou has had over ten points in every game since the New Year.

Merling opened the scoring for McGill, but Varsity scored three consecutive field goals and two foul shots to take an 8-2 lead. Though they kept a reasonably safe lead throughout, the Blues scored only 12 points in the second quarter as McGill narrowed their margin to 30-24.

After that, it was no contest. Mering, with a sensational hook shot, was the only McGillian who was much of a threat. Asher Garbuz was next highest scorer with five points.

Press Employees Strike For Bonus

Employees of the University of Toronto Press have now been officially on strike for six days. They walked off the job Tuesday, February 26, when it was learned that the employers refused to give women employees the same cost-of-living compensation as men. The employees are members of the American Federation of Labor's Bookbinders' Union (Local 28).

The issue of equality of cost-of-living payments is one of particular concern to the bookbinders, since about 65 per cent of the union's membership are women. Over 50 bookbinding shops are affected by the walkout.

The union has also asked for wage increases, and, at a February 24 membership meeting, turned down the wage senttlement proposed by the companies. The union is asking an increase from $1.67½ to $1.95 for men, and from 89½ cents to $1.10 for women. Employers had offered $1.91 and $1.02 for men and women respectively.

The University of Toronto Press is located behind the old Chemical Building on the south side of the Physics Building. Three picketers (one man and two women) were seen marching along College Street between St. George and University Avenue last Thursday. They were carrying placards on their backs asking for "better conditions."

LAST TWO ISSUES

The last two issues of The Varsity will be distributed Wednesday and Friday. Friday's issue is to be a 16-page number, a resume of the year's events and activities.

From Leo

A Big Smile

By IAN MONTAGNES

Leo looks very cheerful in this picture considering the fact that he may be about to help his companion retrieve something from the trunk third from the back in the bottom row.

Leo is a big smile on short legs. He is a chubby little man in the blue jacket who always gives you a cheery "hello" when you're working late at night in the basement of University College, and are keeping him from going home on time.

He is the only school or college caretaker I have ever met who doesn't seem soured on life in general and students in particular.

He is Leo of Whitney Hall: part-time night caretaker at UC, and (much more important) the man in charge of the UC Women's Residences.

It is his job to keep thing running smoothly in Whitney Hall and the other residences; to supervise the other three men on his staff; to make sure the floors are shining, the furnaces stoked, the dirty linen in the laundry room and the clean in the linen closet. If a lock jams, the cry goes out for Leo; if a light bulb burns out, he replaces it; if pranksters leave a car parked in the Hall's main entrance (as once happened), it is up to Leo and his staff to get it out of there.

And all the girls in the residence know Leo. He is the little man who fixes broken windows, and, you know, things like that. Most wonderful of all, he is the man who stores the trunks and suitcases of 200 girls, and yet can find any one of them at any time. ("You're got to take special care of the freshies; it's often the first time they've left home, and they're liable to have forgotten a shipping ticket, or something. But I've never lost a trunk on its way home yet.")

"What's it like working in a building full of girls? Not too exciting, according to Leo—who will tell you he can't remember figuring in any interesting incidents in his 18 years at Whitney Hall. But the girls will tell you stories like the time he hoisted one of them into her room through the transom when she lost her key. And even Leo will say that you never know what may happen while you're changing a light bulb in one of the halls.

"You've got to be careful working in a woman's residence", he says, and what he tells all new men: "Keep your mouth shut, your eyes closed, and mind your own business, and everything will be O.K."

Miss Ferguson, the Dean of Whitney Hall, has only words of praise for Leo. "He has a buoyant faith in people", she explains, "and a body without a sour note in it." He is quite a bit different from his predecessors, she adds.

Even more important, according to the Dean, is his ability to serve the "double constituency" of the Hall's administrative staff and the residents themselves, to find time to carry out the requests of both bodies — and to do it cheerfully.

In return, Leo will tell you that the white-haired Dean of Women at UC is a wonderful person to work for—but you've got to do your work properly."

Many people know Leo's first name but few know his family name in Cole, or that he was born in Surrey 56 years ago, coming over to Canada when he was 22 years old. You have to press him to get him to talk about himself: he much prefers to talk about Whitney Hall and his work there and in other parts of the campus. He is also proud of his discharge button from World War I, and the Mons Star which accompanies it.

Leo has been working at the University for 30 years now. In that time has seen three presidents in office, and has watched Simcoe Hall, Whitney Hall, and the new Engineering buildings grow up around him. He remembers Banting and Best when they were doing research in Toronto. But although the University has changed in the past three decades, he sees little change in the students—except that maybe they are more "clamped down on" than before. Who by, he isn't sure.

Before he came to Whitney Hall 18 years ago, he served as a relief watchman and then as night-watchman in Hart House. When he left there, Warden Bickersteth told Miss Ferguson it was like losing "a personal friend." And it is that feeling of personal friendship and interest which grows up between Leo and with those with whom he works and speaks that is the most charming aspect of his character.

That is Leo Cole, the graying, cherubic little man with the cheery "hello": Leo of Whitney Hall, the care-taker with the Big Smile.

"colleges should teach students to think for themselves." In 1939 intercollegiate football was abandoned in Chicago, in spite of the many protests that arose.

Professor Hutchins, who once refused positions offered him by the late William Randolph Hearst and Franklin Delano Roosevelt as well as the Presidency of the New York Stock Exchange, became Associate Director of the Ford Foundation in 1950.

Hold Vic Elections Tuesday

Elections for the Victoria College Union will take place tomorrow and Tuesday, March 11. Vice-president Dugan Melhuish said yesterday that nominations this year have been better than they have been for years. Melhuish said that the only acclamations are for the social director and directoress and for the secretary of the Women's Athletic Directorate.

Tomorrow Vic voters will cast ballots for the president, associate president, athletic director and athletic directress, treasurer, secretary, publicity director and vice-president — all executive members.

Elections will also be held for secretary of the Men's Athletic Directorate, the assistant social director and directoress, the year reps to the assembly, male and female External Affairs Committee reps, and men's and women's senior sticks.

The presidents, and in some cases the associate presidents of the societies recognized by the VCU will also stand for election tomorrow.

Melhuish said that the polling booths will be open from 8.30 a.m. until 2.00 p.m. in Alumni Hall. He expects that the results of the election will be ready by 5.00 p.m.

The present division, whereby the Federal government gives the provinces grants, allows experimentation on a provincial scale which could not be carried out nationally, since it would need the support of all ten provinces. One example he pointed out in this connection was the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission, which had been copied by several other provinces.

Saints Alive!

Here is a picture of the cast from Trinity's musical comedy Saints Alive. This show, which was first run in 1949 is being reproduced as a special Centenary production. The story is of the trials and tribulations of the men of Quinquagesina College as they try to elude the dean, Head Girl, Night Porteresses and rules and regulations of St. Gilda's College (this is a poor man's allegory on St. Hilda's College). The worst that can happen is a socially undesirable marriage.

Educationalist Hutchins Speaks Here Tuesday

Robert Maynard Hutchins, Associate Director of The Ford Foundation and former Chancellor of the University of Chicago will be guest speaker at Convocation Hall next Tuesday and Wednesday, March 4 and 5, at 8:30 p.m. His topic "Some Questions in Education in North America" will be given in two parts, one part each night.

The professor was born in Brooklyn in 1899. His family moved to Oberlin, Ohio, where he attended Oberlin College in 1915. He transferred to Yale two years later. In 1917 he went abroad with an ambulance corps and a year later he was fighting with the Italian army.

Professor Hutchins returned to Yale after the war, and while at Yale he gained a considerable reputation as captain of the Yale Debate team.

He graduated in 1921 and after teaching English and History for year at a Lake Placid School, returned to Yale to study law. He graduated from law school in 1925 and began to teach. In 1929 he became President of the University of Chicago, the youngest man to become head of a major university in the United States. Previously, he had been Dean of Yale Law School for two years

He brought unique ideas about education with him to Chicago.

The faculty passed his "Chicago Plan" in 12 minutes. The plan eliminated required class attendance, also the course credit system. He substituted general examinations to be written when the student was ready for them. The course he adopted in the Great Classics was made compulsory for Freshmen at Columbia in 1939.

By 1942 students who had completed their sophomore year at high school were admitted to the University. A B.A. was awarded at the end of a program that normally required four years and was therefore completed at the end of the sophomore year of traditional colleges.

His ideas are expressed in his book, "Higher Learning in America", published in 1936.

Professor Hutchins believes that the function of a University is not social or athletic, but that

Four Students, Faiths On Radio Open Forum

Four University of Toronto students, a Hebrew a Roman Catholic, a Protestant, and an Agnostic, will take part in a discussion and open forum tomorrow, on the topic "What I Believe." The symposium will be held at 4 p.m. in the West Hall of University College.

The meeting will be chaired by Bill Glenesk, II Emmanuel, who believes a symposium on this theme will prove invaluable as a medium for sharing the search for truth. "Truth will out only in first-hand intercourse of mind with mind and reason with reason, in an interplay of words," said Glenesk recently.

The first speaker will be Dov Chetner, II SPS, speaking on the beliefs of a Hebrew. "I believe in promoting those ideas which are of universal significance and in perpetuating those belonging to the worship of spirit, which are capable of being adopted by all peoples no matter what their religious traditions. I would stress those qualities which tend to unify mankind," commented Chetner.

"I believe," said Bill Davis, III St. Mike's, "that there is a God and that his son Jesus Christ came down upon earth to redeem man of Adam's sin and to found a Church which is the true custodian of the Grace, the authority, and the teachings of God. That Church is the Roman Catholic Church," he added.

Jack Gray, an occasional student, was unavailable for comment. Gray will speak on the beliefs of an agnostic at the discussion group, Tuesday.

"I believe a bit of what each of the other three speakers say," claims George Speers, III Emmanuel. "I believe in the freedom of inquiry of the agnostic; I believe also in the God of the Jews; and I believe that as a Protestant I am first of all a Christian belonging to the 'Holy Catholic Church'; but as for my being a Protestant, you will have to wait until Tuesday."

Each speaker will be allowed ten minutes, without interruption, to present his case and after the last speaker has finished, the symposium will be thrown open to the members of the audience for questions and answers.

Time Limit On Speeches In Hart House Elections

"I am standing up, I am speaking up, but DAMMIT I can't shut up, because I have to speak for three minutes."

This is how T. H. Bell, II Music, started his "Soap box" election speech at the Music Committee's election campaign meeting in Hart House.

Each candidate will speak a maximum of three minutes announced Dave Gardner, assistant to the Warden of Hart House at the soap box forum. The sound of the bell will indicate the end of the three minute period, he added.

After the Engineers come back from Ajax, SPS took over the music committee, said W. A. Armstrong I SPS. "That's the way we want to keep it." Only ten percent of the students voted in previous years for the music committee elections, he said and added it's going to be bad if we won't have more members, Artsmen as well as Engineers and . . . students from other faculties.

"We have a School of Music second to none on the American continent," said Bell, and felt that student composition should be improved. Bell was just in the middle of a campaign joke, as the bell rang. Gardner introducing the next speaker commented, "The candidate will finish his story if he is elected."

"Granted the Engineers do the best job, but I can't see how Artsmen let-a bunch of 'Unremedial engineers' run the show," said W. G. Deeks I SPS, challenging the Artsmen. As for music, he said he didn't know much about it, but he was willing to learn.

J. S. Halls II Meds felt that there was a place in music "even" for the Engineers.

J. L. Lowes III VIC said he didn't want to make a Chopin out of himself like some Engineers. "Let's have some opinions from Hart House what kind of music they want", he said. Shouted somebody from the audience "Gershwin."

M. Shultz II SPS thought that the most difficult things to do are "to climb a fence leaning towards you, to kiss a girl leaning away from you, and to talk about yourself." He said therefore he wouldn't talk about himself, and felt a larger audience is needed at the Hart House concerts.

"You need fresh blood, initiative" said G. A. Steele I Wycliffe (stainless somebody called him). "Take the meals in the Great Hall for instance", from the floor: "You take them." Steele finishing his sentence said that nobody suggested to supply music in the Great Hall "Answer? No initiative."

"After 10-15 years of formal education you are asked only to come out and put an 'X' on a sheet of paper", said Dave Gardner. "Now that was a funny one wasn't it?" he mumbled to himself as he finished.

Urge NFCUS Exchange Through Scholarships To Unite Provinces

By LEN HARBOUR
McGill NFCUS Committee Chairman.

Provincialism is detrimental to the unity of Canadian society.

NFCUS exchange scholarships can provide a definite means of overcoming this detriment. This system of sending students from Canadian universities to study for one year at a university in another section of the country, tends to create a better understanding of the culture and society of the widely different parts of our country.

It has long been evident at NFCUS national conferences, where student leaders meet to discuss problems pertaining to the student population, that, before an understanding can be reached, provincial bias must be overcome.

When a student society has within its membership, a considerable number who have seen, and studied, other parts of Canada, its leaders provide a considerable benefit to the progress of national student unity.

Not only do NFCUS exchange scholarships benefit students in general, but also the individuals who use them. Evidence for this will be found in other columns of this issue. Furthermore, however, they provide the student with opportunities to study courses given at other universities which are not offered here.

It must be remembered that a university education is not aimed at the sole purpose of obtaining a degree. It is means to cultivate a sense of decent citizenship among the future leaders of the country. The broader the education the larger will be the capacity of a student to enter into this citizenship. Those students who are able to benefit from these scholarships will be of the type whose influence will not only be felt in their studentship, but also in their future citizenship.

At this university, although it is one of the most cosmopolitan in the country, the number of students taking advantage of the benefits of these exchange scholarships has been small.

It is to the benefit of the individual and the student society in as helping to overcome our own particular brand of individualism that NFCUS exchange scholarships be put to wider use by McGill students.

Peace Club To Nominate '52 Executive

The University Peace Council will hold its nominations meeting Wednesday at 1:00 p.m. in Room 1035, Wallberg Building, announced Dennis Bishop, president of the Council. According to Bishop this will simply be a meeting to nominate members for next year's executive.

Last Tuesday Don Anderson, TV Meds, had called a meeting to discuss means of getting the Peace Council into action. Students at that meeting had agreed that he should contact Bishop and urge him to call some Council meetings. Anderson said he had phoned Bishop and had told him about the decision of the meeting.

"All that can be done now," added Anderson, "is to wait and see what happens." Bishop and the Peace Council have recently been the centre of criticism by The Varsity and a student group for their failure in calling meetings to discuss peace.

Second Choral Concert

St. Michael's College Choral Society are giving their second annual concert at St. Joseph's Hall corner of Bay and Breadalbane Wednesday night at 8.15 p.m. The singers including boys from St. Michael's and girls from Loretto and St. Joseph's are directed by Father Rener.

Father Rener is a student at the College but he has had musical training in Italy, Germany and also Yugoslavia. He is at present organist at St. Basil's church in Toronto.

The program will also include piano performances by Jane Timmins III SMC and Jim McManamy III SMC. Both are associates at the Royal Conservatory of Music in Toronto.

Stephen Somerville, president of the choral society said that the program would perhaps include his own arrangement of "Boozer Brown" the St. Mike's song.

Don McCarthy and Mary McNeil are singing a duet from Gershwin's Pargy and Bess as another highlight on the program, promised Somerville.

The evening's entertainment will be a wide selection of classical, semi-classical and folk music concluded Somerville.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

VIVA ZAPATA! (Imperial) was made by director Elia Kazan with Marlon Brando as Mexican revolutionary Emiliano Zapata. This is their second film together the first being the high-flying A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE, one of last year's best films. VIVA ZAPATA! does not quite hit STREETCAR'S level. Perhaps this is why many critics have been panning this new film severely. But VIVA ZAPATA! is an exciting satisfying film, don't let anyone sell you short.

John Steinbeck is responsible for the writing of VIVA ZAPATA! Therefore, instead of the magnifying-glass view of ugly city life by Tennessee Williams, we get a naive social consciousness and some lyrical sentimentality. And essentially, the lesser success of this new film can be blammed upon Steinbeck's heavy pen.

Another contrast is that unlike Vivien Leigh and Kim Hunter, two effective actresses, the womenfolk in ZAPATA! are weak sisters. As Zapata's wife, Jean Peters is pretty but beyond her scope. In a rare appearance as the woman of one of Zapata's erstwhile lieutenants, Margo only broods intensely. Perhaps Margo's lack of distinction is due to the elimination of one whole sequence—an attempt to revenge her man by killing Zapata in his bedroom. This cutting may be due to demands of time or to the sensitivities of the censor. As a result Margo turns out to be an enigmatic type, flashing into life only when she is reading a dynamite plot against a military fort.

But even if Steinbeck's contribution is disappointing, director Kazan has fashioned this story of bloody Mexico during 1911-19 into an enjoyable film. Some high moments include Zapata being rescued from the Rurales (police) by his people who silently surround the police party, Zapata's final death, and his proposal scene with Josefa (Jean Peters) in which proverbs and fans beat rhythm while relatives keep audience.

Brando lapses into Kowalski-isms only a few times; mostly he lives up to his makeup as an idealistic leader of rebellious peasants. But a swaggering coarse Anthony Quinn as Zapata's brother, Eufemio, steals the show easily. Quinn seems to be having the time of his life and he is savagely convincing. Joseph Wiseman is the villain of the piece. Wiseman scored well as the hoodlum in DETECTIVE STORY, but he has retained the tendency to shake and scream. In ZAPATA! as a sinister intellectual journalist, he gets too worked up.

It has been pointed out that the real Zapata was not such a goody-goody and he had more than one wife as he went along bloodying heads. But this really doesn't matter. VIVA ZAPATA! is a film packed with good things.

The Museum Theatre was packed yesterday afternoon for the long-awaited showing of EXTASE, the film that made Hedy (Lamarr) Keisler an international celebrity. Because of some heavy cuts that made the film rather choppy, it is difficult to give EXTASE a completely fair appraisal. It was made in 1933 in Czechoslovakia by Gustav Machaty, who also made a film called EROKTIKA.

The version we saw had some dubbed-in French dialog, but most of the movie consisted of brooding closeups of the faces of the young Lamarr, her aged husband, and her young surveyor-lover. Added to this was a collection of obvious symbols, which flashed alternately with the human closeups to show us what was going on mentally. Much of the film seemed heavy and overlong. Perhaps the early date is some excuse.

Yet the mating of the horses, the subsequent love-making of the girl and the young man, the fearful race to the railway crossing by the husband who realizes his young passenger has cuckolded him, are tastefully and effectively done. The notorious sequence of Lamarr bathing in the nude and losing her clothes as her mare bolts is out severely. So much so that as she flees panic-stricken, we are not sure whether we are watching an old-style comedy or just being nasty Peeping Toms. Either way we are uncomfortable.

EXTASE tells of a young bride whose elderly husband fails her. Separation, physical fulfillment, and the husband's suicide follow. Lawrence did this much better in Lady Chatterly. But, of course, no one has filmed that novel. Perhaps the highest compliment which can be paid this film is that there were no giggles or snickers yesterday during the love scene in the surveyor's lodge.

When EXTASE is shown on American television, the kids will become even more loyal to old Hopalong and his Bar-20 pals. Faye Emerson and Dagmar don't have to worry about competition either.

Hart House Debate

There will be another Hart House debate this year. The final debate will be held around the middle of March. Subject for the debaters will be "Resolved That Canadian Nationalism Has Gone Too Far." Chairman at this debate John Medcof who is the leader of the Liberal party at the University.

Two To Go

There are only two more issues of The Varsity until next fall. Wednesday's issue will be a theme feature issue. The last issue on Friday will sum up the year's activities and tell of the remaining events this year. The Friday issue will be sixteen pages long, half the size of last year's anniversary but still the largest paper this season. There will be no Varsity Tuesday and Thursday this week and no Varsity until next year after that.

Lakshmi Rao

By PEARL PARNES

One day two girls, wanting to be friendly, suggested a game of tennis to Miss Lakshmi Rao, Don of Falconer House and the only Indian girl taking her Ph.D. at the University of Toronto. They offered her a pair of shorts, thinking that her long sari might hamper the game. One set later, the girls quit — Miss Rao, an Inter-Collegiate Tennis Champ, beat them hollow.

Miss Rao was at the International Student Seminar held last summer near Ottawa. She (and most of the other Asian students) constantly amazed us by their facility at the game. And the sari, far from hampering her movements, seemed to lend an added grace to the fast-moving matches.

She didn't limit her activities to tennis. She was one of the ablest contributors to discussions and debates (impersonating Mrs. Eva Peron at one "United Nations" session), and she created and took part in a lovely dance entitled "What Saris Can Do." Eight girls, dressed in saris and carrying four extras, represented most of the nations at the seminar. In time to the "Blue Danube" waltz, we formed the figures of a peacock, flowers and an ingenious tent — all designed and principally danced by Miss Rao. "We of India love the dance; the art and rhythm seem to be born in us. It is the beloved art of my country."

Born in India of an aristocrat family, Miss Rao took her B.Sc. at Madras and her M.Sc. at Lucknow. Her professor had studied at Toronto, and so the young lady left India to take her Ph.D. in biology at the University of Toronto. She became Don of Falconer two years ago (after her first year). "It's a grand experience, being with University people," she says. "I don't compare students but see that they're the same, in India and here. It's a wonderful experience to take back." She will be returning to India in September to lecture in the Punjab University.

Miss Rao is a favourite speaker at many women's clubs. "There are equal rights for men and women in India, and we beat Canada by one year on equal pay for men and women. Women are not arred from any business trade or profession."

"Before the tenth century, women were considered and educated as equals with men. After the tenth century, women were hidden behind curtains for safety and early child marriages were arranged to protect them. Now, with greater education (there are 325 colleges in India, 45 exclusively for women), students are rebelling against arranged marriages." As far as the fundamental value of education, Miss Rao thinks, "Primary education is the structure and basis of a nation. Without literacy, people cannot think."

In India, the mother is "Queen of the house"; the father just hands out the money. "Life pivots around mother and her word of law." Miss Rao is constantly amazed at the number of Canadian women who belong to clubs. "I can't understand how they can take care of their homes, husbands, families, money and cars and still find time to belong to clubs."

India's liberal policies apply to religion as well as women. Although the country has seven religions and 13 major languages, "religion is between the individual and God, and there is complete religious tolerance."

In the early centuries, Alexander the Great called India 'the mysterious golden bird of the east." A more recent writer has spoken of the "grace of India." Miss Rao feels the sari, India's national dress, typifies this grace. They're wonderfully easy to move in, and seem to affect the whole manner of standing and walking. In contrast to the ordinary apparel of heavy boots, Miss Rao is a familiar figure, "floating across the campus in pale pink and pale green." Some of the male visitors to the House have called her "the sugar-plum fairy of the Nutcracker Suite."

A long-standing interest in dramatics took Miss Rao to the Banff School of Fine Arts in the summer of 1950. She studied drama and writing, and last year wrote a play for the International Student Organization on this campus.

People are always amazed at Miss Rao's excellent knowledge of English and her adaptability to this country which she calls her second home. "When I first came, I was helpless," she remembers. "I demanded a butler to carry my bags, then a maid to make my bed. I had to learn to do it all myself, for I had never done it before. I also had to learn to wash and iron my clothes when I found that no one picked them up to launder each Saturday." She also makes her own saris, "out of your wonderful Canadian nylon," and looks after her room, which is furnished in Indian style, with a tapestry from the Punjab woven by peasant women, vases, brassware and an ancient candlestick from Kashmir.

Next year's ISS Seminar will be held in Miss Rao's country. Thinking over her own experience last summer, she is convinced, as all of us who were lucky enough to attend such a project, that it does "more for international understanding than any other body. It gives a widening of horizons, of exchange of ideas and ideas, and a knowledge that there are certain people in different parts of the world who are your friends."

Archery's Winners

The Hart House Archery Club sponsored a shoot for Toronto and district archers recently. The shoot was held in the drill hall of St. George Street. Two of the trophy winners are pictured on page one.

Art Bondar who started shooting this year has become one of the best archers of the club. In the recent meet he finished ahead of the Ontario champion, placing second behind the Dominion winner.

Awards at the meet were given to second and last place finishers as it is the custom not to give prizes to the best, only, but to the others to encourage them.

Betty Bartel, the other archer also of the Toronto club, won a prize too—the booby prize.

Captain Huycke Scores

Bill Huycke drives in on the McGill basket to score in spectacular manner in the Blues' fast-paced final period. His check, Bob Findlay, goes sailing past a couple of steps behind him. John Russell, also of McGill, looks on from a safe distance.

played half-back in football) fouled out before the end of the third period. Going into the final period behind 47-29, McGill knew they had it and looked like it. Huycke and Glover each got a drive in on the basket to score, looking for all the world like candidates for the Lonely Hearts Club — their checks were nowhere near them. Huycke's drives in from the left hand side, a specialty of his in spite of the fact that he is right-handed, were successful on two or three occasions.

The Blues wind up their season next week with two homes games, in the final Mutual Street game, and playing Queen's Saturday in the last Athletic Night.

Varsity: Bunnington 14, Monnot 13, Glover 12 Lukenda 11, Huycke 9, Fawcett 8, Oneschuk 3, Maynerick Wilson.

McGill: Merling 14 Garbuz 5, Wipper 4 Diamond 4, Tolchinsky, Findlay 4, Russell 2, Klein 2.

Jay Vees Win Smother OAC By 20 Points

The Junior Varsity basketball team scored a decisive 64-44 victory over Ontario Agricultural and Veterinary College team on Saturday evening. Held as a preliminary to the McGill at Varsity feature attraction, the game was very poorly attended as most of the Athletic Night "crowd" (the smallest of the year), did not arrive until the proceedings were nearly over.

During the early part of the game the two teams seemed equally strong. OAC actually were leading 6-4 midway through the first quarter which ended with Toronto leading 15-11. The visitors took control of the play at the start of the second quarter and tied the score at 15-15 at the 2½ minute mark of the period. Then the home team took charge of the remaining three quarters of the second period, (the slowest period of the game), and the score at half time was Varsity 22, OAC 15.

Coach White must have given the Jay Vees quite a pep-talk during half time because they returned to the basketball floor a hot, smooth-working team. As the second half progressed the Jay Vees steadily increased their lead over the Aggies. The Aggies' first score of the half came just before the five minute mark of the third quarter. Immediately after this one personal foul and two technical fouls were called against OAC. Olie Mandryk who played a good game at guard for Varsity sank both of the technical foul shots to make the score Varsity 34, OAC 17.

For Toronto, Bill Corcoran was the top scorer with 21 points.

C. Switzer was the most outstanding player on the visiting team. He scored eleven points and was a standout defensively jumping high off the floor to intercept passes and catch rebounds off the backboard.

JV's: Corcoran 21, Garbutt 13, Kettle 12, Palerno 8, Milne 4, Mandryk 3, Rumball 2, Brown 1, Balda.

OAC: Jeffrey 13, Switzer 11, Hanna 7, Dawson 6, Whillans 4, Futcher 2, Humphreys 1, Nielsen, Hall, Carter.

Bluebelles Came Second In Intercoll V-Ball

The Volleyball Bluebells went to the birds in the Intercollegiate round-robin meet at McMaster on Saturday, when they were forced into second place by the same McMaster team that they trounced last Monday. OAC placed third, and Western ended up in the cellar.

In the first game the Toronto girls succeeded in winning a close contest with Western, 34-24. The second tilt saw the Toronto girls absorb a 31-24 defeat at the hands of McMaster. The Bluebells just couldn't get rolling in the first half, losing the serve time and time again, and trailing by 20 points at the end of the section. The Varsity squad regained their style in the non-rotation second half, and banged up two points to every one of McMaster's, but they were unable to make up the early deficit. Joan Creary and Helen Sarrenin shone on the serving end in this game for Toronto.

In the final tile, the Varsity crew took OAC 39-20. The play was fairly close in the first half with a three-point difference at the close of the half. Helen Tsandilis, PHE, who also manages the team, was Toronto's star in this fracas, adding up point after point with her terrific serves, and working in several back-line set-ups to Joan Mulveney. Jan Kennedy, PHE, gave a steady performance throughout all three games.

This tournament was living proof of the increased status that volleyball has gained in the past year as an Intercollegiate sport. In just two years the calibre of playing has greatly improved and it is hoped that McGill will enter a team next year to put the contest on more of an East-West basis.

PHE Win Ski

The gals from PHE proved their skiing superiority over three other faculties on Saturday, when they won the Interfaculty ski meet at Collingwood with a combined time of 9 minutes, 6.6 seconds. UC finished second with 10 minutes, 10.2 seconds, while Trinity did the course in 12 minutes. 20.8 seconds and POT in 15 minutes, 7.2 seconds Members of the winning team are Georgia Knowles, Pam Fulford, Sue Ross and Clare McMullen.

Joan Ellis, III UC, won the trophy given to the individual skier with the best time, winning both the downhill and Slalom in the combined time of 1 minute, 40.5 seconds. Georgia Knowles, PHE, was second running second in the Slalom and third in the Downhill, with a combined time of 1 minute, 55.9 seconds; Pam Fulford came third with 1 minute 58.2 seconds, placing second in the Slalom Jane Firstbrook, II UC, came third in the Downhill.

Queen's Boxers Champs Blues Grab Last Spot Poor Judging—Reporter

By FRED FISCHEL

Kingston, March 2, (Staff) — Queen's University captured the Senior Intercollegiate Boxing Championships in the tournament held at Kingston this weekend by accumulating a staggering total of 24 points. McGill captured second place with 7 points and OAC was third with 6. The luckless Toronto crew wound up in the cellar with 3 points. The Competition was not as one-sided as this score would indicate, but the judges, who obviously scored according to the amount of cheering given to the home-town boys, committed unpardonable blunders.

This feeling was best expressed by the McGill coach when he said that the only way to beat a Queen's man in this tournament was by K.O. or T.K.O. Actually two Queen's boxers did lose, one of these memorable deeds being achieved by a Toronto boy. Roberto Couceiro, fighting in the 147 lb. class, achieved one of these minor miracles when he completely outclassed Dave Embury of Queen's in Friday's semi-finals and even then he was only awarded a split decision. In the finals Couceiro dropped a very close decision to Steve Doane from O.A.C.

The only two other Toronto men who reached the finals were Nick Betz and Russ Reilly, fighting in the 130 and 135 lb. respectively. Both men would have had to defeat Queen's men in order to win their class championship. Betz reached the final via a bye when H. Rodman of McGill was forced to withdraw. In his final against Tom Tate of Queen's Nick appeared to have a slight edge. It was a fast-moving contest that featured some good hitting, but Tate was not restrained by the referee from hitting on the breaks. Tate was awarded the decision.

Russ Reilly, though in his first year of competition, handled himself extremely well against Bob Sweet, the defending champion. Reilly suffered a cut over his left eye when he was accidently butted by Sweet. Russ had complete control of the first two rounds and though Sweet held an edge in the third, it did not appear great enough to justify the Judge's decision. On the previous night, Reilly defeated G. Bracken of O.A.C. by a T.K.O. at 1:40 of the third.

In the 140 pound class, Mike Wright, the Toronto entry, lost his semi-final to F. P. Baker of OAC. Although Wright was the better boxer of the two, Baker out-fought him throughout the bout. In the Saturday night final Baker was the victim of such an obvious blunder that even the spectators booed the decision in favour of Queen's Derrich.

Herbie Tilson, who has had only a few week's boxing experience, fought commendably against Queen's three-time Inter-collegiate champion Thompson. The crowd loudly expressed their dislike of this bout because of its lack of action. Thompson is strictly a counter-puncher and Tilson didn't give him an opportunity to counterpunch.

In the 165 pound class, Toronto's Petcoff, was the victim of another judicial error when he was decisioned by Ted Fletcher of Queen's, after he outfought, outboxed, and completely outclassed Fletcher throughout the contest. Once more the crowd booed the decision.

Toronto's only defending champion, Howie Greenley, lost the light-heavy weight bout to John Jenkins of McGill. Jenkins, an unorthodox boxer and a scrapper, forced the fight from the opening bell and did not give greenley a chance to exercise his boxing skill.

R. A. Smith from OAC defeated Varsity's heavyweight Taimo Pallandi via the T.K.O. route in the first round. Smith forced Pallandi into the ropes with one of his famous flurries and connected with a hard uppercut before Pallandi could disentangle himself from the ropes.

Intermed Fencers Intercoll Champs

Toronto's intermediate fencers copped the intercollegiate championship at the Athletic Night Saturday when they downed Guelph Agricultural College, 5-4. OAC was the only other entry in the contest.

John Crawford was the outstanding fencer for the intermediates in the championships winning all three of his matches. Each fencer fights three bouts in intermediate competition and there is only one class—the foil. Therefore each man faces each man on the other team.

Jack Penciner won two out of three to give Toronto their other two winning points as third man on the team, George Marcus, had tough luck losing all three bouts.

All three Toronto fencers are first year men. Crawford is in MP & C and the other two are in Honour Science.

McMaster was expected to enter the competition but they couldn't fill out a team, so the event was down to only two entries.

Junior UC went down to a ringing defeat as Junior Skule rang the bell 44-27. For SPS, Nelson scored six, McMinn hooped nine, Horton gathered eight, and Kelly counted seven. For UC Mintzer marked up four, Sankey collected four, Mitchell threw in four, and Brown snagged four.

In minor action, UC Huskies beat III Chemicals. Treleving got 11 for UC while Smith added 10. Sands gathered nine for SPS. PHE B defaulted to Trinity Orphans. UC Emm Pees gained a glorious defeat over the Third Eng. Bus. 21-17. Kerbel lit the lamp for nine.

Trinity Crumpets beat Vic Rugby (them of Mulock Cup notoriety) 38-32. Gledhill sank 13, Graham bit for 10, and Coates bulged the twine for 11 for Trinity. Fraser led Vic as he blasted in nine.

In water polo, Skule thirds beat Dents A's 5-1. McKee fired one for SPS. Thompson whistled one single in for Dents. Also Law beat Wycliffe 4-3 and Meds 7ths beat St. Mike's Irish Bees 7-0.

Carabins Take Varsity 3-1 Blues Lose Hockey Trophy

By BARRY THOMAS

Montreal, March 2—(Staff)—The Montreal Carabins, playing in top form, defeated the Varsity Blues 3-1 on Saturday night in Verdun to capture the Intercollegiate championship laurels, which they had relinquished last year to the same Blues. After beating McGill 5-3 on Friday night the hard-trying Blues just couldn't cope with the speedy Montrealers who came up with one of their best games of the season to cop the important game.

Both Varsity and U. of M. each have one game left with McGill, while Laval has finished its schedule. The Blues must win this Friday's final game if they hope to gain a tie with Laval for second place.

Friday night's game was actually a dull affair, played before a crowd of not more than 400. However, part of the last period and the overtime frame did provide some tense moments as both teams opened up in their style of play.

Centre Don Rope led the Blues with a fine three goal performance including an overtime clincher scored on an open McGill net. The Redmen were by no means a push-over and at times looked as if they intended to jar Blues' championship hopes right there and then. An early first period goal by Don Robertson gave the home towners a 1-0 lead which they held on to until the 30 second mark of the second period when Rope tied it after being given a perfect pass by a McGill defenceman.

Gene Robillard scored the first of two goals to again put the Redmen in front at the 2.02 mark. Defencemon Red Stephen put the Blues back on even terms near the end of the middle period when he made a length of the rink rush to circle the net and then slap in a pass from Rope.

Robillard and Rope each scored their second goal in the third period to send the game into overtime. At the 7.20 mark Captain Ernie Frey notched the winner when he pushed a low shot past MacLennan into the short side of the McGill net. Centre Jack MacKenzie set up the play with a pass-out to Frey from the corner. In the dying minutes of the game MacLennan was removed in favour of a sixth forward but the move backfired when Rope completed his hat trick.

Saturday night the Blues just didn't have it. When they did actually catch fire in the third period, it was too late, as time ran out on their belated drive. The Carabins scored once in each period, with the last one being the goal that really sank the Blues. It wasn't until half way through the last period that reliable Ernie Frey saved the Blues from a whitewash when he tipped in a long pass from MacKenzie.

Although the visitors pressed hard till the end of the game they just couldn't find the net. However, their downfall lay mostly in the first two periods when they were outplayed by the new champions and didn't manage to get more than seven or eight shots on the Montreal goal. It was a different story at the other end of the rink. The shifty Carabins poured the rubber at Jack Ross in the Toronto nets who was sensational in keeping the number of pucks to get past him down to three.

Rink Remarks: The team spirit was at an all time high Saturday night . . . the players really wanted to win that one . . . as it was they ended up with a round of handshakes to congratulate the new champions . . . the Montreal game was a fast and exciting one from the spectators' viewpoint . . . a rabid home town crowd of 2,000 whooped it up for their favourites. . . . Sandy Davison who played centre on the third line showed well especially against McGill . . . Jim Wilkes played right wing on the Rope line Friday night and Jack Wheldrake filled his regular spot on Saturday . . . Jack MacKenzie playing with a very sore knee, gave everything he had in two good performances . . . Al Conboy, the lightest man on the Blue team, provided the best bodycheck in Saturday's game . . . he send one of the Carabins flying with a Kazaza-special.

Athletics Elections On Today

There are thirteen nominations for the five spots open on the Athletic Directorate announced Hart House athletic department yesterday. The elections take place tonight at four o'clock and with the big field should provide a tight race. Voters are picked by the various teams and athletic associations.

The nominees are Murray Gaziuk III PHE, Douglas Gibson III UC, Howard Greenly III SPS, William Huycke III PHE, Bruce Miles II Knox, Donald Longmore III Meds, Donald Murmane II SMC, Fraser Mustard III Meds, John Prendergast I SPS, Donald Rope III SMC, Leon Smith III SPS, Peter Vernon II Meds, Geoffrey White III Vic.

The selection of candidates is very wide including all the sports. For example there's hockey (Rope), basketball (Huycke), track (Gaziuk), wrestling (Smith), swimming (Gibson), football (Miles), and boxing (Greenley).

All the major faculties except Trinity's Arts men are in the running. The candidates elected will make up five of the six students who are on the board. The other is the Students' Administrative Council representative.

Present members are Peter Vernon, John Evans, Don Longmore, Murray Gaziuk, and Doug Kettle. SAC rep is Paul Forrestell.

Mustangs 19-18 Over Wrestlers

Western, the intercollegiate wrestling champs shaded Toronto 19-18 at Hart House Saturday night. Despite the close score the match was very uneven. Toronto scored 10 of their points on defaults when opponents for Joe Goldenberg and Harry Robinson failed to show up. Five more points came on Hatashita's victory.

Al Gladstone, intermediate champion, moved up to replace senior champ Walt Pitman. He managed to outlast Bewell of Western to fill out the eighteen points.

Hatashita's victory came at two minutes of the first round. Hatashita took his man down landing him stomach up. He simply stayed on top until the fall which came about thirty seconds later.

Western's Malo scraped by Paul Phelan when he reversed with twenty seconds to go to take a 2-0 victory. The bout was very even with no time advantage being awarded.

Preston of Western pinned Bill Bush, Toronto replacement, at 1.40 of the second. The score was tied 4-4 when Western took the fall.

Terry Sumner of the Mustangs took a 13-2 decision over Glen McCormick intermediate replacement.

Leon Smith lost a 6-0 decision to Andry of the Mustangs. Larry Skitch lost his bout by a fall. He was called in from the spectators when Doug Hamilton failed to appear.

The whole affair was rather a dull anticlimax to last week's finals as none of the fighters except Al Gladstone seemed to have their hearts in the fight. The match had been postponed because of the King's death and this rather obviously cost wrestling fans a good match.

The Student Union . . .

. . . Grave or Foundation

Lest We Forget

If the most frustrated committee of the Students' Administrative Council was to be chosen we are sure that the Student Union Committee would stand high on the list of nominees. It has shown a propensity to sit about and brood in silence, but the only alternative — action — has seemed almost impossible this year.

For nigh unto forty years, there has been sporadic plumping for a coeducational student union. Indeed, as early as 1894, The Varsity printed an architect's drawing of a proposed student union. Three years ago, the Students' Administrative Council organized efforts by setting up a Memorial Student Union Committee.

Now, the long drawn out campaign begins to look like a game of chess between students and Administration with experience and continuity to the latter's advantage. It has been a series of hopes raised by students and subsequently dashed by the Administration.

Last year President Smith announced that the $599,000 of the Building Fund surplus (indirectly and unofficially earmarked for the Student Union) was rapidly being swallowed up by increased building costs. In short, no money for student union. This rallied students round the union cause with unprecedented enthusiasm.

The SAC cheerfully countered the Administration's check by inviting a student union expert to investigate the needs. And the Administration gracefully agreed to pay his costs.

Thereupon everyone sat about waiting to see what the Great Man, Edgar Whiting would propose. It was hardly a shock. He, too, was "firmly convinced that a building which will provide space for organized campus groups, accommodations for women only, and facilities for both men and women is badly needed." Amusingly enough, his suggestions corresponded roughly to those of the students themselves.

Fortunately for the Administration, spring examinations interceded, calling the intermission at a most propitious time for them. And the Lethe of the summer holidays followed.

This year's Committee quite simply asked the Administration for permission to hold a fund raising drive. Now, the Simcoe Hall refusal was hardly surprising; it simply indicated what many had suspected for some time. The Administration does not want to build a student union now—if ever.

Yet the Student Union Committee grasped at the straw of hope cast lightly from the upper windows of Simcoe Hall —further discussion. About all they can hope from this would be a distinct "no" — a tantalizing prospect. But from those well versed in the mellifluous verbalism of diplomacy, such is hardly a possibility. Much time has been wasted in an attempt to get a further "no". In fact, a whole year.

What now? According to the hierarchical organization of the University of Toronto, an Administrative veto marks an end to any student project — particularly those involving money. Perhaps such organization is not ideal but thus it remains. And unless the SAC wishes to encourage revolution on this barren ground, little hope remains for the student union—at present.

The Student Union Committee might better have spent its time this year investigating other possibilities, such as the Observatory. That unused monstrosity might provide facilities for various Council activities—one of the lesser goals of the original plan.

Or perhaps, the Administration might be persuaded to erect a plaque on one of the projected union sites. It would provide a fitting memento mori for those of the university who died in the Second World War, and for the Memorial Student union itself, which looks as if it had perished at an indeterminable date in the post war era.

University of Toronto

Dictatorship Rampant

The following article by Walter Bloch, IV Electrical Engineering, suggests that the accepted authoritarianism of this university helps to defeat the purpose and idea of the university itself.

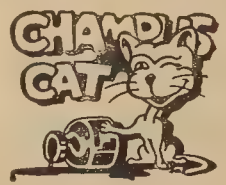
In a recent issue of The Varsity, Mr. Wintrob asks if and why students "spend their time arguing on purely abstract, vague generalities." As one of a number of reasons, he suggests that we are "overawed".

This suggestion warrants further elaboration, since it is doubtful whether the frequenters of this campus are in fact attending a University. Traditionally, a University is a group of students with the more advanced giving a helping hand to the beginners. Here in Toronto, this ideal has been debauched into a system of authoritarian instruction. The depths to which we have sunk are examplified by the fact that the "senior student" can declare with impunity, "As long as I am President of this University . . . there will be no athletic scholarships . . . there will be no alcohol on the campus . . ."

In the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering at least (and probably in other faculties too, though I am not competent to speak for them), the academic work consists exclusively of slavishly memorizing facts for unthinking recitation at examination time, and any opportunity the student might have for independent thought, is stringently curtailed by the demand of an excessive number of laboratory reports. When lecturers ignore the fundamentals of education and concentrate on how instead of why, is it surprising that when the student does manage to steal a few minutes for reflection, he concentrates on the fundamental why, even at the risk of being called a philosopher?

Surely the principle of energy transformation is more important than the mere fact that when electricity passes through a glass-enclosed wire under the right conditions, light and heat are given off. The logical result of this kindergarten attitude is the call for a five year course, since the present four years are cluttered with details—irrelevant details which would require no more than a passing mention if the students were given a thorough grounding in the physics of engineering.

If this urge to keep the student constantly occupied were limited to one faculty, there would be no problem. SPS would simply be recognized as a technical school, and removed from the campus. Unfortunately such action, far from solving the problem, would only remove one of its more blatant examples.



The complaint of innumerable assignments is prevalent in every course. Would it not be possible to keep the total of directed study to a minimum of twenty or so hours a week, and let the interested student do some unprescribed reading the rest of the time? The failure rate would probably climb under such a system. However, it is generally agreed that people who have to be forced to work have no business in a University in the first place, so why all this effort to keep them there? Surely the interests of the genuine student are more important. After the sixty hours a week of forced labour under the present system, even the most ardent is apt to become sick and tired of his chosen field of study. It is about time the University of Toronto started stimulating the thirst for knowledge, instead of doing its best to drown the thirsty.

The same clammy hand of totalitarian authority clamps down at all student initiative in the extra-curricular field. Two outstanding examples of this oppression are the Administration's attitude to the Student Union, and the recent and even high-handed curb on student activities, which, incidentally, deprived the student body of the opportunity of showing its respect for the late king by a spontaneous gesture.

Another bouquet for complete disregard of student opinion goes to the Athletic Directorate. This body not only assumes competency to dictate what the student shall wear (The Varsity, Feb. 27), but has the added impertinence to place itself beyond the authority of the Caput, for during the week of enforced mourning, its skating parties continued as if nothing had happened.

The so-called music from the University rink also disturbs the studies of hundreds of students living in the vicinity of the campus. Several complaints have been made, but the standard answer of the Directorate to such "crack-pots" is, "It's been going on for forty years, and if you don't like it, you can move." Presumably this answer has also been given for forty years—originality never has been a bureaucratic forte.

In the final analysis, the student body finances the Athletic Association, and when such an answer can be given repeatedly and with impunity by the hired help, it is not surprising that the student body is slowly leaving the field of concrete action, and turning instead to obstract thought. Here at least, no authoritarian control has been established as yet.

A group of Arts students from U. of T. faculties barely escaped arrest yesterday as they paraded down Jarvis Street in a mass demonstration. Although the students avoided committing a breach of civil law by calling out only 49 paraders, several other reputed to be Engineers swelled the ranks.

The demonstrators avoided arrest by filing along the sidewalks in orderly fashion. In fact, they were so orderly that they were completely inconspicuous. If this reporter had not been tipped off, the parade would have gone completely unnoticed.

The students carried signs protesting the fact that their course at the university was limited to three years. "Why should the professional faculties be allowed to waste four, five, six, seven, eight, or more years in a course while we are limited to three measly years?" said Simon Glup, III Mid - century Basket Weaving.

Glup led the parade carrying a sign which read: Why should the professional faculties be allowed to waste four, five, six, seven, eight, or more years in a course while we are limited to three measly years?

Murgatroyd Beasley, I Ceramics in Samoa, carried a sign reading "WHY?".

The several chaps said to be from the south end of the campus stopped frequently in front of Jarvis Street hotels holding signs reading: "WE WANT MORE".

The demonstrators printed 4,500 pamphlets. One was given to an elderly unshaven gentleman leaning against a fire hydrant, another to a young lady supported by a lamp-post. Only 4,498 pamphlets were not distributed.

The pamphlets called the attention of the public to the fact that their taxes are helping to support the students. "Is it justice that the specializing faculties are allowed to avoid employment for twice as long as those who are becoming broad-minded intellectuals? No. We don't like the idea of going to work any more than anyone else. LET'S HAVE EQUALITY", the pamphlets read.

The U. of T. Radio Commission made a tape recording of the proceedings which will be broadcast when the university is given a private radio station by the taxpayers.

Wellington Snillom.

Snap Decision?

Editor, The Varsity:

It has always fascinated me as to how the Student Administrative Council reaches its decisions. In fact, I have been spending most of my time lately trying to figure out just how the SAC appointed an editorial board, and for what reasons.

It seems to me that some important factors have been overlooked.

(1) The whole thing is unconstitutional. The SAC has neither the power to elect a Board of Editors-in-Chief nor a Board of "Three" who would elect an Editor-in-Chief by themselves. But Dr. McBirnie, chairman of the SAC, only answers that "things can be overlooked" and the constitution should not hem us in. Of what use is the constitution then? Throw it in the waste paper basket.

(2) The question, and it is an important question, of experience has been overlooked. The Constitution of the SAC suggests that applicants should have worked on The Varsity for three terms prior to application. I wonder how well the triumvirate fits the suggestion. I wonder how much thought has been given it by the Council. Mr. Montagnes, and to a lesser extent, Mr. Nelson have this qualification; they have spent a great deal of time on The Varsity and Canadian Press. Could it be that Mr. Montagnes has criticized the SAC a little too much this year and has therefore fallen out of favor with some of its members.

(3) Lastly, the consideration of the paper's staff has been, in my opinion, completely ignored. An editorial board was turned down by the staff 31-5. Remember the "editor" must work WITH a staff, and as I see it the staff favors Mr. Montagnes. The two just don't seem to agree. Perhaps the SAC feels it will have more control over the three Medsmen. The election "just don't look right".

W. Bobechko,
I Pre-Meds.

P.S.: My information has come from past Varsity issues.

THE "VARSITY" STORY

Special Edition

This issue of The Varsity is a special edition, published under the authority of the Students' Administrative Council, by the Publications Commission.

Miss Barbara Browne, Miss Elinor Strangways, and the members of The Varsity staff have requested that their names be in no manner connected with the production of this edition.

SMC Hears St. Laurent Speak on World Affairs

Prime Minister St. Laurent, guest speaker at St. Michael's College Centennial Arts Banquet, Sunday evening, proved himself to be both a master-tactician and a fearless speaker. His remarks were concerned with two of the most controversal subjects a Canadian Prime Minister could find to speak about. The first was Canadian Unity (and in particular, unity between French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians), and the secnod was Communism.

On Communism

His remarks on the latter, however, were very much to the point. He pointed out that Communism's strength lies very much in its "appeal to the natural human craving for social justice" and in the fact that Communism "remains a dynamic faith for its deluded followers." He warned the West that, while material preparation was essential for maintaining peace, spiritual preparation was the only kind that could win the peace. The Canadian government, he said, had acknowledged this primacy of the spirit when they showed their willingness to grant federal aid to those institutions whose aim was the intellectual and moral development of our citizens—the Canadian universities.

Canadian Unity

Speaking on Canadian unity, Mr. St. Laurent pointed to the remarkable similarity between the federation which is the University of Toronto, and the Canadian federation. Unity in both, he maintained, was based not upon structural foundation, but upon understanding and co-operation on the part of individuals. He traced the beginnings of true Canadian unity back to the Canadian parliament of 1848, which, though composed of a majority of English-speaking Canadians, had repealed the law which made English our only official language.

Other guests at the banquet were James Cardinal McGuigan, Premier Leslie Frost, Honourable Paul Martin, Mayor Alan Lamport, Dr. Sidney Smith, and the heads of the four Arts Colleges in the University.

Resignations Accepted In Stormy Session Of SAC

A special meeting of the Publications Commission, summoned within the twenty-four hour constitutional limit, was called by Commission chairman Douglas Sherk, IV SPS, following the Wednesday, March 5th edition of The Varsity.

Prior to the meeting the distribution of The Varsity to advertisers, subscribers and exchange universities was stopped.

The special meeting, which took place on March 6th, was attended by Publications Commission members, Bud Trivett, II Law, S. L. Wax, IV Meds, D. Sherk, IV SPS, Barb Browne, III U.C., Elinor Strangways, IV U.C., Carolyn Gratton, IV St. Michael's, Miss A. E. M. Parkes, and Mr. E. A. MacDonald.

(A letter was received from David R. K. Rose, President of the University College Literary and Athletic Society. However, after hearing a written request for retraction, read at the S.A.C. meeting on Wednesday, the Council voted to delete Mr. Rose's letter from the minutes.)

A second letter was received from four students in Engineering; George Hayman III, SAC Rep., Louis DeGroot Varsity Rep. of the Engineering Society, Doug Sherk, Pres., Engineering Society, and James Allan, Ist V.P. Eng. Soc., outlining their strong disapproval of the issue of March 5.

Readers are reminded that the complete text of minutes of all SAC and committee meetings may be inspected at any time at the Council Office, Hart House.

Mr. Forestell, speaking for St. Michael's men students, stated that they objected to The Varsity of the fifth, their reasons in general being the same as those outlined in the previous two letters, and that an emergency meeting had been called of the S.A.C. at St. Michael's College, and that a letter would be forthcoming from that meeting.

Law Club

Mr. Trivett said that the Law Club executive had expressed similar opinions to those contained in the letters. Mr. Wax said that the issue of Wednesday, the 5th of March, was a complete breach of contract between The Varsity and the Council, and he quoted from appendix C of the Constitution of the Students' Administrative Council:

"That the news and other reading matter in The Varsity is read by a great many people outside the University. It is closely scrutinized by all our city dailies and as a result of exchanges it reaches readers in practically all of the important Universities in the United States and Canada. Thus, both directly and indirectly, some at least of these articles are read by people all over this continent. The Editor should bear this in mind and, when preparing the headlines, news articles and editorials, he should take into consideration their effect on the outside reader, so that the reputation of the University may not suffer." (Bottom page 30, top page 31.)

He further stated that Wednesday's Varsity was one big editorial which ridiculed the President of the University and others.

Again the Constitution points out:

"That all vulgar, offensive or suggestive expressions should be carefully avoided.

"That anyone connected with the staff of The Varsity should take particular pains to make certain that all statements of facts are accurate, and that all reports of interviews give an accurate account of every statement attributed to the speakers." (Page 31.)

"By twisting quotations the President of the University had been put in an unfortunate position as the leader of the community," said Wax. He felt there was no need to carry personal attitudes and criticisms in news stories, and in his opinion the Editor has lost the confidence of the Students' Administrative Council. When The Varsity puts out special theme issues, the Publications Commission is usually informed of them.

Mr. Sherk said there was no desire on the part of the Commission to muzzle or censor the press but that there is a feeling of a lack of responsibility.

Miss Browne's Statement

Miss Browne made the following statement to the Publications Commission:

"The whole issue was undertaken in a spirit of good fun — the same sort of feeling which prompted the Manitoban issue and later, the 'Men's Page'. Now, a sense of humour varies from individual to individual and there is no infallible way of predicting the public response. But, of course, any humorist will have more than a general idea of what is funny and what is not. Judging by the general student reaction—as far as we could ascertain it—The Varsity humour issue was considered funny. We think that if there were any accurate way of determining student opinion, it would be in favour of such an issue."

With regard to this issue Miss Browne stated that the chief element to the success of the issue of March 5th was surprise, and hence it was not brought to the attention of the Commission. Miss Strangways pointed out to the Commission that a healthy symptom in any community is to sit back occasionally and take a good laugh at itself and that this was the intention of the paper.

The following motion was passed:

Trivett-Wax: That the publication of The Varsity be suspended until after the meeting of the S.A.C. to be held on Wednesday, March 12th, 1952.

This postponement of publication was in order that the Council could

Statement By Coput

The Caput of the University of Toronto at a meeting held on Saturday morning, March 15th, placed on record its satisfaction at the evidences of sound student self-government found in the action taken by the Students' Administrative Council in dealing with the general dissatisfaction with the humorous issue of The Varsity of March 5th. The Caput invited the President of the University to see the editors of that issue and to convey to them the unanimous opinion of that body that much of the material used was in shockingly bad taste. The co-operation of the editors was to be sought in devising ways and means of preventing a recurrence.

The Caput took no action which would in any way jeopardize the academic status of any of the students involved.

Signed, J. C. Evans, Editor.

At Centennial Dinner

—Globe and Mail Photo

Prime Minister St. Laurent is shown here after dinner at St. Michael's College which is celebrating its centenary. The Prime Minister in speaking to the students warned that arms were necessary to security but that a preventive war was unthinkable. Shown with the Prime Minister are Cardinal McGuigan, Very Rev. Louis J. Bondy, superior of St. Michael's, and Paul Forestell, president of the Students' Administrative Council.

SAC Highlights

In addition to its consideration of the report of the Publications Commission and of the Co-ordinating Committee in regard to a freshman orientation program, at its meeting on Wednesday, March 12th the Students' Administrative Council considered a number of other reports.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

In discussing the proposed constitution of the External Affairs Committee, objection was taken to the provision giving a vote to Faculty members and to representatives of certain organizations such as the Newman Club, Hillel, the Students' Christian Movement, etc., which are not confined to undergraduates.

Paul Forestell pointed out that such groups could not be held responsible to the Council. Charles Hanly of University College said that on the other hand these organizations and interested Faculty members have been of the greatest assistance to the Committee in all of its activities this year, and are prepared to accept further responsibility. They should therefore be given voting representation on the permanent Committee, which is essentially a working committee.

For financial reasons the wisdom of providing in the Constitution for the appointment of four delegates to the annual N.F.C.U.S. Conference was questioned and the matter was left for further consideration.

The vote on the proposed Constitution will be taken at the final meeting of the Council.

FINAL COMMISSION REPORTS

Final reports of the year's programme were received from Charles Hanly as Chairman of the U.T.D.U., Al Politi as Chairman of the All-Varsity Revue Committee and from Doug Waite as Chairman of the Radio Committee. Congratulations were offered to all three on the excellent work accomplished throughout the year.

Doug Sherk, Chairman of the Publications Commission, stated that no applications have as yet been received for the position of Editor of Torontonensis for next year and he urged Council members to make this known in their own constituencies.

NEW SYMPHONY CONDUCTOR

Upon the recommendation of Phyllis Graham as Chairman of the Music Committee, the Council appointed Bruce Snell, Music III, as Conductor of the University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra and Chorus and Pete Harcourt, Music II, as Assistant Conductor. Wally Gulka, Music II, was appointed Director of the Blue and White Band, with David Smith as the Assistant Conductor.

E.A.C. FOREIGN RELATIONS

The External Affairs Committee presented various amendments to the proposed Constitution which were tabled at the previous meeting. This Constitution provides that the E.A.C. now become a regularly constituted committee of the S.A.C.

The function of this committee would be to maintain and promote relations between the students of the University of Toronto and students of other universities, both in Canada and throughout the world; and to promote contact between foreign and Canadian students on this campus. The committee will be the local Advisory committee of N.F.C.U.S. and will represent World University Service (previously I.S.S.). It will report directly to the S.A.C.

It is proposed that the committee will draw its membership from representatives of the various student governments on the campus, along with representation from campus organizations which participate in national and international affairs. Volunteers may work on the sub-committees and be appointed from them to the general commitee. To insure continuity it is also recommended that four members be carried over from the previous year.

Bring Own Car Capitalists Only Inspect Brewery

The newly completed research and control laboratories of the Canadian Breweries Ltd., will be inspected by the members of the Biochemical and Biophysical Society at their 147th meeting on Thursday, March 20 at 8 p.m.

A paper on the application of the counter-current distribution technique and another on the formation of enzymes will also be presented at the meeting.

Members are being urged to arrange private transportation as "public transportation does not pass nearer the Breweries than King St. E. and Parliament St."

discuss this issue at the next meeting.

Council Meeting

The Students' Administrative Council met last Wednesday, and the first item of business was the report of the Publications Commission. This report was accepted by the Council. Mr. Sherk said that following the meeting of the Publications Commission, the Editor of The Varsity had tendered her resignation.

After Ralph Wintrob, CUP Editor had resigned, he sent the following telegram to all university newspapers:

TORONTO (CUP) SPECIAL TO SILHOUETTE, MAR. 6. VARSITY EDITOR AND MASTHEAD RESIGNED TODAY WHEN PUBLICATION BY C S COMMISSION OF STUDENTS COUNCIL SUSPENDED ALL FURTHER ISSUES PENDING CONSIDERATION BY FULL COUNCIL MEETING NEXT WEDNESDAY. COMMISSION FELT EDITORS SHOWED IRRESPONSIBILITY BY PUBLISHING HUMOUR ISSUE YESTERDAY WHICH INCLUDED NAMES OF MANY COUNCIL MEMBERS. MASTHEAD CONSIDERED THIS MOTION OF WANT OF CONFIDENCE AND RESIGNED. ISSUE RECEIVED FAVOURABLE COMMENT FROM MOST STUDENTS QUESTIONED. AS RESULT OF MOTION AT HAMILTON CUP CONFERENCE THAT ALL PAPER WILL BACK MEMBER PAPERS IN TROUBLE WITH ADMINISTRATION REQUEST YOUR SUPPORT FOR FREEDOM OF EDITOR AND RESPONSIBILITY TO CAMPUS.

Mr. Sherk pointed out that at no time was there any suggestion that the naming of Council members had affected the Publications Commission decision to postpone publications.

Mr. Peter Alley, representing Trinity, read a statement from his College. The following are quotations from the statement:

This is not a defence of The Varsity for its activities during the year, nor its latest issue. We have had what could be called a bad Varsity this year. It has criticized many things we feel should have been criticized and it has criticized many things we feel should not have been criticized; but what is important is that it has almost never criticized soundly or fairly, that is, by setting out the arguments of the case and then picking its side.

It has tended almost consistently to sensationalism, as though it were being run as a training ground for downtown journals and not as a campus news service. However, we feel that what is important in the present case is not vengeance for past offence, but justice. If it comes to a matter of offences, the S.A.C. has done pretty badly this year too. Let us not add another one.

If The Varsity has committed no crime, which we feel is the case, then it may have committed an error in taste. The penalty of such an error is reprimand, and its correction is advice. The essence of taste is that it cannot be legislated on but only pointed to, therefore there can be no punishment.

Where responsibility is given taste is demanded. If those given responsibility show through failure to take account of reprimand and advice that they have no taste, they may be relieved of their responsibility. But, in fairness they must have been reprimanded and advised at least once on the subject before they are relieved of responsibility. The Varsity has not been so warned. It is reprimand and advice, and this only, that the Publications Commission should have enacted.

A motion then followed (Alley, Hanly) "that the action of the Publications Commission in suspending The Varsity be revoked, this revocation to be taken as a vote of censure on this action; and that The Varsity staff be asked to produce a final issue on Friday." (Motion was subsequently defeated.)

Mr. Sherk again emphasized that the Publications Commission did not suspend the staff. He said that it disapproved of the material in the paper, and felt that most students would agree. Sherk further stated that Trinity's objection that the suspension was hurried is not valid. "If you suspend you have to suspend in a hurry, particularly if there is to be only one more issue," commented Sherk. He pointed out that there had been no expression of regret or admission of error by the Editor at the Publications Commission meeting.

Graeme Ferguson, Vic Rep., and Valinda Burruss, St. Hilda's, moved and seconded "That the clause involving censure of the Publications Commission be deleted." (Amendment was subsequently carried.)

Miss Browne said that the day previous to the Publications Commission meeting she had suggested that a word of explanation of the intention of the issue be printed in Friday's Varsity. However, by the day of the Commission's meeting things had moved very quickly, and this explanation did not seem to be acceptable, according to Miss Browne.

Mr. Trivett said that whatever Miss Browne might have said privately, there was no suggestion in the Publications Commission meeting of any offer to apologize or of an admission of error.

Constitutionality Questioned

Mr. Hanly read a statement, relative to the power of the Publications Commission, from the U.C. Lit. The statement contained reference to the constitution, Appendix B, Paragraphs 2, 4 and 6, concluding that:

"The Publications Commission of the S.A.C. is not empowered to suspend publication of The Varsity and therefore such suspension was unconstitutional and void."

The statement further recommended that:

"The S.A.C. Representative of University College Literary and Athletic Society demand that the S.A.C. rule that the action of the Publications Commission in suspending publication of The Varsity was unconstitutional, and therefore null and void, and that it censure the Publications Commission for this action."

Mr. Sherk stated that the Publications Commission felt that only the Council could make a decision in the matter, and he asked for support of the Commission's action.

Mr. Trivett pointed out that Mr. Hanly had not quoted all sections of the Constitution which affect the situation. "Appendix C, Section 3, states clearly that the Editor at all times has the right to bring be-

SPS Award

Paul Hutchison, IV Mech. Eng., has won the "Second Mile Engineer" award. This award is presented annually by the Class of 3T5 Engineering to the graduating student who has shown exceptional interest and given considerable energy to extra-curricular activities and has shown a reasonable interest in non-engineering academic pursuits.

Hutchison has been president of 5T2 during the last year and with his committee organized the Grad Ball. He has also been closely associated with Skule Nite for 4 years and this year produced the show. He is also well known in SAC circles when there is a particularly complex job to be done.

Toike Oike Appointments

Applications for the position of director of Publicity and Publications and Editor of the "Toike Oike" must be made today, said Jack Cooper, in-coming President of the Engineering Society.

Both of these appointments will be made at the annual joint executive meeting tonight. In former years Varsity rep. and Torontonensis rep. were also appointed by the Society Executive, but this year applications for these two positions shall be made directly to the Publication Director who will make his own appointments, subject to Engineering Society approval. Medsmen will not be considered eligible.

The Director of Pub. and Pub. and the Editor of "Toike Oike" will be the only appointed members of the Engineering Society Executive Committee next year. The Varsity Rep. and Torontonensis rep. will not be on the Executive of the Society.

"Varsity" Story

fore the Council any matter regarding his duties as Editor of The Varsity. The whole point of this section is to provide for an appeal by the Editor to the Council on any action taken by the Publications Commission," Trivett pointed out. He further stated that in forty-six pages the Constitution of the Council and its committees is set out, and that it was never intended to be a full outline of the exact function and method of procedure for every contingency which might arise. Said Trivett: "Decisions often have to be made which are not covered by the exact provisions of the Constitution."

Trinity Statement

Mr. Alley spoke against the amendment. He said that it does not matter now whether the action was unconstitutional. "The Publications Commission has to take action as it sees fit; if the action is wrong the Council revokes it. The Commission has to act on the spot, and revocation does not alter the original action." Alley thought that the Commission was right to take action, and to perceive that action was necessary, but he felt that it was the wrong action. For this reason he opposed the motion that "censure be deleted".

Mr. Wax, IV Meds, and Council President, pointed out that the Publications Commission does have the right to fix date of publication of The Varsity, stating that it is a matter of practice which has never been questioned before. He said that it was not the desire of the Commission to muzzle The Varsity but to give the council the privilege of deciding the action, if any, to be taken.

Forestry Stand

Don Bell, Forestry Rep, stated that such could be said about constitutional actions, adding that the Constitution is not too clear and that the Council could get into involved discussion. "The Council voiced its confidence in the Publications Commission when it was elected, and it should be commended for its action," said Bell. "The fact that the humour issue came out as the second last issue of the year meant that if the Publications Commission had not acted the final issue would have been out before the Council had a chance to discuss it." Bell therefore went on record as commending the action of the Publications Commission.

George Hayman, IV Engineering, read the following motions passed by the Engineering Society:

"That the Engineering Society is in accord with the letter to the Publications Commission sent by its President, Vice-President, 3rd year S.A.C. representative and Varsity representative."

"That the Engineering Society considered that the 'Humour Issue' was an intentionally irresponsible act on the part of the editorial staff of The Varsity."

Too Good An Idea

Miss Browne said that the question was a suspension of the issue entirely and not a question of dates. She had recognized the possible unwisdom of putting out the issue after last week's trouble about the editorial board, but she said that it was too good an idea to give up. However, she didn't think they were attacking anything; they were just having fun. By suspending the issue she thought that the Commission gave this matter undue publicity. The Globe and Mail picked up the story and the Star described the paper as a "Theme issue on Sex."

She thought it unwise for members of the Council to make comments to the papers since the minutes were confidential. She thought this is very harmful publicity for the outside world: The Varsity only gave outside publicity when they saw the story in the Star.

Anne Jane Carter, IV Meds, read the following letter from the Medical Society to the Publications Commission:

"The Medical Society, in a special meeting to-day, voted unanimously in favor of sending resolution to the Publications Committee:

"That The Varsity in its March 5 issue flagrantly violated its contract with the Students' Administrative Council in that it (a) brought personalities into the lines of its editorials, (b) used an excessive amount of salacious vulgar, offensive and suggestive expressions and that my quoting out of context it has placed prominent University personalities in a false, awkward and embarrassing position."

Mr. Trivett regretted the suggestion of Trinity of the attitude felt towards The Varsity in its news over the year. "This matter has no relation to the work over the year," he stated. "They have, at times, reported badly and erred in judgment but they have tried to do something all year and we should not in any way consider this question as a general censure or commendation of the year's activities. The question before us in the regard to a particular issue of The Varsity and certain items in it."

"The Varsity is sent out widely all over the country," Trivett added. "The Publications Commission did not call the Press. Someone gave the names of the Commission to the Press and they were asked for comment. The stories in the downtown papers were not in any way accurate."

The Law Club passed the following motion, presented by Trivett:

"That this body commends the Publications Commission of the S.A.C. for its action in suspending The Varsity for its alleged breach of contract. However, this body reaffirms its conviction that The Varsity should have the widest range of independence within the framework of its contract."

Trivett further said that the Law Club recommended that the resignation of the Editor should be accepted.

Graeme Ferguson, IV Vic., reported that the Victoria College Union recommended that the Council, while not approving the issue, should lift the suspension of The Varsity and ask the staff to publish the last issue. He pointed out that many students thought it was humorous, that it did overstep the bounds in some cases, but that in general it was good and that Vic feels the people who felt slighted are over-sensitive.

O.C.E. Comment

Stephen Gibson, O.C.E. Rep., said the O.C.E. Executive had met, and is in support of the Publications Commission's action in suspending The Varsity. O.C.E. felt that the issue was not particularly humorous, and that it was based on a philosophy of despair, and cynicism. They wondered if The Varsity was trying to discover how far it could go. "We are concerned with the possible consequences of this issue and its effect on the University," said Gibson. "It was not in keeping with the responsibility the staff should exercise, and cannot help but do harm. It certainly cannot be justified as a humorous issue."

Paul Forestell, IV St. Michael's, said that the St. Michael's S.A.C. commends the action of the Publications Commission and feels we should accept the resignation of the Editors. He voiced the opinion that the issue was objectionable because of the personalities involved, as exampled by the treatment of the President's Report regarding Remedial English. Forestell further deplored the emphasis on obscenity which the issue contained.

Linda Burruss, reported that Hilda's College had passed the following motion: "That this House recommends that the Council revoke the suspension of The Varsity and have the last issue published, but that the suspension of The Varsity by the Publications Commission be taken as a vote of censure of the issue of March 5th."

Charles Hanly read a statement from the U.C. Lit that

"any remarks (in the issue of March 5th) referring to particular persons or institutions are either obviously facetious, e.g. the references to the English Department of U.C. are of a type of "humorous" criticism which individuals in positions of responsibility and authority must and should expect, (e.g. the "Moscow Visit" story) and therefore the Varsity has not violated either the provisions quoted from the constitution of the S.A.C., or good taste, in these respects and that the charge of publishing articles dealing in an unsuitable manner with sex is grossly exaggerated; while certain articles in The Varsity do not completely avoid the use of "suggestive" expressions, and are in questionable taste, they are not sufficiently at fault to warrant definite action against The Varsity as a whole, or against any members of its staff. (This does not mean, however, that an expression of disapproval would not be justified.)

Therefore, this committee (of the U.C. Lit.) recommends that the S.A.C. representative of the U.C. Literary and Athletic Society demand that the S.A.C. initiate no action against The Varsity, or against any member or member of its staff."

Lawmen To Hear Author, Lecturer

Professor Edmund Cahn, author of "A Sense Of Injustice", will address the Law Club of the School of Law at their twenty second annual banquet next Monday night. Professor Cahn, whose book has been described by Jerome Frank as "the greatest discourse on justice since Aristotle" will speak to the Law Club on the topic of "The Inherent Radicalism of the Legal Profession".

A native of New Orleans and a graduate of Tulane University, Professor Cahn speaks from long experience both as a practicing lawyer and as a teacher of theory. He has long been an exponent of the value and necessity of Jurisprudence.

Law Club election results will be announced at the banquet and awards will be presented by the Dean, Dr. C. A. Wright.

Doug Sherk then read a letter of resignation from Barbara Browne, Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity.

Commission Commended

The following motion was made by Bud Trivett, seconded by Steve Gibson: "That the Council commend the Publications Commission for its action in suspending publication of The Varsity; that the resignation of the Editor be accepted; that the Council take no further action against the Editor." The motion carried 15-6, with Doug Sherk and George Hayman, Skule Reps., abstaining on the ground that the Editor should be dismissed.

Paul Forestell then moved, seconded by Syd Wax, that a number of The Varsity be put out and that the Publications Commission be empowered to make arrangements for this. Doug Sherk supported the motion but stated that the new editorial board should not be asked to take responsibility for the final issue, and that the council, through the Publications Commission, should do this.

Peter Alley and Bud Trivett then moved that the newspapers be given a statement of the motions as passed. This motion was also passed.

A further motion was made by Steve Gibson and Paul Forestell "that an official statement be placed in The Varsity by the Council, by way of explanation and comment on their action in supporting the motion of suspension of publication, and in accepting the resignation of the Editor, and that the Publications Commission draw up this information."

The Publications Commission feels that it should be pointed out that the Council and Publications Commission action was taken without regard to any Caput decision to meet on the matter. Absolutely no direction in this matter came from the President of the University to the Students' Administrative Council.

Debating Highlights

The popularity of debating appeared to be on the increase during the past year. This may have been partly due to the fact that the SAC allocated a much larger amount of money for this activity than had been the practice in previous years. With a thousand dollars in his wallet Charles Hanly was able to send three debating teams on tour.

Bob Shepherd and Ann McGinn went to the Chicago area, Dwight Fulford and John Morden visited universities in the Boston area, and John Medcof and Jim Gerome toured central Canadian universities. All of our emissaries brought honor to this university by achieving remarkable success in the competitions.

It is worth noting that debating in American universities contrasts with that in Canadian. We prefer the open parliamentary style where everyone may get a word in, to the more wooden and formal judged debate which the Americans favor.

An example of the former which provided the highlight of the year on this campus was the Brading Trophy competition.

A team representative of Scottish universities met the Toronto team of Neville Taylor and John Barton and defeated them amid the stimulating atmosphere of Strachan Hall which was filled to capacity for the occasion. The Brading Trophy itself was not yet ready for presentation, but a lithographed reproduction of it was on hand.

Some Trinity College pranksters were denied the delight of their practical joke when it was discovered before the debate that behind the curtains which shrouded the lithograph, a side of a Labatt's case had been tacked to the picture.

Hart House Debates

Hart House again had a full program of four debates. The late Professor Van Wyck of Medicine was the first of the honorary visitors. His optimism regarding the future progress of man, and his confidence that the university was fulfilling its role in society, were very refreshing in these days of cynicism and fear.

The Honorable Walter Harris, Minister of Immigration, followed the practice of several of his Cabinet colleagues by accepting an invitation from Hart House to debate. Unfortunately, it turned out that Canada's immigration policy was not sufficiently contentious to provide a couple of hours of interesting forensics.

The UC Mock P[illegible] where the tongue-in-cheek type of topic is ever [illegible] another successful year under the able direction of Albert Strauss. Though its sessions lack the dignity and finish of a Hart House debate, UC has contributed many able speakers to the former, and the radicalism which keynotes the Mock Parliament's proceedings is a healthy tendency on the campus.

Campus Debating

Campus debating too frequently suffers from a lack of thought in preparating of speeches. Since the topics are usually advertised well in advance, one would expect that undergraduates would look up some material in order to fortify their arguments. Unfortunately the arguments generally are very indigestible from a logical standpoint.

However in the final analysis debating is one of the most rewarding of extra-curricular activities for the individual. Public speaking ability is a valuable asset and continual practice is the sole means of attaining facility in it. This campus provides an abundance of forums for the development of an aptitude in public speaking.

Library Extension For Fall

Construction of the "new" University library will probably begin sometime this year. The plans are being drawn by the University architect at the present time. Barring any unforeseen circumstances the money which has been appropriated will be available for immediate spending.

A memorandum of the Library Committee of the University Senate indicated the present requirements of the library pointed towards a new building immediately to the north of the present building. Renovation of the present building by way of an addition was not considered feasible because of the length of time the operation would take.

The need for a new library is great when it is realized that the present building, intended to house 300,000 volumes, at present is housing over half a million books. Many unpacked volumes in storage will have to await the opening of the new building.

Since a part of the recent Federal Aid to Universities Grant at the University of Toronto is being allocated to the purchase of books —this is in addition to its normal allocation—the space problem is becoming a nightmare to the Chief Librarian, W. S. Wallace and his hard-working assistants.

Mr. Wallace explains that the new building will house the Humanities and Social Sciences while the present building will retain the Natural Sciences and Law. However, Dean C. A. Wright of the Law Faculty has expressed a desire for the Law Library to be housed in the Law Building when space requirement permit. Many of the Physical Science libraries are already contained in their respective buildings.

Although the plans are not yet available it is contemplated that the two buildings will be joined by a common catalogue room to avoid duplication. A new "time-saving" system for the use of undergraduates of reserved shelf books, giving them more freedom in the use of the stacks in contemplated.

CUP Holds 3 Contests

Canadian University Press is conducting three contests which are open to all undergraduates. Judges will be selected from three prominent newspaper men for each contest. Suitable prizes will be awarded.

Entries for the cartoon contest must be submitted before Easter. They should be sent to The Editor, The Acadia Athenaeum, Wolfeville, N. S.

There are two photo contests, one with a deadline the end of March and the second the end of April. These entries should go to Jean Noel Tremblay, Le Carabin, Laval University, Quebec.

Humorous Essay entries should be sent to The Editor, The Manitoban, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg.

NFCUS Flights Half Price

For the first time the National Federation of Canadian University Students is offering a cut-rate travel and tour service to Europe. The success and future survival of this service will depend on the use that is made of it this year. Booklets and application forms are available in the SAC office in Hart House. The booklet lists about twelve different tours, with details of air and ship passage.

Air travel will cost $355 return by deluxe BOAC Strato-cruiser, carrying 72 passengers. There will be eight flights between Montreal and London, the first leaving Montreal July third and the first return from London on Sept. first. Passage is available on two ships of the Holland-American line. Fares on these are $300 for dormitory, with 52 passengers in each, $320 for cabin accommodation with from three to ten in each. Preference will be given to applications of those taking tours. The first ship to Rotterdam leaves New York June 30th.

These tours have been arranged by NFCUS—the flights in conjunction with the British National Union of Students, the ships in conjunction with the Netherlands Office of Foreign Student Relations.

The flights have been cut to half the ordinary cost of flights on that airline. On the ships there will be an orientation program telling students what they should know about travel in Europe and explaining the political, economic and social conditions there. The program will be conducted by specially selected Canadian and American personnel.

ISS Arranges Opportunity In Europe Study

Numerous requests from German and Italian students for opportunities to spend a year in a Canadian university have been received. The ISS (WUS) announces that it has these on file.

The letters offer to supply room and board, and tuition fes, at a European University in exchange for the same arrangements provided in Canada by a Canadian student.

This provides an unparalleled opportunity for Canadian students to come into close contact with both the ordinary life and the intellectual atmosphere of contemporary Europe. There are no academic requirements except such as may be necessary to register as a student, since this type of exchange is a private arrangement, not a matter of competition.

There is no stipulation that you must know the language, indeed it provides an opportunity to do just that. Further information is available at the National Office of International Students' Service (World University Service) of Canada, 43 St. George St., Toronto, KI. 1978.

They Say "Varsity" Dead But Trinity "Saints Alive"

Tuesday will be the gala opening night of the Trinity College Production of an original musical comedy, "Saints Alive". Written by world-renowned team of MacMillan and Bryden, also authors of "Wot, No Crumpets?", the show was first produced in 1949 where it wrung praises from the reviewers.

Keith MacMillan, who has written the music for the nineteen original songs, is a graduate of Trinity from the year '49 and now an associate of the Department of Botany. Happily married with two small children, both of whom are studying the art of counterpoint, MacMillan is the son of the T.S.O.'s Sir Ernest.

Ron Bryden who wrote the book and the liberetto, graduated from Trinity in '50 and is making intensive research into the musical comedy possibilities of Browning, at King's College, Cambridge.

The producers have been fortunate enough to retain the services of all but one of the principals who starred so brightly in the original production. Harold MacDonald, a deacon in the Church of England and head of College at Trinity, plays the part of Mortimer Shortbread, eager, bumbling Editor of Quinquagesima's other magazine, the "Riot".

Don Belway, also a senior divine, plays the part of Daphnis Montmorency, the exquisity erudite editor of Quinquagesima "Review". Bob Walmsley plays Treebear, Shortbread's silent shadow. Among the ladies, Donna Haley, has returned from Osgoode Hall to play the part of Chloe McFiggen, the rooting tooting gal from Northern Ontario. Di Jacob, Shiela MacKenzie and Dosse Phillips have all returned from civilian life to play their original roles. Certain members of the chorus have also been unearthed from the 1949 production.

The musical background will be provided by the two-piano team of John Sedgwick and John Lawson. Sedgewick, who has also directed singing, is organist and choirmaster at one of Toronto's largest downtown churches. The business end of the production is being supervised by Trinity Convocation.

The sets depict the garden of that genteel college for respectable and cloistered young ladies, Saint Gilda's. They are readily indentified with a certain neo-Georgian building on Devonshire place. Roland de Cornelle is Stage Manager and the setting has been designed and executed by Janie Carson.

Publicity Manager Peter Giles tells us that ticket sales will take place all week at Hart House Advance Box Office and at the door. Saints Alive will play every night this week from Tuesday through Saturday in Hart House Theatre. "Dress is optional" Giles informs us.

A knowledge of Trinity customs and eccentricities is not at all necessary for thorough enjoyment of this original musical comedy, but the musical comedy might lead to a better understanding of Trinity.

SAC Hears Request For Humanity Group

More action by the students on the humanities question may be seen on the campus next year. At the last SAC meeting Steve Gibson, OCE rep., recommended that Council appoint a Humanities committee. He asked why at this time when the humanities have become such a live issue student opinion and interest should not be expressed in a more organized and concrete fashion than is the case.

He referred to the statements by the President and Chancellor to the effect that a University's standards in all faculties are determined by its performance in the humanities. Gibson's proposed Committee would bring special speakers to the campus.

Lacking Funds Engineers Ask Fees Increase

A proposed fee increase of four dollars was passed by the Engineering Society at a General Meeting of the Engineering Society on Tuesday, March 4th.

A fee increase of $3.00 was proposed by the Society Executive Committee after they reviewed the year's activities and decided that most Skule functions have suffered from serious lack of funds. Doug Sherk, the president of the Engineering Society said he thought one reason there had been a poorer turnout than usual at Skule functions was that there had not been sufficient funds to make these functions as attractive to students as in former years.

Second Vice-President Jack Cooper said that considering rapid rising costs a small increase in general Engineering Society fees would ensure lower prices in the Engineering Society Stores next year rather than higher ones. The saving to each student would probably be almost as great as the increase in fees.

Approval of the students for an increase of one dollar in the Athletic Association fee was asked by Bob Beattie, A.A. president.

The combined Engineering Society and Athletic Association fee increase was approved by a large majority of the members present at the General Meeting. This was the first general meeting this year at which a quorum was present.

SHORTHAND FOR THE UNIVERSITY STUDENT

No matter what your plans may be, shorthand and typewriting can help you. Perhaps the only barrier to that position you would so much like to have is the lack of ability to write shorthand. Your high academic training is an advantage but personnel managers welcome shorthand skill as well.

RUSSELL SHORTHAND in ten lessons to shorthand theory is the answer to your problem. The course is inexpensive and we can work out the time element with you in day, half-day, evening or Saturday morning sessions. We have hundreds of successes and invite your inspection of our many testimonials.

"Stripped of undue complexities and based completely on sound as it is, Russell Shorthand has proved to me to be a highly satisfactory and easily assimilated system."—from a Toronto University graduate.

"Am now in.....secretary to the sales manager, and French translation. A lucky break and praise be for your Russell Shorthand."—from a McMaster University graduate.

"By a preliminary glance through the Russell manual, one notes that the memory burden has been reduced to a minimum. Also, the basic strokes are always written with the same hand-motion."—D. S. Forester, M.A., M.D., C.M. McGill University.

"Well, son, there are lots of markets for nickel these days. So many uses have been developed for it by Inco that they are producing over 250 million pounds a year.

"More than 90 per cent of it is sold to the United States and other countries. Right now a lot of it is going into equipment for our defense."

"We must get a lot of money for the nickel we export?"

Symphony Orchestra

The concert given by the University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra and Chorus on Sun., Mar. 16, was very creditable. However, only a handful of people attended, perhaps because of poor publicity.

The performance of Purcell's "Ballet Suite from Comus" was one of extreme clarity. On the whole the intonation was good, as was the blend.

Jim Guthro's "Symphonic Movement" was a sharp contrast to the Purcell. This work displays the composer's clever use of orchestral colour. Rather odd string-writing plus poor intonation in the lower strings unfortunately spoiled some parts of the work.

The "Roumanian Folk Dances" by Bartok were quite accurately played, displaying effective woodwind passages. The tempos could possibly have been slightly moderated.

The major work on the program was the Faure "Requiem". This is one of the most beautiful works of its kind, and Mr. Girard and the University of Toronto Chorus is to be commended on attempting such a composition with a limited number of voices. A larger group is necessary and more female voices would have given more life to the chorus. Several times the chorus was drowned out, but for the most part the organ and orchestra kept well under the voices. Margo MacKinnon and T. L. Roy did an excellent job as soloists.

It is regrettable that organizations with the fine reputations of the U. of T. Symphony and Chorus are not more actively supported by the students. Are there not more musicians in the University to fill out the almost pitifully small orchestra? And there must be more than thirty students out of the eleven attending the University who can sing well enough to keep the prestige already claimed by the chorus. There is no reason why two hundred voices could not have sung the "Requiem" performed on Sunday—and the concert certainly would have sounded much better.

Bill Bartlett.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE
JOINT MEETING
THURSDAY, MARCH 27
WYMILWOOD, 5:00 P.M.

Old and new E.A.C. reps. are requested to attend and anybody interested in working on E.A.C. next year is invited.

Co-ordinating Committee

At a meeting of the Co-ordinating committee called by chairman C. M. Hanly, U.C., it was decided that a program of university-wide freshman orientation be recommended to the S.A.C.; organization, entertainment and financial responsibility of these programs to be shared proportionally by the participating groups and the S.A.C.

It was pointed out that this year's parties were mainly social activities and that although smaller faculties benefit greatly from them, something of a more cultural nature would be advisable if the committee is to carry out its function of cutting down extra-curricular activities. Could the S.A.C. provide a program that would be meaningful for 11,000 students from all parts of the campus?

A plan of freshman tours of the university starting the second week of school was the solution brought forward by Bud Trivett (II Law). These groups, consisting of not more than 20 freshmen, are to be recruited from all colleges and faculties, and the colleges would supply leaders for the expeditions and take charge of refreshments afterwards when the freshmen return to 'talk it over'.

The suggestion followed that these plans be continued during the year by a series of reciprocal invitations for social, cultural and intellectual activities via the S.A.C. representatives from each college and faculty concerned. A further motion recommended that a Freshman Orientation committee be set up, chaired by the S.A.C. chairman of the Co-ordinating committee and consisting of one representative from each of the colleges and faculties on the campus. The first meeting of this committee would be early in April.

Before adjournment of this meeting, Hanly pointed out the fallacy in the present Co-ordinating Committee; that it had been set up as a co-ordinator, not as a board of arbitration. "All-university activities often conflict with college activities," said Hanly, "and any co-ordinating is meaningless unless the committee is made up of people who are interested and who have the authority to commit their individual colleges."

U.N. CLUB

The United Nations Club will hold its final meeting of the year on Thursday, March 20. Rm. 5, Trinity College is the location for the nominations and elections which will launch this new club into its second year of activity. Paid members only are allowed a vote, said Penny Ketchum, club secretary.

Organized in the fall by students interested in the study of world problems as faced in the United Nations the club carried on an active program throughout the year. This was highlighted by the holding of two Model Security Council meetings in which student delegations represented various countries. The two issues brought before the Council were: The question of admitting the People's Government of China to the United Nations, a resolution that the British Government evacuate the Suez Canal Zone.

Roland Corneille, president of the club said that the aim of next year's program would be to secure a sufficiently large membership to hold a Model General Assembly Meeting. Corneille emphasized the value to be derived by students viewing world problems from the point of view of another country.

Sitting Position Vacant

No one as yet, has applied for the editor-in-chief's position on Torontonensis 1953. The members of this year's editorial staff are for the most part, in the graduating year so that no one on the present staff is in a position to take over the editorship next year. This is the second consecutive year that such a situation has arisen as the current editor, Walt Mackenzie, is a former Varsity staffman with no previous editorial experience on Torontonensis.

The basic reason for this, in Mackenzie's opinion, is the present method by which faculty reps are chosen for Torontonensis. Practically without exception, these reps are selected from the graduating class without thought of their interest in producing a good yearbook, with the result that very few of them contribute anything towards the editorial work in making up the book. Those who do show a genuine interest have little experience and so must spend much of their time in learning the job. This they do, and well, but then they graduate and this experience is lost for future editions.

If the reps were chosen from the junior years and had either interest or past experience in yearbook publication, there would be a large interested staff from which to pick editorial assistants, a trained staff to carry on into the future years, a rich pool of future editors and a general increase in interest in all years of the student body.

In addition to the editor, a sales and publicity manager is needed now. A far more successful sales campaign could be carried out if it was initiated in October rather than in December and January. An Shades of the Football Season!

Steve Oneschuk (91), leading ground gainer for the Blues this fall, pickes up a few yards to add to his total against the McGill Redmen in the last league game of the season in Varsity Stadium. The Blues won the game and dashed all McGill hopes of forcing a playoff against the league-leading Blues.

Football Crown Season's Highlight

A picture of Steve Oneschuk fending off tackles is probably the surest way to bring back memories of a bright year in Sports for the University of Toronto, at least as far as the spectator element at Varsity is concerned. The capture of the Yates Cup this fall by the Blues was undoubtedly the brightest spot in the year's activities.

The thrilling defeat of the Mustangs at Varsity Stadium and the upset of the McGill Redmen who journeyed to dear old Hogtown confident that they would be able to force a playoff, made for a football season that will long be remembered in these parts.

But the football team was not the only one to bring home the bacon, in fact, it was only one of sixteen separate Blue aggregations that earned an Intercollegiate title this season. Practically every Intermediate title in the book will rest on Varsity shoulders until the battle starts again next year.

Whether or not a big championship early in the year boosts hopes a little too high or not is hard to say, but many of us looked with greedy eyes towards the basketball title as well, and must admit to a little disappointment that the hoopsters fell somewhat short of their mark.

Winning ten games out of twenty-three, the basketball Blues knocked over some tough opponents on a long schedule, but couldn't beat the Mustang jinx that the Blue team on the football field had found the solution for last fall. The highest score that the hoopsters racked up all year in their favour was a 71-54 decision against the Redmen in Montreal, in a scheduled league fixture, while their opponents across the border, Rochester U. and Detroit Tech., humbled the Blues 90-45 and 90-59 respectively earlier in the season.

Ray Monnot and Lu Lukenda proved to be the chief threats that the Blues had to offer through the year, although they would have had a little competition for top honors had Bud Natanson not been forced to give up the game early in the season. Lukenda sank 86 field goals and 63 foul shots in the 23 games for a total of 235 points and an average of 10.2 per game. He was also the bad man of the crew with 75 fouls against him.

On the whole, the Redmen were the second in line as far as the number of titles won are concerned. They won six championships, with Senior Track and Squash being the most important of the lot. University of Western Ontario can boast of the basketball title once again and the Senior Wrestling crown to boot. Queen's also has two, with the skiing and boxing titles to its name. McMaster with sailing and the University of Montreal Carabins with the Senior hockey title complete the list.

Announce New Directorate; Gaziuk Again

The 1952-53 student members of the Athletic Directorate have been elected. The new slate will be made up of Murray Gaziuk, PHE; Doug Gibson, Meds; Bill Huycke, PHE; Fraser Mustard, Meds; Geoffry White, Victoria. Gaziuk is the only member returning from last year's directorate.

Besides these, there is one other student member, to be elected by the Students' Administrative Council. Permanent members are Warren Stevens, Athletic Director, J. P. Loosemore, Secretary, and three staff members.

Boxing Round Up

This year's boxing season, though it did not culminate with Varsity winning the intercollegate championship, was a fairly successful season by most standards. The turnout for the novice interfaculty tournament was good, and some excellent prospects were discovered by the boxing coach, Tony Canzano. The biggest find of the year was 135 pounder Russ Reilly from St. Mike's.

The Intercollegiate team acquired some valuable experience in the exhibition bouts against the West Point team. Though the cadets won every bout, the Varsity boxers gained enough boxing know-how to justify the trip and make it desirable to repeat the West Point engagement next year.

Bad luck and untimely injuries did not help the Blues' cause. Norm Green, the seasoned 165 pound veteran, and Roy Stevenson, a hot frosh prospect in the heavyweight class, both potential Intercollegiate champions, were prevented from competing, by injuries.

Unfortunately, many of the experienced fighters are in their graduating year, but good men like Pete Petcoff, Howie Greenly, Russ Reilly, Taimo Pallandi and Larry Wade, will be back next year to bolster the team. Veterans Nick Betz, Roberto Couceiro and Norm Green wil be sorely missed by coach Canzano.

REED TROPHY

With only the points for the Senior Intramural basketball finals remaining to be tabulated, the Athletic office has announced the final standings in the Reed Trophy race. University College is in top spot with 11,246 points and Trinity in undisputed possession of the second spot with 10,477.

While Meds now occupy the third slot, St. Mike's could take over from them by copping 300 points that they would get on winning the Senior Intramural basketball crown. The Mikemen are already assured of the Minor League crown as two teams from that college are in the finals.

The winners, University College, only picked up three titles during the year, soccer, track and wrestling, but managed to get most of their points from teams participating and from getting into the playoff positions in a number of leagues. Trinity, on the other hand, hasn't got a single title to boast of and yet managed to cop a second place. The race for second and third spots was one of the closest in years, and will not be definitely decided until the final whistle for the ear blows on the basketball court. SPS and Meds will have eight nd seven trophies respectively to it on their shelves for the next ear. Probably the most interesting feature of the Reed Trophy race his year is how the point system makes so little depend on who gets he championship in any particular league and attempts to encourage participation to the utmost.

The Intramural Athletic Association has been working for a couple f years on a revision of the constitutional that may go into effect ext year and would see the faculies in the lower groups separated from those in the larger colleges ompletely. The Association feels hat the smaller faculties should not be expected to compete against the larger ones for the league championship in each sport, and that the present system penalizes them no matter how much the point system is weighted in their advantage.

TEAM PICTURES

Inter-Collegiate Pictures will be ready in three weeks time. Athletic colours are available in the atheltic office.

Upset St. Mike's 47-30 Tile Sets Pace With 25

Bounding back from their first game 47-30 loss, the Pre-Meds team upset the favoured St. Mike's team 58-49 to force a third game in the senior intramural finals. Despite the fact that it was St. Patrick's day the boys didn't have the stuff to contend with the doctor's comeback.

The game was very close throughout the first half with St. Mike's up four points at the break. The Pre-Meds team took over the four-point lead in the second quarter leaving the half-time score 26-22.

Sparked by Ernie Tile, who scored 23 points, Pre-Meds got better and better as the game went on and they led by as much as 15 points in the third quarter. They were still up 14 points at the quarter's end.

St. Michael's College did their best to fight their way into the game during the last quarter but they couldn't keep up to the future doctors. McNeil and Tile of Meds fouled out during the last period as did Glynn of St. Mike's. This helped the Irish to close the gap to nine points but they couldn't get any closer.

Iwanicki, Warne and O'Connor were the big line for SMC hooping 13, 12 and 11 points respectively. Magder and McNeil with 13 and 10 were the big guns for the winners backing up Tile's top effort.

The first game of the series was another one-sided affair when St Mike's piled up points in the second half to win by a 47-30 margin. The winners were only up 18-16 at the end of the first half but they walked over the foul and injury ridden Pre-Meds team in the closing stages of the game.

The third game in the series for the Sifton Cup will take place Wednesday noon. The finals are a two out of three ser. and the Hart House Athletic wing is opened to the girls for the occasion.

The Meds team seems to be a better balanced outfit than the Irish as they used all but two of their players during the game. The St. Mike's scoring was confined to the starting five players.

McNeil of the Docs, who suffered an ankle injury in the first game, returned to form and played most of the second game. Referees Jim Bell and Olie Mandryk who have handled most of the playoff games will also handle the final games on Wednesday.

Living Costs Outstrip Fee Rise

"Students at the University are now paying a smaller percentage of the cost of their education than in any of the first five post war years" said Bud Trivett at last week's S.A.C. meeting.

Trivett was reporting the results of a three month long investigation into the recent fee rise which raised student fees 10 to 20 percent. The committee's report further disclosed that there is now a full 45 point spread between the cost of living index and the cost of fees calculated on the same base of 1939 equals 100.

One-twelfth of the student enrollment is receiving bursaries totalling approximately $150,000, the committee report stated. In addition, there are many bursaries not administered by the university. Scholarships were not taken into consideration in arriving at this sum.

On the basis of a questionnaire which was prepared and circulated by the committee it was "assumed that all students in need of financial assistance have been taken care of by bursary or loan funds available," Trivett reported. He also stated that none of these funds had been completely used up so far this year.

The committee recommended that wider publicity of available assistance be given to high school graduating classes.

St. Mike's Choir Gives Concert For Centenary

A varied program of choral works was presented by the St. Michael's College Choral Society at a Centennial Concert on Wednesday, March 5th, under the capable direction of Rev. F. M. Rever.

Three classical religious works opened the program; "Ave Maria" by Vittorio, "How Beautiful Are the Feet of Him", from Handel's Messiah and "The Omnipotence" by Schubert. These extremely demanding numbers require precision, power and deep feeling and all three seemed to be lacking in this group. Entrances in the contrapuntal passages were ragged and the choir seemed unsure of itself. Mary McNeil was uncertain in the beautiful solo passages of "The Omnipotence".

The second group of songs began with "The Spinning Chorus" from Wagner's "Flying Dutchman", sung with a good, steady rhythmical movement by the women's chorus. But the choir, at last appearing to relax, sustained a rich pianissimo with such feeling in "You'll Never Walk Alone" from Richard Rodgers' "Carousel".

Excellently performed, the third group comprised six folk songs of different nations — the Negro spiritual "Deep River", the French-Canadian song "Dans Tous les Cantons", which was particularly effective, the old English "Greensleeves", with a baritone solo by Danny McCarthy, a very difficult arrangement of the Spanish "Malaguena" by Leucona, the old Irish "Bendemeeres Stream" and the gay "Russian Picnic" in which Stephen Sommerville sang the solo.

The final group of songs, in a modern vein, opened with "Deep Purple" by Peter de Rose. In "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp" from Victor Herbert's "Naughty Marietta" the choir and the soloist, McCarthy, showed a nice tonal quality and were vigorous but not boisterous.

Bill Bartlett on the double bass violin and pianist James McManamy accompanied the choir. McManamy also played during an interlude two movements of the Sonata Op. 31 No. 3 of Beethoven smoothly and faultlessly, but they might have been heightened by more feeling. Jane Timmins at the piano played Etude Op. 25 No. 1 of Chopin and "La Campanella" with precision and brilliance.

Director Rev. Frederick Rever is to be highly commended. His fine sense of rhythm and feeling, of the tonal quality and the shading was evident at all times. In a very difficult business of developing a high class choral concert, while far from perfect, the progress in two years indicates that if his capable direction continues a most successful choral society will emerge from St. Michael's College.

Editor, The Varsity:

With examinations on the horizon, and with an increase in library activity, one can not help but note the passing of another school year. And with this school year there has passed into history the ALL-VARSITY REVUE of 1952, which brings me to the purpose of this letter.

I would like to thank publicly all the students who helped me in putting over this year's Revue, in spite of the many difficulties that had to be overcome along the way.

First and foremost, I would like to mention the names of those who worked in a producing and directing capacity; Bruce Snell, Bud Priestman, Don Martin, Herb Wedderburn, Ben Wise and Bill Friedman. In the technical end there were Mike Thompson, John Soulsby, Joe Wise and the set designer, Dave Powrie. The difficult assignments of make-up and costumes were handled by Bryen Hutchins, Beth Murgatroyd and Hugh Feldon-Briggs.

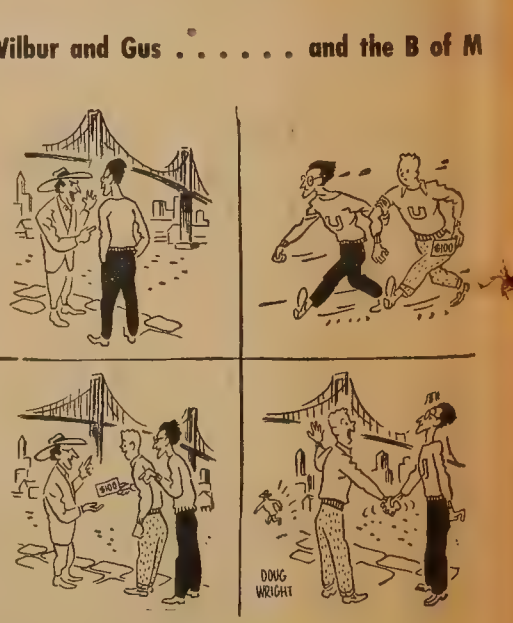
On the business end of the production I would like to mention Cliff Tyndall, Sandy Phillips, and John Corkill who put in many unseen hours, and also Terry Lawson and Phelps Bell for last-minute assistance.

Lastly, and most important the performers, those who are the "All-Varsity Revue". Since it is impossible to mention everyone by name, I shall give the names of a cross section, so to speak, of the various parts of the show.

In skits: Bobby Jackson, famous now as the "professor", Syd Weingarten and John Carson, Paul Rouleau and Bernie Waltman in the Wayne and Shuster epic, Dave Montgomery and Helen Halman in their entr'actes — and yet — many others.

In songs — Ray Davidson and Noreen Norris, Patsy McDonough and Joy Nesbitt, and all the kids in the chorus. Among the dancers Arline Patterson, Babs Christie and Sheila Donnie, and many others — to all of these I would like to extend my sincere thanks for their great effort and wonderful co-operation.

Next year should be even better—who knows, even Meds might decide to contribute.



James Guthro, O.C.E.,
Prod.-Director of A.V.R. 1952.
